I have just returned from an island where I have been to see some children and their parents, and they were so kind to me. They were so happy I came to their school. One little girl came every evening and every morning to carry my slippers for me. You know we have to take off our shoes in Japan when we get to the door of any of the houses, for all have soft mats on their floors; and our shoes with heels on them would soon spoil their nice mats. This little girl, with three or four others, came to my room and brought me four large oranges. I wrote the Lord's Prayer for them to learn while I was away.

In several places in the country we have gone to the houses of entire strangers, and have found they had boys in America at school; and Christians, too. They have heard from their sons that Christian people in America have been very kind to them; and so they treat us kindly, and give us the very best they have in their homes. I feel sure that you will take an interest in these people; that you will pray for them and help send them the blessed gospel of our dear Savior. Pray for us, and let us hear from you. I am,

Your friend and brother,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

MARCH 28, 1887.

Mr. Editor: It has been some time since I wrote to the dear old ADVOCATE. I thought I would write again. Papa has been taking it ever since I can remember. I will answer J. B. Gillis' questions: There are thirty-nine books in the Old Testament, and 929 chapters, 23,214 verses, 592,439 words. In the New Testament there are twenty-seven books, 260 chapters, 7,959 verses, 181,253 words. I will not ask any questions this time. Your little friend,

HETTIE CARRUTH.

Mr. Editor: I thank you for publishing my last letter. My question about the elder and younger sons of Noah has not been answered correctly. The Bible tells. Let the little writers find the places, and tell us.

Yours truly,

MIRA COOK.

Mr. Editor: As I have not written to your very valuable paper in some time, I hope you will allow me space for a short missive. I am pleased to say the dear CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE visits our home weekly, and is a welcome visitor. Rev. J. A. B. Jones is our presiding elder, and Rev. J. N. Roberts is the preacher in charge. We all love them ever so much, and hope the Bishop will be so kind as to send them back to preach for us another year. I attended the District Conference in Centreville, and enjoyed the good preaching very much. Our editor was there, and I was so sorry he had to leave. The little cousins do not know what a great big editor we have got, if they have never seen him. Enba Marshall, "money" is found in Genesis xxviii, 9. Now, I will ask the cousins a question: Which one of the kings of Israel did the most to provoke the Lord to anger? We have a nice Sabbath-school at our church. I expect to start to day-school soon. Please forgive me for being so lengthy.

Your little friend,

SALLIE NEYLAND.

CENTREVILLE, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: I am a little girl ten years old. I live eight miles in the country, and am now visiting my grandmamma, who lives in Vaiden. I have four sisters, and have but one pet: that is a little chicken. I think it is remarkably smart for its age, being only a week old. I will try to answer Jennie Newell's question: "Chicken" is found in Matthew xxiii, 37. I will close by asking the little folks a question: Who was fighting the Philistines when the earth quaked and there was a great trembling in the host?

Your little friend,

ELMA E. CAIN.

VAIDEN, Mississippi.

Moxie! Moxie! Moxie!

The new and popular remedy for nervousness and debility. It is not a patent medicine, but a delicious invigorant that will give you solid, durable strength. 50 cents a quart bottle.

Mr. Editor: I am a girl ten years old. I have a little sister and three brothers. I love to go to Sunday-school. I do not go to school. Mamma takes your good paper. I will ask some questions: Where is the word "grandmother" found in the Bible? Who made iron swim? I will answer Willie Hatfield's questions: Eli fell off a bench backwards and broke his neck. He was ninety-eight years old. I love to read the children's letters. As this is my first letter, I will close with many kind wishes to the paper.

ANNIE FAISON.

FAISONIA, Mississippi.

He, J. H. McLEAN'S Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier, by its vitalizing properties, will brighten pale cheeks, and transform a pale, haggard, dissatisfied woman into one of sparkling health, and beauty. $1 00 per bottle.

Mr. Editor: I am a little girl twelve years old. Grandpa takes your valuable paper. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. Rev. G. F. Thompson is our pastor. We like him very much. As this is my first letter, I will not make it too long for fear of the waste-basket. I will close by asking the little cousins a question: Where is the word "cistern" found in the Bible?

Your friend,

STELLA HARKNESS.

BELDING, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: I am a little girl of nine years. I like to read the letters. My mother takes your paper. I am going to ask the little girls a question: Who invented ice-cream? So I will close, hoping to see my letter in print next week. I remain,

Your friend,

LAURA EGAN.

COPPERHATTA, Louisiana.

Story of a Dying Little Girl.—A widower sent for me to come and see his dying child. "Sweet darling," I said, "do you want me to talk to you?" "Yes," she said, "of heaven." While I was with her the doctors came, and her father said they wanted to burn her throat again, to cauterize it. Little Annie whispered to her father, "No, papa, I don't want to be disturbed, for mother is waiting for me in heaven." The father said, "Don't you want to stay with me, darling?" "Well," she said, "let them burn my throat, but it won't do any good." The doctors could not save her. Some of her little Sunday-school friends came to the bedside, and softly, sweetly sung, "Shall we gather at the river;" and little Annie looked into her father's eyes, and said, "Promise, papa, to meet mother and me in heaven," and died. She looked like a little angel chiseled out of marble.—Sam Jones.

Farm and Home.

Evening at Home.—Spend your evenings at home with the family whenever you can. Make home the brightest spot for the children. Have music, books, papers, appropriate games, cheerful rooms, good lights. But remember that the most necessary thing is a cheerful temper. You can get along without most of the other things, but not without the sunny spirit. Help each other. Don't always insist on doing the thing you like best, but do what others may like best.

Reading aloud is one of the resources which never tires, if the readings are wisely selected and read with a moderate amount of skill.

While parents should bear their part in the entertainment, the little people may do something. A little girl of eleven, whose father was kept at home by illness for a few days, said: "We mean to make it so pleasant for papa that when he gets well he will stay at home with us as often as he can."

Simplicity in Dress.—Krummacher illustrates simplicity in dress by a little fable:

"The angel who takes care of the flowers and sprinkles upon them the dew in the still night, slumbered on a spring day in the shade of a rose bush. When he awoke, he said:

"'Most beautiful of my children, I thank thee for thy refreshing odor and cooling shade. Could you now ask any favor, how willingly would I grant it!'

"'Adorn me, then, with a new charm,' said the spirit of the rose bush in a beseeching tone.

"So the angel adorned the loveliest of flowers with simple moss. Sweetly it stood there, in its modest attire, the moss rose, the most beautiful of its kind."

So the costliest ornaments are often the simplest. There is no gold, nor jewel, nor sparkling pearl equal to the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.

Borrowing.—It was said concerning a certain man, now deceased, that he had successfully carried on a farm of one hundred acres and had not a plough or harrow fit to use, but depended on borrowing. As may reasonably be expected, the neighbors were wearied with lending him their tools. And he was neither poor nor lazy, only penurious; though he considered it economical! But it was poor economy, if lost time going and coming be considered, to say nothing of the vexation of the neighbors. And while this applies to the larger implements, it is equally true of the saws, axes, hammers, etc. Borrowing, as a rule, is unprofitable to both borrower and lender.

A Good Rule.—It is said to be military rule never to rebuke an officer in the presence of the men. It is a good household rule that one parent shall never dispute the authority, question the word, or even, if it be possible, differ on any subject of discipline of the young in their presence. If military order demands the one, we should say that good home rule does the other.—Southern Churchman.

Stewed Potatoes for Breakfast.—Cut cold boiled potatoes about the size of a walnut; put them in a spider with about a pint of milk; add salt and considerable pepper, and dredge over them flour, and let them boil slowly until the milk looks thick. Put them into a warm vegetable-dish, and add a good-sized piece of butter. Serve hot.

Real glory springs from the silent conquest of ourselves.

The Reason Wh

Ayer's Pills are so popular because, while always reliable as a cathartic medicine, they never leave any bad effects. This is because they are purely vegetable, and entirely free from calomel or any other dangerous drug. In all cases, therefore, whether the patient be old or young, they may be safely and confidently administered.

In the Southern and Western States, where derangements of the liver are so general, Ayer's Pills have proved an inestimable blessing. D. W. Barber, of Berne, N. C., writes:

"I suffered a long time with constipation and liver troubles. I tried various remedies, but received no benefit. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. These pills benefited me at once. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored."

Throughout New England, for lung diseases, Stomach and Bowel Complaints are the most prevalent and Constipation are almost universal. Mr. Gallacher, a practical chemist, of Roxbury, Mass., who was long troubled with Dyspepsia, writes:

"A friend induced me to try Ayer's Pills, and, after taking one box, and finding much benefit, I was disposed to continue them; but he urged perseverance, and before I had finished the second box I began to experience relief. I continued taking them, at intervals, until I had used eleven boxes. Suffice it to say that I am now a well man, and attribute my cure entirely to your chemistry, which has made mine."

The head and stomach are in sympathy; hence the cause of many of those distressing headaches, which so many, especially women, endure. Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Lafargeville, N. Y., writes that for years she was a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief, until she began taking Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health.

...WEN—GEORGE KENDIG OWEN ...d at the residence of his grand...her, on Sicily Island, March 11, ...7, aged twenty-eight years and a ... months. He was born in Concor... parish, and came to this (Cata...ula) parish with his parents in ...hildhood, where most of his life was spent. During the year 1881 he became deeply concerned about the salvation of his soul, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He afterwards lost the fervor of his "first love," and wandered back into the world. Last year, during a protracted service held by Bro. T. H. McClendon, he was powerfully reclaimed. Ever after this he seemed to live under the Father's smiles.

His disease was consumption, under which he lingered for several months, ever manifesting the highest degree of Christian fortitude, patience, and resignation to the will of God. In February, on our first visit, we found him happy in the blissful assurance of a better life above. He recognized his afflictions as having been sent to correct his wandering from his first love and to bring him back to the path of duty. He died not only resigned to the Divine will, but most triumphantly did he meet the monster Death. While death was feeding on the mortal man, the spirit crossed the valley rejoicing and praising God. He exhorted all present to meet him in heaven, sending messages of love to friends in Harrisonburg, requesting that they also meet him in the better life above. "Let us live the life of the righteous, that our last end may be as his." W. P. KIMBALL.

BRADLEY—THOMAS WILBUR, son of A. A. and Ella Bradley, was born August 2, 1886, and died April 13, 1887. The Savior said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." Then, parents, "let not your hearts be troubled."

Facts about Money.

Probably the most interesting fact about money would be a description of just how to get it; but this is one of the hard things to tell, and there are certainly some other things quite interesting and well worth knowing about it, and not the least of these is a history of the word itself and some of the other words connected with it.

The word "money" comes from the word Moneta: And this comes from the inscription "Juno Moneta" on the Roman coins, struck in a temple of that name. Moneta is derived from the Latin word Monere, to warn, because this temple was built on the spot where Manlius heard the Gauls approaching to attack Rome. The root idea, therefore, of the word is a warning. Among the ancients cattle were used as we use money in trade, and as such some uncivilized people still use them. Thence our word "pecuniary" is derived from pecunia or pecus, cattle. Our word "coin" comes from the Latin cuneus, a die or stamp. A British "sovereign" is a pound or a five-dollar gold piece, taking its name from the image of England's sovereign stamped on the coin. And a "crown" is a piece of English money with a crown on it, worth five shillings. A French "Napoleon" and a "Louis d'or" are names given to coins on which the images of these two rulers are stamped. A "guinea" is a British gold piece worth twenty-one shillings ($5 12), so called after the country from which gold used to be brought. The British "pound" meant originally a pound weight of silver divided into 240 pennies. In the Joachim Valley, Bohemia (Joachims thal), certain coins were struck in the sixteenth century. At first they were called "Joachim's thaler." Later the first part of it was dropped, and the name shortened into the German "Thalar." From this, too, comes our English word, "dollar."—Treasure Trove.

Oft obscure the road that leads to health,
Unmarked by board or stone:
Wisdom avails not, powerless is wealth
To soothe those aches of thine.
But do not despair, with life there's hope,
The cloud conceals the sun;
With Pierce's Favorite Prescription at hand
Your life's full course may run.

More truth than poetry in these lines, as thousands of ladies all over the land now blooming with health, testify to the great curative powers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, adapted by much research and careful study to the happy relief of all those weaknesses and ailments peculiar to females. Gents.—I received a sample bottle of your Antidote for Malaria last spring, and have tested it fully in my own case. After failing utterly with quinine, it has cured me permanently, and I would take it before any remedy whatever. There is no unpleasant effect while using, and it leaves none. If you could sell it at a lower price, if for introductory purposes only, it would "be bread upon the waters" later when the world finds it must have it. Very truly yours,

THE OPINION OF

Sir Robert Christison,

Baronet, M. D.,

Physician to Her Majesty the Queen, President Royal Association, Professor at the University of Edinburgh, &c.,

Liebig Co.'s Coca Beef Tonic

is a remarkable preparation. It combines the nutritive elements of the muscular fiber, blood, bone and brain of carefully selected healthy bullocks dissolved in rare old sherry wine. To be precise, each table-spoonful contains the nutritive elements of one ounce of choice beef, one grain and a half of pure quinine, and two grains of iron. It also embodies a concentrated extract of coca, a South American bottle of which Sir Robert Christison, M. D., F. R. S., physician to Her Majesty the Queen, says: "The properties of this wonderful plant are the most remarkable of any known in the medical world. From repeated personal trials I am convinced that its use is highly beneficial and tonic."

EDUCATIONAL.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE—THIRTY-THIRD ANNUAL SESSION

The fall term will begin on Wednesday, September 15, 1886, with a full corps of excellent teachers and increased facilities for instruction. Rates of board and tuition without music, one hundred and seventy-five dollars; with music, two hundred and thirty-five dollars. Payments, one-half in advance, balance at the end of session; or in similar proportion. If the entire bills for the year be paid in advance, ten per cent. will be deducted. Two or more pupils from one family will receive a discount of ten per cent.

Four pupils engaging a room, together by the year will be allowed a discount of fifteen per cent.

Members of the Louisiana Conference shall receive board at the regular rates, and tuition in both literary and music department free of charges.

Special vocal training is not included in the regular lessons for music, but will be charged as an additional course to music.

In making engagements for the year, a club of four young ladies who wish to pay all in advance will receive board, tuition and one course in music for $170 25—a discount of twenty-five per cent. from the catalogue prices; or by paying one-half in advance, they will be entitled to the same for $200.

Gladstone will spend part of Whitsuntide recess in Wales.——It is reported that the Bulgarian regents are meditating the proclamation of King Charles of Roumania as Prince of Bulgaria, thus virtually making of the Danubian-Balkan provinces one kingdom. Roumania has consented to the scheme. This policy is attributed to England, and it is said to have the approval of Germany.——The miners in that part of the province of Hainaut, including the surroundings of the city of Mons, in Belgium, are generally joining in the strike.——William O'Brien, editor of United Ireland, who is now in Canada, has been elected to represent the northeast division of Cork in the House of Commons.——The New York Assembly has fixed upon the twenty-third instant for memorial services in honor of the late Samuel J. Tilden.——The trial of Jake Sharp, of Broadway Surface railroad franchise fame, opened today in New York.——The long strike at the Pictou Coal Mines, Nova Scotia, is said to be at an end.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

OUTLINES OF LOGIC. By Hermann Lotze. Translated and edited by George T. Ladd, Professor of Philosophy in Yale College. Mailing price, $1; for introduction, eighty cents. Ginn & Co., publishers, Boston.

The Outline of Logic discusses both pure and applied Logic. Under the first head come the formation of Concepts, the theory of Judgment, a system of the forms of Judgment, the doctrine of argument or the drawing of conclusions, the figures of Aristotle, etc. The applied Logic presents the application of the forms of Conception, the adducing of Proof, and the Process of thought in Discovery. The Logic is followed by a brief treatise on the Encyclopædia of Philosophy, in which are set forth the definition and method of Theoretical Philosophy, of Practical Philosophy, and of the Philosophy of Religion. This volume is about one-fifth larger than the others, and makes an admirable brief textbook in Logic.

PEOPLE'S COMMENTARY ON MATTHEW: With the Authorized and Revised Versions, critical, exegetical and applicative notes, and illustrations from life in the East. By Edwin W. Rice, B. D., member of the "Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis," author of "Pictorial Commentary on Mark," "Scholars' Hand-book," etc. Cloth, 12mo, 216 pp; four colored maps; numerous engravings by Dalziel; harmony of events in the gospel history; analysis of the gospel; full index, etc. Price by mail, including postage, $1 25. Price to pastors and teachers, without postage, $1, net. Published on heavy-toned paper, cloth binding, by the American Sunday-School Union, 1122 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, and for sale at 10 Bible House, New York, and by all booksellers.

This commentary is one of the best and most thorough helps on the International Lessons for the last six months of 1887 and the first six months of 1888, all of which will be from the Gospel of Matthew.

ESSAYS OF ADDISON. 16mo, 175 pp. Chautauqua Library—Garnet Series. Chautauqua Press, Rand Avery Company, Boston, Mass.

"Apples of gold in pictures of silver," might well be the title-page motto for these volumes of the Garnet Series, for in them the Chautauqua Press gives the best thoughts of the best authors, in the best setting. One needs but a glance at the "Essays of Addison" to verify this. The chaste appearance of the volume is a worthy setting to the graceful elegance of the founder of "modern popular English prose style."

THE RUSTY LINCHPIN. After the Russian of Mme. Kokhanovsky. By M. D. S. and J. L. E. Boyen: D. Lothrop Company. Price, $1 25.

The interest in Russian literature, which has been developed within the past two years, has opened up a new and wonderful field to translators and readers. We have hardly yet begun to appreciate its scope or richness. "The Rusty Linchpin" is one of the most charming of stories. It is pathetic as well as humorous, and sheds light upon some of the curious domestic customs of the Russians.

JUANITA: A Romance of Real Life in Cuba Fifty Years Ago. By Mary Mann. 12mo, 436 pp. $1 50. Published by D. Lothrop & Co., Boston. For sale here, at Eyrich's, 130 Canal street.

This is a story of Cuba, after the style of Uncle Tom's Cabin, and may be of interest to some people.

PRIZE SELECTIONS: QUOTATIONS FROM THE POETS. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston. For sale here, at Eyrich's, 130 Canal street. $1.

Prizes are offered to those who will name the authors to the greatest number of selections. The first prize is $100.

PERIODICALS.

—The Gospel in All Lands, for May, is devoted to Mexico and Central America. This mission monthly is a very fine periodical on missions. 805 Broadway, New York.

—Outing, for May, will be read with zest by all lovers of out-door sports. 140 Nassau street, New York.

—The New Princeton Review, for May, has second part of Napoleon Bonaparte, by Taine; Physiological Ethics, by Noah Porter; The Uses of Political Parties, by Levi Parsons; and other articles of value. The section called "The Record" in this monthly is especially valuable, as it keeps the reader abreast with the "doings of the day." A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York City.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1887 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (thirteenth), July, 1887.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds. Several distinguished preachers invited from a distance will be in attendance and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. A very general expression having been made to continue the meeting for a longer session than usual, it has been determined to extend the time of the services of the camp meeting to two weeks.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.; W. Otis, W. J. Hearin, R. E. Jones, Mobile, Ala.; J. J. Flowers, Bolling, Ala.; Dr. E. F. Griffin, Moss Point; J. P. Carter, Hattiesburg, Miss.; W. H. Foster, E. P. Mackie, J. H. Campman, B. O. L. Rayne, T. J. Carver, H. Jamieson, Jr., P. Werlein, H. Haag, New Orleans, La.; or R. E. Price, the keeper of the camp ground, near Biloxi, Miss.

The public are invited to attend.

W. G. FOSTER, Pres.

NEW ORLEANS, May 16, 1887.

Beware how you allow words to pass for more than they are worth, and bear in mind what alteration is sometimes produced in their current value by the course of time.

"THERE IS NO GOD."

BY A. O. FOLLANS.

Lives there a soul beneath the sun,
So seared by sin and shame,
That he can see what God hath done
And still deny his name?
Can note the vivid lightning play
On heights the Lord hath trod,
And there within his bosom say,
"There is—there is no God"?

When light of day serenely fades,
And o'er yon heights afar
Night draws around her sable shades
And dims them with a star;
When through yon vault the Pleiads roam,
Where never man hath trod,
Who then can scan the starry dome,
And say, "There is no God"?

When day-beams o'er the Orient steal
And gild that glittering zone,
Who can look on and Only feel
No God is on the throne?
Or if he turns to simpler scenes—
To glow-worms on the sod—
Can still within his atheist dreams
Exclaim, "There is no God"?

Say, when he climbs o'er Zion's brow,
Where earth's loftiers stood,
To breathe to Heaven the solemn vow
And bow before the good;
Or when on the Carmel's sacred crest,
'Mid olive groves that nod
In homage to a glorious past,
How say, "There is no God"?

If pomp and rites should tempt his heart
To spurn the human creed,
And gorgeous temples, decked with art,
Seem homes of pride and greed;
E'en though these works of human hands
He deem as worthless clod,
How can he look within and say,
"There is—there is no God"?

Resolutions in Memory of Dr. McFerrin.

During his life Dr. McFerrin labored for the church in every department of service, and when he died there was not a General Board the members of which did not feel his decease as a personal bereavement. The following resolutions were passed by the bodies named, expressing their deep sorrow at his departure:

ACTION OF THE EPISCOPAL COLLEGE.

Whereas, Rev. John B. McFerrin, D. D., one of the oldest and most honored ministers of our church, for a long series of years a connectional officer, and prominent in its chief council, has just departed this life; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we are grateful to God for his long and useful life, his spotless character, his unwavering devotion, and eminent services to the church.

Resolved, That, while we are bereaved by his death, we bow to the will of God, thankful that he gave him to us so long, and joyful in the assurance that he has gone to his great reward.

Resolved, That we tender to his bereaved widow and other members of his family our sincere sympathy, and offer our prayers on their behalf for the presence and consolation of the Divine Comforter.

R. K. HARGROVE, Sec.

MAY 10, 1887.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Whereas, The sad but not unexpected intelligence has reached us of the death of Rev. John B. McFerrin, D. D., long a member of this Board, and for many years Missionary Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; And, whereas, Dr. McFerrin's great ability, untiring energy, and long and efficient service to the church, in the discharge of the various important trusts committed to him, demand expression of the sense of loss sustained in his death, and of the veneration and affection which we, in common with the whole church, hold his name; therefore, be it Resolved, That in the death of Dr. McFerrin the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is bereaved by the loss of a faithful minister, whose labors, protracted beyond the usual limit, were marked by extraordinary ability and fidelity, and were signally blessed of God in the salvation of souls and the edification of the church.

Resolved, That in his death the general church of God sustains a loss that will be felt far beyond his own denominational circle; because, with his unwavering fidelity to his convictions, and his unreserved fealty to proper denominational obligation, he was characterized by a large and true catholicity that endeared him to Christians of other communions, who will share our sorrow for his departure, and unite with us in honoring his memory.

Resolved, That while we mourn the death of our revered and beloved father in Israel, we devoutly thank God for his long, laborious, and fruitful life, and for the grace that blessed his toils and that sustained him during the protracted sufferings of his last illness.

O. P. FITZGERALD,
W. H. POTTER,
H. C. MORRISON,
Committee.

Adopted by a rising vote of the Board.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE BOOK COMMITTEE.

John Berry McFerrin was born in Rutherford county, Tenn., June 15, 1807, and was the eldest child of James and Jane Berry McFerrin. He made a profession of religion at the age of thirteen, and at once joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was admitted on trial in the Tennessee Conference, in October, 1825, and in due course of time was ordained deacon and elder. Young McFerrin received at the common schools of that day the rudiments of an ordinary English education; but was a student and learner all his life.

He filled many positions in the church: he traveled circuits, filled stations, was presiding elder, was a missionary to the Indians, Missionary Secretary, editor of the Christian Advocate, Book Agent, and delegate to the Ecumenical Conference at London, in 1881, and a member of every General Conference of the church since 1836.

He has preached at nearly every important town in the Southwest, and from New York to California; in England, and in France. He has written much for church periodicals, as well as an elaborate history of Methodism in Tennessee.

No correct history of Methodism can be written and his name omitted. He is a necessity to so much of her history. No man is better known to Methodist people in England or America. He was never neutral, always had an opinion, and usually expressed it.

He was twice married: first to Miss Almyra Probart, in 1835; secondly, to Miss C. T. McGavock, in 1855. He has had four daughters and two sons; he has now nineteen living grandchildren.

Nature did much for Dr. McFerrin. He was six feet high, with an average weight of two hundred pounds; hence his power of endurance was remarkable. He seldom wearied of work or travel. He was endowed with a strong, rich vein of natural common sense. He was zealous, courageous, aggressive, devoted, equal to every demand or emergency, and, above all, consecrated to duty and to God. He never skirked a duty put upon him, or took refuge behind a custom or a conventional excuse. He had the confidence of the entire church, and was probably the most beloved man in the church.

It would be difficult to analyze the elements of his power as a pulpit, open-air, and platform speaker. Pathos he had, and humor in a large degree. He never failed to give himself to his audiences, and in turn they gave themselves to him. He proceeded rather by intuition than logic. His sledge-hammer blows, quick and fast, exhibited great mental elasticity, deep spirituality, reserved power, intense earnestness, and made occasional vehement and overwhelming dashes and sallies at his adversary.

All classes loved him, and loved to hear him speak or preach. All read what he wrote. He was a people's man, a granite column seamed with gold throughout. The members of the church had no fears as to the result of any Conference or church convention if he was there. They well knew his power and the influence of his voice.

After he had passed his threescore and ten years of life, and time had bowed his form, the church with great partiality and unanimity put upon him the burden of redeeming from bankruptcy and loss its Publishing House. The day of his death witnessed its complete redemption and assured success.

Dr. McFerrin departed this life at his home in Nashville, Tenn., in the bosom of a loved and loving family, at 12:55 o'clock A. M., May 10, 1887.

Standing at the foot of the open tomb of this venerable man, and looking back to his humble cradle through these eventful eighty years of labor in his Master's service, we rejoice that we say of him:

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won
Enter thy Master's joy."

Resolved, That in the death of Dr. McFerrin the church has lost a great friend, a wise counselor, and a faithful servant, and this House and this committee have lost a support and advisor upon whom they reposed with unwavering confidence.

Resolved, That the Book Committee attend the funeral in a body.

Resolved, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions be spread upon our minutes, and copies sent to his family and the press.

EDWARD H. EAST,
Chairman.

THE FUNERAL SERVICES.

The postponing yesterday to honor the memory of the late Dr. J. B. McFerrin was large and representative. McKendree Church would not hold near all that tried to attend, and the best people of all classes were there. At 8:30 A. M. the pall-bearers assembled at the Methodist Publishing House and took carriages for Dr. McFerrin's late residence in East Nashville, where many friends were gathered with the relatives. Rev. J. H. Currey opened the services at the house by reading the hymn, "While on the verge of life I stand," which was feelingly sung to the tune of "Rest" by Mrs. Finch. Rev. R. K. Brown led in prayer.

Five minutes were then given for a last view of the face of the grand old man, after which the casket was closed and the pall-bearers bore it to the hearse and the funeral procession moved to the church. The casket was met at the door and preceded to the pulpit by Dr. Barbee, reading the Scripture selection from the Discipline prescribed for such occasions, Mrs. Blamlner the meanwhile playing a dead march. Several very handsome floral offerings accompanied the casket. One of these was from Mrs. James K. Polk. Thirty-eight years ago Dr. McFerrin attended President Polk in his last hours and officiated at his funeral. When the casket was placed before the altar, the choir chanted, with fine effect, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." Bishop Hargrove read the ninetieth Psalm, followed by the reading, by Dr. Fitzgerald, of the Scripture beginning, "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruit of them that slept." Hymn 578, "Come, let us join our friends above," was sung by the congregation, it being the request of the deceased. The congregation was led in prayer by Bishop Wilson. "And let this feeble body fail" was sung by the congregation. The funeral sermon was preached by Bishop H. N. McTyeire.—Daily Union.

"Blessed of my Father," that is our eternal name! How those words come to us in the tingling stillness of the night, when panic fears oppress our loneliness and so strangely vex our souls! How they rise soft and clear above the roaring of the world in hours of weariness and obstinate temptation! How they sing songs to the fear of death, and lull it when it wakens and cries, "Blessed of my Father!"—F. W. Faber.

Regeneration—Its Meaning and Doctrine.

Regeneration is a cardinal doctrine of the Bible, and should have a meaning easy and clear to the understanding of all, and so plain as to be beyond any speculation. From its dependence upon the first state and original creation or generation, as a word, it is a relative word, drawing all its meaning from the original. It must, therefore, mean the restoration, in full, of all the original purity, and the "likeness and image of God." This implies the removal of the sinful taint and bias of sin wrought in our constitution by the fall. It must be a complete renewal, extending as far as the damage realized by the fall. As the fall damaged body, soul and spirit, regeneration is not complete, until body, soul and spirit are renewed. The doctrine, as taught by the church, as far as it relates to our earthly experience, is a limited regeneration, extending only to our moral nature. By faith we receive the Spirit of Christ as the nucleus of a new being to be realized in all its fullness in the morning of the resurrection. The effect of this limited regeneration is, that our entire being is put under the law of restraint; therefore, our nature is not changed, but restrained. The best and undisputed evidence of this fact is, that all children born into the world, from the religious as from the irreligious, possess a fallen nature, drawn from their ancestors, in the first, second, third or fourth generation—a nature damaged like its ancestry, extending to body, soul and spirit. This damage is more or less marked. As there is a very intimate relation between body, soul and spirit, this damaged and unremedied condition of man in this life will materially affect every believer's experience and life, making it more or less imperfect; and as every imperfection is a transgression of the law, the priesthood of Christ is a standing necessity to all for salvation. The advocates of regeneration limited; sanctification and holiness, too often forget this fact, and speak of regeneration as an absolute "change of nature," and sanctification as absolute purity, and the life of the Christian as personal holiness, whereas, it is "the fruit of the Spirit," flowing out from the restrained condition of fallen humanity. This not only puts them in a somewhat false light, as claiming more than can be realized, but it has a sad effect upon the ignorant, who can never reconcile their experience to such a standard, rendering them, ever, more or less, dissatisfied and fearful; sometimes resulting in a painful, if not, a fatal backsliding, or stubborn skepticism. The best man may produce children as mean as the meanest, despite all the means of grace, or the doctrine of regeneration. I am aware that it will be said that this is owing to the material or fleshly condition of man, which our Lord left out of the question of regeneration, when speaking to Nicodemus. That is just what I want to bring to light. This complete regeneration evidently is reserved to the morning of the resurrection. Says the apostle, of the body: "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." Therefore, I deny that our Lord left it out of the question. This was the question with humanity. Did Christ have the power to change this state brought about by the fall? With the man of faith, of his power to do this, there is no question; but the question is, When? I say in the morning of the resurrection. As an assurance of this power over sin, Christ first demonstrates his power over the devil and his angels, by the cures effected, in which demoniacal spirits predominated; and in the restraining power upon fallen humanity, resulting in a life, more or less, reformed. This spiritual power, sensibly recognized by us, is the assured seal of God as "the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession unto the praise of his glory." This spiritual power so manifest in procuring our spiritual liberty is evidence of his power to redeem the whole being. But this is not all. Death is the result of sin remaining, and has a firm hold upon us, dragging us into its cold embrace and to the gloomy grave: but, to assure us of his power over death, "which is the last enemy that he will put under his feet," he manifested this wonderful redeeming power when he rose from the dead, thus presenting the strange phenomenon of destroying death by suffering death. Thus St. Paul connects the distressful condition of the believer—"O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord"—as our earthly condition: with the assured complete victory on the morning of the resurrection—"So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Here is the answer to the distressful inquiry in Romans vii, and the time when we shall realize complete regeneration. This establishes a fact that should be recognized in our theology—viz: that sin remains in us as an abiding evil, under the restraining power of Christ's Spirit, as "the strong man bound by the stronger man," ready to be cast out at the appointed time. In this life, through the power of the Spirit, sin "is bound," is "kept in subjection," "is mortified," "is crucified"; in the morning of the resurrection it will be cast out of the believer. The being "born of the Spirit" is an assured repose in the power of Christ, by faith, to accomplish what is proposed in redemption. The being born of water is an humbled confession of our fallen or sinful state, and a public expression of our faith in Christ, as being able to accomplish our redemption. The whole thing—redemption—being demonstrated before the eyes of humanity, our "faith sees the triumph from afar:" and thus we have "a taste of the good word of God, and of the powers of the world to come." "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Let us be careful to recognize the Spirit of Christ, and yield to his persuasive power, that sin may be restrained, and finally destroyed.

And let us not forget that prayer is specially necessary for the right training of the heart. By nature "the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked: who can know it?" How hopeless the guidance and instruction of such a nature without God's help and grace! How shall we expect teaching, example, watchfulness, entreaty, or any means to prosper without Divine power and blessing? Prayer, daily prayer, importunate prayer, prayer for each one by name, special prayer. Let this be by no means neglected, still less omitted. Before its steady blow-pipe heat the rock will melt. The poisonous ore be sublimated and purified, the unhappy and dangerous heart cleansed of its foulest inhabitants until the soul becomes "an habitation of God through the Spirit." And let "a heart in every thought renewed" be the ideal of attainment.

(St. Louis Christian Advocate.)

Love may supply the flesh and cover it with beauty, but faith supplies the nerve and bone of religion; its strength lies in the strength of its faith. Love, without it be invigorated by faith, becomes but a glittering sentiment. Faith is the quieting principle of the gospel. It drives away fear. The tremulous soul is stilled by its strong hand. "Thou will keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee. Trust ye in the Lord forever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." Faith binds us to Jehovah and his strength is imparted to us. The whole train of doubts, anxieties and fears are begotten by a weak faith—they have no place in the soul which fully trusts in God. Perfect peace—or as the marginal reading is, peace, peace—reigns in the soul where faith is found supreme. There is no place for doubt, none for fear where faith is perfect.

(Methodist Advance.)

Our ministers are not objects of charity. They are God's workmen earning justly and richly their salary, just as much so as merchants, mechanics, teachers, physicians and lawyers earn theirs. The idea, that most of people entertain, that they give in the sense of charity to their preacher, is entirely erroneous and does great injustice to the worth and dignity of the ministerial vocation. As the preacher gives himself up to the Conference to do the work assigned him, and devotes all his time and talents to the work of the church, so the members of the church agree to receive and support whoever may be sent to them. Thus by church usage and a tacit consent, a mutual contract is formed between the preacher and people—the preacher binding himself to do the work of a pastor, and the people pledging themselves to pay him liberally for the services rendered.

(Southwestern Methodist.)

The witness of the Spirit is in feeling. But let us know in what sort of feeling. Since many profess great joy and confidence who lack the fruits of regeneration, let us learn to distrust such emotions as proofs of salvation. If the law is our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, or as the pedagogue that took the child by the hand and led him to the teacher's school, then let the law guide us in this matter. Jesus, interpreting the law, said, "Love your enemies." "Does a man love his enemies?" Here is feeling, not a transient, sinful emotion, but a strong, steady affection of the soul, responsive to God's law. There is the law written on the heart. That is the fruit and the witness of the Spirit. Only the Spirit of God can enable men to love their enemies. Jesus said, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Does a man feel like doing that? Does he practice this in his life? If so, he has the witness that he is God's child by his conscious preference for spiritual things.

(Episcopal Methodist.)

The fact we want to get at is, that God wants us conformed to the image of his Son, that all his work in providence and grace is for the purpose of securing our willing consent and cooperation in reaching this sublime result. And when the co-ordination between God and man is complete, the result will surely be achieved. And this purpose of God is a glorious one. Only think of it! We are to bear his likeness. And even the very process is outlined by St. Paul, when he declares: "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." And this is no passive act. We can only see the glory of the Lord while in the exercise of obedience and faith; otherwise there is "a hiding of his power." Moses saw his glory only in obedience, and was a changed man thereafter, exhibiting only such imperfections as even converted people now so often show. But the type given and the means of conforming to the type being shown, our duty is plain. No man dare be content with his attainments. The call of God demands imperatively that we "go forward." We are to "leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ and to go on to perfection." And this should be our whole object in life.

SEALED ORDERS.

Out she swung from her moorings
And over the harbor bar;
As the mouth was slowly rising
She faded from sight afar.
And we traced her pleasing canvas
By the twinkling evening star.

None knew the port she sailed for,
Nor whither her cruise would be;
Her future course was shrouded
In silence and mystery;
She was sailing beneath "sealed orders,"
To be opened out at sea.

Some souls, cut off from moorings,
Go drifting into the night,
Darkness before and round them,
With scarce a glimmer of light;
They are acting beneath "sealed orders,"
And sailing by faith, not sight.

Keeping the line of duty
Through good and evil report,
They shall ride the storms out safely
Be the passage long or short;
For the ship that carries God's orders
Shall anchor at last in port.

THE MANNA.

Exodus xvi, 4-12.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life."—John vi, 35.

CONNECTIVE AND EXPLANATORY.

The wonderful passage of the Red Sea and the utter destruction of their taskmasters gave to the Israelites a sense of security from their most dreaded foe. The despoiler had been despoiled. The tyrant had found a more inexorable master. Surprised at the humiliation and overthrow of those whom they had regarded as invincible, and filled with adoring wonder at the overwhelming exhibition of God's vengeance, the downtrodden Israelites abandoned themselves to an ecstasy of triumph. Prose was too tame to express their rapture. Poetic numbers, sublime in conception and transporting in their stirring rhythm, rendered tribute to him whom they extolled as "glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders." No misgivings as to the future are expressed of them; doubtless none were entertained. The same Power who could deliver them from the fearful straits into which they had fallen surely would be equal to any emergency. As they marched forward under the inspiration of the Divine guidance even the wilderness blossomed as the rose and the majestic pillars alternately lighted up the glowing sands with cheering rays or spread over them refreshing shade. Sinai was the objective point, where, according to promises, they were to "serve God upon this mountain." But on their pilgrimage the question so often perplexing to mortals began to trouble them, "What shall we eat and what shall we drink?" It is not surprising that the question of the support of so many should have suggested itself, now that the supply of bread brought in their kneading-troughs had been exhausted and the wilderness offered them no more. But it is surprising that the bitter waters of Marah and the sterile desert or any other possible experience should have made this people to murmur, who had received such assuring evidences that God had undertaken for them against all possible contingencies. Could not he, who demonstrated his command over the world of waters by making the sea to stand up as a heap, as easily sweeten Marah's bitter stream? Would not he who by such wondrous display had preserved the lives of his people, now, if need be, make requisition upon the shambles of the universe for daily bread? "Is not the life more than meat?" But these Israelites are but the type of mankind. No matter how abounding are the supplies of nature, no matter how minutely careful the ministrations of Providence, if but one dark day come or man's cherished designs be crossed, then doubts and fears arise, followed quickly by murmurings against the administration of an all-wise and ever-merciful Father. What a degraded moral sense is indicated by a preference for dying in bondage, if only they could "set by the flesh pots!" How dishonoring to him who had wrought such deliverance for them! But God was long-suffering and regarded even their murmurings, promising that he would "rain bread from heaven" in the shape of

THE MANNA.

Verse 1. "The Lord said unto Moses." It is not stated that Moses cried unto the Lord as he did at the Red Sea or at Marah. It may be presumed that he did, as it was his habit, or it may be that the Lord sent the answer to the prayers of the murmurers through his trusted servant. "A certain rate every day." The New Version has it: "A day's portion every day." "That I may prove them." The sin of the Israelites was unbelief. The visible means of support removed, they began to doubt whether they should still have a Provider. The supply day by day was to teach them their daily dependence upon God and to cultivate their faith.

5. "The sixth day," twice as much as they gather daily. This was to prevent their gathering on the Sabbath day. God's regard for the sanctity of the Sabbath is further demonstrated in that he wrought a perpetual miracle to prevent the double portion of the manna from becoming offensive on that day, while on other days it was unfit to be used if it was kept from evening to morning. The fact, also, that no manna fell on the Sabbath is another evidence, and it is evidence also that the gift of manna was miraculous. Had it been the result of natural causes, these natural causes would have produced it on the Sabbath as well as upon any other day.

6. "At even, ye shall know that the Lord brought you out of Egypt." The quails were brought upon the camp by no act of Moses or Aaron; they were to be ascribed only to the Divine agency, and the same agency which brought the quails conducted them out of Egypt.

7. "In the morning ye shall see the glory of the Lord." As daily bread is necessary to the sustenance of life, what stronger evidence could be given of the glory of God than that he should miraculously supply this food? Providence can come no nearer to man than when in supplying or withholding daily bread. "What are we, that ye murmur against us?" They ought to have known that Moses wrought not a single miracle in his own name, nor that he took a single step in their affairs without the direction of his Master and theirs. Hence to murmur against Moses was direct rebellion against the orderings of Providence. So it is when man is discontented with his lot, and chafes under losses and disappointments, he virtually arrays his own judgment against the wisdom and mercy of his Maker.

9. "Come near before the Lord: for he hath heard your murmurings." Cries to God prevail with him whether he chooses to answer in terms or not. Indeed, instances can be shown where God answered the cry of his people, even when he knew it was to be to their detriment; as when he gave a king to the Israelites because of their continual asking, even though it entailed affliction and sorrow upon them. Again, in Psalms cvi, 15: "He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their souls." There is wonderful power in a human cry; it "enters into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

10. "They looked toward the wilderness; * * * the glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud." The wilderness was to be their pathway; the glory of the Lord illumined it. So the Spirit is promised to guide us in all truth. The Word of God is a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our pathway. "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths."

12. "Ye shall know that I am the Lord your God." God's dealings with them from first to last was to make them acquainted with his characteristics. This would effectually destroy their idolatry and elicit their obedient service and their heartfelt homage. To know God in the perfection of his character and in his blessed ministrations to the children of men is necessarily to love him. It is said in the book of Job: "Acquaint now thyself with him, and be at peace; so shall good come to thee." The knowledge of him would ensure peace and good.

The manna in the wilderness was typical of the true bread of life which the Father was to bring through his Son. Jesus said of himself: "Moses gave you not that bread from heaven: but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven." "I am that bread of life." "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna." "Lord, evermore give us this bread."

The Temperance Convention at Arcadia, La.

MR. EDITOR: Our town has enjoyed "a feast of fat things" in the way of a grand rallying of the friends of temperance and prohibition of North Louisiana. The Temperance Executive Committee of the State appointed a convention to meet here, on May 5 and 6, for the northern district of Louisiana; the purpose of which was to arouse the sentiment of the people on the subject of temperance, and to make arrangements for a good representation at the State Convention at Alexandria, next July. The most sanguine hopes of the committee were more than met in the results of this convention. The roll showed about sixty-seven delegates in attendance from various parishes of this district, and they were the representative men and women of this portion of the State, all ready to work in this noble cause for "Home and God and Native Land."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union were ably represented by Mrs. Chapin, of Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. Goodale and Mrs. M. L. Garner, of our own State. Mrs. Chapin's stirring and pathetic address, in behalf of prohibition and womans work therein was a masterly argument, and was delivered with such ease, force and eloquence that she captivated all hearts, and convinced many unbelievers of the righteousness of our cause. Mrs. Goodale's address was a fine production and was delivered with telling effect.

We feel under lasting obligations to Dr. W. C. Black and Rev. J. H. Gambrell, of Mississippi, for their presence and counsel in the deliberations of the convention, and for their soul-stirring appeals in behalf of prohibition and humanity. The facts and figures presented by Dr. Black were simply overwhelming; while Bro. Gambrell's fair and unvarnished presentation of the evils of alcohol and the good results of prohibition, mixed in with his wit and well-timed anecdotes, was indeed convincing and refreshing. Some of our whisky sellers have since confessed that they felt like going and turning out their whisky into the streets; but they did not do it, all the same. Oh, the greed for filthy lucre! What will not men do for gain? How true the old poet has said—

"My reason bids, my passion that persuades,
I see the right, and I approve it too;
Condemn the wrong, and yet the wrong pursue."

The convention closed on Friday night, after having been in harmonious session for two days, with a perfect tidal wave of enthusiasm in behalf of prohibition. Everybody was glad that the prohibition convention came to Arcadia, and that we had so many pleasant and intelligent visitors. We will remember their smiling faces and their wise and godly counsels for a long, long time. Much good was done; the public sentiment was aroused on the prohibition question; and by the help of God, the co-operation of the noble women of this country, with the united efforts of all the friends of temperance, we hope to keep the flame burning until alcohol shall be banished from our parish and State.

There was a Woman's Christian Temperance Union organized here on Saturday morning, by Mrs. Chapin and Mrs. Goodale, with about thirty-seven members, and these women mean business. You will hear good results of their labors in the near future.

Fraternally yours,

JNO. A. MILLER.

Seashore District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to add two or three items to your report of Seashore District Conference, held at Ellisville, April 21-24.

Bishop Duncan appointed Mrs. T. S. West, district secretary of Woman's Department of Church Extension, in the place of Miss Griffin, resigned. Dr. E. F. Griffin and Hon. J. P. Carter were elected members of the Board of Trustees of Seashore Camp Ground. Hon. J. P. Carter, Rev. H. J. Harris, Geo. W. Walker and A. K. Worthy were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. The presence and labors of the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE were highly appreciated, and greatly promoted the interests of the paper. Pay for obituaries above thirty-five lines in length was discussed, and the explanations of the editor removed prejudices that existed.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we hail with pleasure the presence of Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, with us in our District Conference session.

Resolved, That in Dr. Carter we recognize a worthy successor to his great and illustrious predecessors; and (2nd) that the ADVOCATE under his management, is equal in all points of excellence to that of any former management.

Resolved, That we are impressed with the importance of widening the circulation of the ADVOCATE, and pledge ourselves, as pastors and laymen, to endeavor to accomplish that end.

T. W. ADAMS.
T. S. WEST.

The Sunday-school Convocation, Sunday afternoon, was a delightful feature of the Conference. The Bishop's unique and characteristic speech was immensely enjoyed by all.

Dr. West, the presiding elder, took a very active and helpful part in all the work of the Conference. His report upon the general interests of the church throughout the district was encouraging.

Hattiesburg was chosen as the place for holding the next District Conference.

Greenville District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Greenville District Conference met in Greenville, Miss., April 28, 1887. Bishop W. W. Duncan presided. His presence among us was a benediction, and his preaching was strong and edifying. Our Bishops are rarely ever seen in this district, and this fact made Bishop Duncan's visit all the more enjoyable by the people. The reports of the preachers showed an advancement in nearly every charge. They compose a band of energetic, consecrated men, and are led by a model presiding elder.

The Bishop stressed the necessity of Christian education and the circulation of our church papers. Special emphasis was given to the claims of our own Conference organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Dr. T. A. S. Adams represented you in your absence, and obtained fifteen new subscribers on the Conference floor. He told us all about the merits and the needs of Centenary College, at Jackson, La., of which he is the worthy president, and secured in a few minutes one thousand dollars in notes for the endowment of the alumni professorship.

The Greenville district is in the famous Yazoo district, occupying a territory extending two hundred miles along the Mississippi river. The lands are as fertile as the valley of the Nile. The population is noted for elegant culture, wealth and liberality. Greenville entertained us with generous hospitality. Bro. Standifer, the faithful pastor, is filling his fourth year, and his people are full of regret that he must soon leave them for another field of labor. He is beloved by all classes of every denomination. He recently filled the rabbi's pulpit in the Jewish synagogue, by special invitation.

The following were elected delegates to Annual Conference: E. H. Moore, W. R. Trigg, R. J. Nugent, Jno. Clark; alternates—S. Nurse, L. P. Peacock.

T. Y. RAMSEY, JR., Sec.

Something to Be Thankful for.

PRAISE TO WHOM PRAISE IS DUE.

To the Wesleyan Society of Dryades Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

We take this early opportunity to return thanks to you for your kindness in furnishing the parsonage so comfortably and neatly. The work began first on the sitting-room, and it was soon made bright and cheery with its bright matting, pretty shades and rugs and lambrequin, easy chairs and comfortable lounge that made one feel rested to look at; and a few days ago the bedroom was so much beautified by the introduction of a pretty bedroom set, that the lady of the parsonage said that she felt like a bride again; and it did look much like a bridal chamber.

You can hardly imagine how thankful we are and how comfortable we feel. When we look around we will remember the kind, thoughtful ones who have wrought out these things. We will enjoy them very much, but we will appreciate you more than these. Go on in your good work, and may God bless you. You will ever remember that at the preacher's home you have friends that will love you and appreciate you and your furnished home. Please accept our sincere thanks for all these things.

YOUR PASTOR AND HIS WIFE.

NEW ORLEANS, May 9, 1887.

Woman's Department of Church Extension.

TO PARSONAGE SOCIETIES.

May is the month for your regular quarterly meeting. Have you held it? If you have not, do not delay, but call the members together the earliest day practicable and report at once to your Conference secretary that she may be able to get her report in in due time. Urge your treasurer to send your funds to the Conference treasurer immediately after your meeting. Be prompt to send in these reports that your society may be properly represented in the report published every quarter.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

1. Can a parsonage society organized under the Constitution of the Woman's Department of Church Extension retain any portion of the dues?

Answer—The dues of the members and mite-box collections must be sent to the Conference treasurer as the Constitution requires.

2. Can a society raise "special donations" for the local need; and so report them?

Answer—"Donors may give direction to their special contributions." (See Constitution, pp. 3 and 5.) Such donations may be secured for the local work as well as any other. Any donations received, or funds raised by the society, or one of its members in the name of the society, specifically for local parsonage work can be so applied and may be reported under the head of "special donations."

Any local parsonage work done by the congregation, but not by or through the society will, of course, not be reported as the work of the society.

Woodville District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to say to your readers that our District Conference at Centreville was quite a success in all respects. Bishop Duncan, both from the pulpit and the chair, impressed our people with the conviction that the church did a wise thing when she set him apart to the high office of a Bishop. On Sunday he gave us one of his best sermons on the blessing of the church to the world, (Text Psalm cxliv, 15.) The sermon seemed to have so convinced the audience of the benefit of the church that it was not a hard matter to raise between $500 and $600 to finish and furnish our new church; after which he solemnly dedicated it to the worship of Almighty God.

In the afternoon he closed his services among us with a talk to the children that will not soon be forgotten by them nor their parents, for a good portion of it was for the benefit of the latter.

Bro. L. S. Jones remained and Bro. Cecil returned and assisted us in the meeting till Thursday night, when we closed with twenty-four accessions to our church, and one to the Presbyterians, and about twenty conversions.

In conclusion, let me add that we feel that we are a wiser and better people, and none the poorer, by having had a District Conference in our midst.

P. HOWARD, P. C.

This and That.

THIS.

"The fifth mission was at Crystal Springs, continuing a week. In many respects this was the most successful one held. The sermons here in the morning were instructions on the church, embracing history, doctrine, architecture, symbols, and usage."

"The seventh and last mission was the continuation of one begun in Oxford by the Rev. Mr. ——. The weather was bad, and the town excited by a 'union meeting,' where extra sensations far beyond the ability of the church to meet, were the order of the day." (Diocese of Mississippi Journal, 1886, pp. 6162.)

THAT.

"Oxford is improving very much these last two years. Last year Bro. Ramsey, the pastor, was blessed with a most overwhelming revival. The membership was greatly quickened, and many added to the church. * * * The grand result of the big revival is a very earnest movement, now well advanced, looking to remodeling and repairing our church." (North Mississippi Conference Notes, Nashville Christian Advocate, April 23, 1887.)

From the Work.

COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: While others are telling you about their work, I will do the same. Now, I will not tell you that I was appointed to this circuit last December, but will just say, if there are doubts, look at the bottom, and then at the top of this article and doubts will vanish. The brethren on my work have neither "pounded," "stormed," nor carried me through a system of "harricins;" but they have done better—given to me their heart felt sympathy and sincere co-operation. Not only that; but every church (I have only eight) that the appeal for missions has been made to have nobly responded. Nor did they insult me when I told them what I wanted (a bitter experience had to go through with last fall), but like men and women they responded. Three churches and a parsonage are to be built this year. We have three Sunday-schools; two doing well, the other still in its formative state—that is to say, organized, but not fully equipped. Not as many ADVOCATES taken as I could wish; but, as you know, we are taking. There is plenty of riding, study, preaching, singing, praying to be done; plenty of good friends to help. What more could a man ask? What more does he need? When such is the case, one ought to be contented. I am. Pray that the Angel of Light may help us in the conflict against the powers of darkness.

G. H. GALLOWAY, P. C.

NESHOBA CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: We are having a pleasant and, I hope, a profitable time on the Neshoba circuit. People reasonably cheerful, though this work is not as good as it could be. A great many of my people seem to care but little about their Christian duties, though I have many warm-hearted Christians, always ready to respond to all of their callings. This is a good circuit, and I do not know why it should not be as good as any on the Brandon district. People seem to be getting on very well, financially. I have eight churches; three new ones, two not quite finished yet. The Spirit is at work with us here. I am well pleased with my work, and I hope the people are with their pastor. I have no complaints to make on my finances. My people are responding to all calls. I hope to bring up all my collections at Conference. Pray for us. I am,

Yours in Christ,

J. N. WARE.

PEARL RIDGE, Mississippi.

MINTER CITY.

MR. EDITOR: In issue of ADVOCATE, of April 28, page 4, last column, you make this query—"Two last, or last two (which is it?)." How could there be more than one last? The last must be last; so it seems it should be "last two."

I am glad to be able to report (and I announce it to encourage Zion's workers and to show it can be done even in "the bottom") that we have all our Conference collections in cash and good subscriptions—mostly cash—and more than twenty-five per cent. over. The leading members did not believe we would get it. This being a new membership, it was assessed $167, and we have $224.

Our presiding elder, Rev. C. N. Terry, with us last month, in going to Sunnyside he got lost and had to lie out in the swamp all night. He was endeavoring to make a cut-off, and night overtook him before he came out. So he had to wait for more light. He said he was a little afraid of snakes: so did not sleep much.

J. L. FUTRELL.

COFFEEVILLE, MISS.

The above is a lively town of eight or nine hundred inhabitants, on the Illinois Central railroad. Our church there is in a very prosperous condition under the faithful and judicious ministry and management of Rev. T. G. Freeman. Bro. Freeman has just enjoyed a rich revival in his charge. The meeting resulted in fifty-five conversions and twenty-six accessions to our church. Bro. Freeman is a man of affairs, and is in much favor with his people.

Yours truly,

E. C. KILGORE.

MAY 16, 1887.

It is a noble species of revenge to have the power of severe retaliation and not to exercise it.

The Great Leader.

Mr. Gladstone is marked, physically as well as mentally, for a great leader. He is about five feet nine inches in height, and looks taller. His build is muscular, and but a very short time ago he was able to take a hand at felling a tree with young men. There was a time when he was one of the most skillful of horsemen. He is still a great pedestrian, and there scarcely passes a day that he is not to be seen walking. He walks with his head thrown back, and a step firm and rapid. His countenance is singularly beautiful. He has large dark eyes that flash brilliantly, even at his age. Deep-set and with heavy eyelids, they sometimes give the impression of a hooded eagle. He has a large, exquisitely chiseled nose. The mouth also is finely modeled. The head is unusually large. It was in early youth covered with thick black hair. The brow is lofty and broad and very expressive. The complexion is white almost as wax, and gives the face a look of wonderful delicacy. The face is the most expressive in the House of Commons. It reflects every emotion as clearly and rapidly as a summer lake its summer sky. When Mr. Gladstone is angry his brow is clouded and his eyes shine. When he is amused, his face beams. When he is contemplative, his lips curl and his head is tossed. His air is joyous if things go well, and mournful if things go ill: though when the final trial comes, and he stands convinced that he must meet absolute and resistless defeat, he looks out with dignified tranquility.

All the passions of the human soul shine forth by his look and gesture. His voice is powerful, and at the same time can rise in menace or sink in entreaty. Allusions have been made to the vast and heterogeneous stores of learning which are in this single man's brain. He has extraordinary subtility of mind, so that he is able to present a case in a thousand different lights; and it is this faculty that has sometimes given him the unpleasant and undeserved reputation of sophistry and of duplicity. He speaks as a rule with considerable vehemence and gesticulates freely. To speak of him as the first orator of the House of Commons is to give a very inadequate statement of his position. Over and over again in the course of his career he has turned a battle, when he was seemingly just beaten, into a victory, and nobody is ever able to say how things will go until Mr. Gladstone has first spoken.—The Great Irish Struggle.

A Hope Realized.

To cure the sick without the use of poisons drugs that often derange every portion of the human organism has been the problem for several generations of practitioners. This hope has found a realization in the use of Drs. Starkey and Palen's Compound Oxygen, which can be administered almost anywhere, and already has a place in more than thirty-seven thousand families throughout this land. A valuable treatise on the subject, and the methods of home treatment will be sent free to anyone interested in the subject. Address Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

How Long to Sleep.

Practically a man should sleep till he is refreshed. The mistake many persons make is in attempting to govern what must be a matter of instinct by volitional control. When we are weary we ought to sleep, and when we wake we should get up. There are no more vicious habits than adopting measures to "keep awake," or employing artifices, or, still worse, resorting to drugs and other devices to induce or prolong sleep. Dozing is the very demoralization of the sleep function, and from this pernicious habit arises much of the so-called sleeplessness—more accurately, wakefulness—from which multitudes suffer. That day is lost at the time for sleep is evident upon the face of the fact that nature has provided the night, wherein no man can or ought to work. The difficulties about sleep and sleeplessness—apart from dreams—are almost uniformly fruits of a perverse refusal to comply with the laws of nature. Take, for example, the case of a man who can not sleep at night, or rather who, having fallen asleep, awakes. If he is one that is called strong-minded, he thinks, or perhaps reads, and falls asleep again. This being repeated, lays the foundation of a habit of waking in the night and thinking or reading to induce sleep. Before long the thinking or reading fails to induce sleep, and habitual sleeplessness occurs, for which remedies are sought and mischief is done. If the wakeful man would only resolve himself on waking, and get up and do a full day's work of any sort, and not doze during the day, when next the night came round his sixteen or twenty hours' wakefulness would be rewarded by a sleep of nine or ten hours in length; and one or two of these manful struggles against a perverted tendency to abnormal habit would rectify the error and avert the calamity. The cure for sleeplessness must be natural, because sleep is a state of natural rhythmical function. You can not tamper with the striking movement of a clock without injuring it, and you can not tamper with orderly recurrence of sleep without impairing the very constitution of things on which the orderly performance of that function depends.—The Lancet.

A Bloody Affray.

is often the result of "bad blood" in a family or community, but nowhere is bad blood more destructive of happiness and health than in the human system. When the life current is foul and sluggish with impurities, and is slowly distributing its poisons to every part of the body, the peril to health, and life even, is imminent. Early symptoms are dull and drowsy feelings, severe headaches, coated tongue, poor appetite, indigestion and general lassitude. Delay in treatment may entail the most serious consequences. Don't let disease get a strong hold on your constitution, but treat yourself by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and be restored to the blessings of health. All druggists.

Home.

In the evil days that have come upon us, when parents in their selfishness want not to be encumbered with children, it is a pleasure to read a letter of Baron Bunsen to his wife's mother; after the birth of twins: "After having balanced between Cornelius and Cornelia, Constans and Constantia, Theodore and Theodora, we decided on the last, as expressing best our feeling in being so richly blest: for the meaning of both names is God's gift. Nothing can be more touching than to see the two dear little angels lying by each other's side in the cradle, and they are the object of interest and admiration to all the Roman principesse and English ladies who came to visit Fanny." After a short time Madame Bunsen wrote her letter: "My Own Mother: To-morrow it will be three weeks since I was blessed with two more dear treasures—more prized and delighted in, I think, than any before, not because the preceding ones were less valuable, but, because, by practice, one learns to enjoy and learns to be more thankful." Parents so wise and good not all children are blessed with; but even we commonplace ones might learn to welcome the coming of children, and when they come to make them happy. This latter not at all by letting them have their own way; nor all the time teaching them verses and hymns and giving them no other reading but the Bible and lives of the saints. One of Madame Bunsen's letters to her mother tells of the delight she experienced in getting from her "The Boys' Own Book" for her boys' reading. And "Robinson Crusoe," and "Fairy Tales," and books of Child's History, of which there are many, some in words of one syllable, all interesting, to make boys not only happier and to love their homes, but to make them think and reflect. In addition to these, the home influence, which if it be bright and Christian—with proper Christian instruction—we may expect our boys to grow up to resist evil and practice good.—Southern Churchman.

"My Faith Looks up to Thee."

The history of this famous hymn as given in the Observer is like the story of an old friend. The author, Dr. Ray Palmer, died a few weeks since:

In regard to the origin of the hymn, "My Faith Looks up to Thee," Dr. Palmer stated that it was written at New York in 1830, in the house of the lady who kept the school in which he taught. The house was situated in Fulton street, near Church. It was not suggested by any outward circumstance or occasion, but was written in the quietude of his chamber, under a deep consciousness of his own great needs. "There was not," said he, "the slightest thought of writing for another eye, least of all of writing a hymn for Christian worship." It was jotted down by him at the time in a small pocket note-book. A year or two afterward Dr. Lowell Mason met Ray Palmer in the street in Boston and requested him to furnish some hymns for a hymn and tune book which in connection with Dr. Hastings, he was about to publish. The little note-book was shown him, after which the two stepped into a store, where a copy of the hymn was made and given to Dr. Lowell Mason, who without much notice, put it in his pocket. On getting home Dr. Lowell Mason became so much interested in it that he composed the tune "Olivet," and two or three days afterward, when they again chanced to meet in the street, scarcely waiting to salute him, Dr. Mason exclaimed: "Mr. Palmer, you may live many years and do many good things; but I think you will be best known to posterity as the author of 'My Faith Looks up to Thee.'"

The hymn and tune together soon took wing and passed into common use; in 1849 it was introduced into England through a collection published by Dr. Andrew Reed, and now there are few if any recent English manuals of worship which do not contain it. It has also been translated into more than a dozen languages. The many touching and striking instances of soul-help and heart-comfort which have come to the light in connection with this hymn would of themselves fill a large volume, and the great day of account alone shall declare the sum of eternal good which, under the blessing of God it has been instrumental in bringing to immmerable ransomed souls.—Exchange.

We are hearing, in these days, a very great deal about faith, more especially in relation to the attainment of physical benefit in one way or another. It would almost seem as if there were those who would have us believe that the great God had admitted them to a species of favoritism, so that things are done because they ask for them. We hold that any kind of exercise, however it may call itself, which loses out of sight, whether consciously or not, the infinite supremacy of God, his absolute independence of us, be we who we may, or that claims to move and change the Divine mind as the minds of men are moved and changed, is so far from being faith that it can deserve no other name but blasphemous presumption.—Standard.

Jenks' Dream.

Jenks had a queer dream the other night. He thought he saw a prize-fighters' ring, and in the middle of it stood a doughty little champion who met and deliberately knocked over, one by one, a score or more of big burley-looking fellows, as they advanced to the attack. Giants as they were in size, the valiant pigmy proved more than a match for them. It was all so funny that Jenks woke up laughing. He accounts for the dream by the fact that he had just come to the conclusion, after trying nearly every big drastic pill on the market, that Pierce's tiny Purgative Pellets easily "knock out" and beat all the rest hollow!

He whose only claim to the title "gentleman" is in his clothes, must necessarily be careful as to what he wears.

Sick headache is the cause of many lives. To cure and prevent this annoying complaint use Dr. R. V. Pierce's Little Sugar and Kidney Pellets. They are agreeable to take and gentle in their action. 25 cents a vial.

MOTHER'S FRIEND

Not only shortens the time of labor and lessens the pain, but it greatly diminishes the danger to life of both mother and child, and leaves the mother in a condition more favorable to speedy recovery, and less liable to Crippling, Convulsions, and other alarming symptoms. Its efficacy in this respect entitles it to be called THE MOTHER'S FRIEND, and to rank as one of the life-saving remedies of the nineteenth century.

ITCHING FIVE LONG YEARS.

New Bloomfield, Miss., Jan. 2, 1886.

Hop Bitters Co.:

I wish to say for your benefit that I have been suffering for the last five years with a severe itching all over my body, and have had to scratch until the blood would run. I have used many kinds of medicine, but found no relief. I have used up four bottles, and it has done me more good than all the doctors and medicines that they could use on or with me. I am old and poor, but feel helpless for such a relief from your medicine and torment of the doctors. I have had fifteen doctors at me. One gave me seven ounces of solution of arsenic; another took four quarts of blood from me. All they could tell me was that it was skin sickness. Now after three bottles of your medicine, I am well and my skin is soft, clean and smooth as ever.

HENRY KNOTT.

Good Words from Good Authority.

* * * We confess that we are perfectly amazed at the run of your Hop Bitters. We never had anything like it, and never heard of the like. The writer in Boston has been a druggist here nearly forty years, and has seen the rise of Hostetter's, Vinegar and all other bitters and patent medicines, but never did any of them in their whole days begin to have the run that Hop Bitters have. * * We can't get enough of them. We are out of drug half the time. * * From letter to Hop Bitters Co., from BOSTON, MASS., Wholesale Druggists, Portland, Oregon.

GOOD FOR BABIES. We are pleased to say that our baby was perfectly cured of a bad case of prostration of the bowels by the use of Hop Bitters. It is made a speech at the same time to those in charge that "Hop Bitters is good for babies."

THE PARENTS.

MISERABLENESS.

The most wonderful cures of sick, nervous and miserable people are daily made by the use of Hop Bitters. No person can take them according to directions and remain sick or suffering long, unless past the reach of medicine. Thousands say they are the best medicine they ever used, and all are delighted with them. Ministers, lawyers, editors, druggists, merchants, all testify to their wonderful merits. Ladies, you will find a certain cure for all your ailments in their use. In daily use in thousands of homes as the best family medicine known. Is there, therefore, a sensible reason why you should not use Hop Bitters and be well? Remember, Hop Bitters is not a vile, drugged whiskey, but is purely vegetable, and the best and purest medicine ever made. Try them to-day.

WICKED FOR A CLERGYMAN.

"I believe it to be all it claims, and in cases where a clergyman cannot preach for want of nerve, or a mother cannot nurse her child, on account of nervousness, I believe Hop Bitters will do more good than any other medicine. I have used it in my family, and can recommend it as the best medicine we have ever used. I believe it to be wicked for a clergyman to be sick, when Hop Bitters will cure him." REV. E. B. WARD, Scipio, N. Y.

"A Couple Accounted For.

"To sum it up, six long years of hobbling, aching misery, costing $200 per year—total, $1,200—all of which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has since had a good week's work for a year, without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it, for their sakes." JOHN WELLS, Butler.

Never Forget This.

If you are sick, Hop Bitters will surely aid Nature in making you well when all else fails.

If you are costive or dyspeptic, or are suffering from any other of the numerous diseases of the stomach or bowels, it is your own fault if you remain ill, for Hop Bitters is a sovereign remedy in all such complaints.

If you are wasting away with any form of Kidney disease, stop tempting Death this moment, and turn for a cure to Hop Bitters.

If you are nervous, use Hop Bitters.

If you are a frequenter, or a resident of a malarial district, barricade your system against the scourge of all countries—malarial, epidemic, bilious and intermittent fevers—by the use of Hop Bitters.

If you have rough, pimply or sallow skin, bad breath, pains and aches, and feel miserable generally, Hop Bitters will give you fair skin, rich blood, and sweetest breath and health.

That poor, bedridden, invalid wife, sister, mother, or daughter, can be made the picture of health with Hop Bitters, costing but a trifle. Will you let them suffer?

In short they cure all Diseases of the stomach, Bowels, Blood, Liver, Nerves, Kidneys, Bright's Disease. $1,000 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help.

Bishop McTyeire's Sermon at the Funeral of Dr. McFerrin.

TEXT: "For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep." Acts xiii, 36.

More than sixty years ago God gave to this church and to this people a servant to serve you in your best and highest interests. After proving himself good and faithful he has fallen on sleep, and we meet to mourn and to bury him.

Forget not to be thankful for this gift, and that God endued him with such grace and spared him to you so long. Few of this vast congregation had been born when he whose body lies before us began his active ministry. He received the parents of many of you into the church, baptized your households, and buried your dead. In the power of the Spirit he has preached repentance and pointed to the cross of Christ. He has promoted good and restrained evil; reclaimed the erring, comforted the mourner, and instructed the ignorant. In every form, by wise precept and by spotless example, he has shown unto you the way of salvation. In perplexity you sought him for counsel; in trouble, for sympathy; in want, for help. His exceeding common sense and great kindness of heart never failed you.

While he has gone to give his account to the Master, we may well take account of our loss, in such a servant.

He laid himself out for the benefit of "his own generation" and this, and the way he did it, we may well believe, was according to the will of God. He lived not for himself, neither did he project his benevolence so far into the uncertain future as to die a debtor to the age he lived in. That man best serves the generation following—starts it off upon a higher plane—who serves well his own. Providence indicates, herein, where duty lies. The gifts which suit one age may not suit another. The peculiar talents with which his Maker endowed our deceased brother he used, and none others. He was always himself, and not another man—unique, original, strong, and fresh to the last. Thus he made exactly the contribution to the welfare of the world that was needed—a contribution that other generations may not need in the same form or degree, but of which they will ever be the beneficiaries.

John Berry McFerrin was born in Rutherford county, Tenn., June 15, 1807, and "fell on sleep" at his home in Nashville, in the bosom of a loved and loving family, at 12:55 o'clock A. M., May 10, 1887. He was of Scotch-Irish descent. His grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier, and his father, James McFerrin, served well under Gen. Jackson in the war of 1812. Converted about the same time with his son, James McFerrin became a minister and a member of the Tennessee Annual Conference two years before him; and after efficient service died in the prime of life. His mother, to whom he owed, and delighted to acknowledge, much, died a few years ago at the advanced age of ninety-three.

By request of the Conference, Dr. McFerrin preached, October, 1875, a semi-centennial sermon during the session at Shelbyville, where, in 1825, he had been admitted on trial. The beginning of his spiritual life, and its principal stages of activity were thus stated by himself in that discourse:

On the twentieth of August, 1820, I was converted at a Methodist prayer meeting in Rutherford county, Tenn. Two weeks afterward, in company with my father and mother, I united with the Methodists. This was a surprise to our neighbors, for they regarded the family as Presbyterian. Soon after we connected ourselves with the Methodists I was called upon to pray in public. When about sixteen years of age I was appointed a class leader. My father having removed to Alabama, and erected a meeting house and camp ground on his land, a large society was soon raised up, and I was put in charge as the principal leader. August 1, 1824, I was licensed to exhort by William McMahon, presiding elder of the Huntsville district, my father being the preacher in charge of the circuit. On October 8, 1825, I was licensed to preach. The next month I was received on probation into the Tennessee Conference, which convened in Shelbyville, Bishops Roberts and Soule presiding. I was appointed, with Finch B. Scruggs, to a circuit embracing Tuscumbia, Russellville, and the counties adjacent. (The Tennessee Conference then extended into North Alabama.) My second year was to the Lawrence circuit, embracing Courtland, Moulton, Decatur, Somerville, and the counties around—Alexander Sale being my senior. At the end of this year I was ordained deacon by Bishop Soule. My third and fourth years were devoted to missionary work in the Cherokee Nation. At the end of my fourth year I was ordained elder by Bishop Roberts, and appointed, with W. L. McAlister, to the Limestone circuit, embracing the country west of Huntsville, in Madison county, and the whole of Limestone county, Ala. My sixth year I was appointed to the Huntsville station; my seventh year (1831) I labored in the Nashville station, as the colleague of L. D. Overall. My eighth year I was agent for La Grange College. In 1833 I was sent to Pulaski station, where I remained two years. I was then returned to Nashville; then to the Florence district; then two years to the Cumberland district, embracing Gallatin and Clarksville; back again to Nashville; and in the autumn of 1840 I was elected editor of the Christian Advocate. In that office I was continued till May, 1858, when I was elected Book Agent. This office, with the appointment of missionary to the Army of Tennessee, I held eight years. Since 1866 I have been secretary of the Board of Missions. Thus, three years on circuits, two years among the Indians, six years in stations, three years presiding elder, nearly eighteen years editor, eight years Book Agent and missionary to the army, and nearly nine years secretary, make out my fifty years.

The general minutes for 1825 show, in other Annual Conferences of the connection, such beginners for that year as Geo. C. Cookman, Levi Scott, Charles M. Holliday, Eugene V. Leveret, George M. Roberts, Edgerton Ryerson, and others who, after obtaining a good report through faith, have been so long dead that they seem to belong to another generation. Bishop Soule, who submitted the name of the unknown young man to the Conference for acceptance, was then on his second episcopal round. This semi-centennial sermon takes as a little further back:

When I united with the Methodists they had not a denominational school in operation in the United States. In 1819 the first missionary society was organized in the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. The next year, 1820, the year I joined the church, the receipts were $822 24. In 1874 the two divisions collected nearly $900,000, besides the hundreds of thousands collected in other bodies of Methodism in America.

In 1820 there were in North America 904 traveling preachers, 256,881 white and colored members. This included Canada. I have lived to see the time when the same church, in her two grand divisions, leaving off Canada, numbers: traveling preachers, 14,330; local preachers, 18,962; members, 2,262,285.

These items help us to realize the important historic space covered by this man's life and ministry. He was no idle spectator of what was passing, but had a hand in making up the record of those eventful years. Beginning with that held in Cincinnati, in 1836, he was a member of thirteen General Conferences consecutively; also, a member of the Convention of 1845.

On his first coming to Nashville (1831) the church here had 402 white members and 305 colored. At the same time F. A. Owen was stationed in the village of Memphis, on the Chickasaw Bluffs: Robert Paine was for the second year "superintendent of La Grange College;" David O. Shattuck was at Brownsville, A. L. P. Green at Franklin, and Fountain E. Pitts on the Nashville circuit—the two last named having entered Conference a year before him. Referring to contemporary events, Andrew Jackson was in the stormy period of his first presidential administration; James K. Polk was a rising young Congressman; and Andrew Johnson, the great commoner, having learned to read and cipher on the tailor's board, had just been elected mayor of the village of Greeneville. The waters of Cumberland river were occasionally stirred by a steamboat, affording rapid transportation to New Orleans within ten days. Not a mile of macadamized turnpike existed in the State, while railroads and tunnels were not dreamed of.

That John B. McFerrin was an important factor in the moral and material development of his native State none will question. In three potent ways he wrought, for sixty years—by the pulpit, the press, and the platform—most potent of all ways; and he was forceful in each. Such a ministry, it is readily seen, must directly and permanently influence the moral character of the public. Its material development is also promoted indirectly, but none the less powerfully, by the same agency. Where public opinion is right; where honesty, truth and social purity dwell, there life and property are safe; there the rewards of industry are sure; there commerce is nourished, and population gathers. It is impossible for such a man to leave the world no better, no richer, and on no higher plane, than he found it.

He has not merely lived, but acted, through two generations of rapid transformations—inheriting the sturdy strength, the simple manners, the energy and sagacity of the first, and taking on no small degree of the breadth and culture of the second. To the end he was employed in great trusts. There had been no intermission, no superannuation. Such was his diligence that he was always gaining influence; and so steady and prudent was he, he never lost any. No Tennessean was more loved and revered at home or abroad. The people claimed him as one of themselves. His style, address, and mode of thought were to their liking. He impressed them as an honest man; they believed what he said; they felt his sympathy; and they followed where he led. If a politician, he would have been unequaled as a stump-speaker; if a demagogue, he would have been dangerous; in either character, invincible. If a man of worldly business, he would have been thrifty. But, by the grace of God, he was none of these. All his zeal, hopes, labors, and aspirations were in the church and for the church. He turned not aside, to the right hand or to the left: He was simply a Methodist preacher, drawing all his cares and studies this way.

Of large frame, heavy features, and standing squarely upon his feet, John B. McFerrin was the typical Western man, regenerated by Christianity. His education began in the old-field schools of boyhood, and was continued by books and object-lessons through life. His cast was practical, not poetical or rhetorical—unlike his eloquent contemporary, Pitts. He saw things as a whole, not in their component parts, and judged of their relations as by intuition. Abstract thought was a weariness; if not an impossibility, to him. The power was not his of considering the single properties and qualities of things apart, of analyzing and then combining them in new forms, thus leading to invention. He was, therefore, slow to admit changes of any sort. In these respects he was unlike his great contemporary, Green. He was against all "new-fangled notions," and constitutionally conservative—perhaps to excess. He preferred to work the old plans and to get the best results out of them. An innovation must be clearly safe and very clearly an improvement before he could accept it. He could hardly conceive of it until he saw it in operation. Woe to the antagonist whom he encountered when defending "Old Methodism."

His attitude toward every material modification of church economy among us has been, first, that of suspicion, if not of downright opposition at its introduction. When adopted, he put it on trial and watched its working; then, if it worked well, he espoused it, and became a wall of defense against any who would disturb it. That caution of Solomon he habitually observed—"Meddle not with them that are given to change."

Who will say that such a contribution to ecclesiastical legislation was not valuable in this nineteenth century?

The confidence of his brethren in his honesty, his intuitive sagacity, and the safety born of his conservatism, was well illustrated in this city during the General Conference of 1858. A new departure was inaugurated in Publishing House matters by the committee in charge of that interest. The member who led in the proposed scheme was bold and inventive, but slightly doctrinaire. Various depositories were to be established, and agencies here and there, to enlarge and expand the circulation of religious literature for the benefit and on the credit of the church. The measure passed, and it was generally understood that the author of it was to be Book Agent to carry it out, and that certain others were to occupy subordinate places. But, as they thought over what they had done, members became afraid of their plan; and when the election came on, and ballots were counted, the whole slate was broken by the majority of votes being cast for J. B. McFerrin as Book Agent. On adjournment I exchanged views with a venerable member on the unexpected result, and his remark may be taken as representative: "Well, I voted for that plan, but the more I thought on it the less I liked it—too complicated. It may do finely, and then again it may ruin everything. But McFerrin, we know him. He can pull, and if it's necessary, he can hold back powerfully, and he will hold back if there's danger."

A strange sight that was—the General Conference correcting, modifying, and almost nullifying, its dubious legislation by putting one man in charge of the business for four years following.

It was much the same case at Atlanta, in 1878. We had lay delegates then to help us—a help we had not twenty years before. But after fullest investigation of liabilities and assets, and the best legislative contrivance, there was painful suspense as to the fate of the Publishing House. Again McFerrin to the front. Not that he was fertile in invention, but he could be relied on to carry out whatever an able Book Committee, with enlarged powers, devised. When Mr. Nathaniel Baxter, Jr., of that committee, took me aside and opened the 4 per cent. bond plan, on long time, I first saw light. The United States government had already adopted the plan and made it popular and familiar to the people. But, how to place the bonds for $350,000! Creditors were clamorous, and the sheriff was at the door. The church could not repudiate just debts. Her voice, ever after, in preaching justice, honesty, and truth, would be like a cracked bell. To sacrifice present assets, and leave liabilities unprovided for, was to entail worrying collections throughout the connection for years, and so to disgust and drive away the public from our churches. The prospect was gloomy enough.

With a well-matured plan Dr. McFerrin went forth. Now was his power with the people seen. He opened the campaign at the Western Virginia Conference, then one of our smallest and weakest. I heard him state his case and present his plea, and watched the effect with an interest I can not describe. It was soon evident that he had the jury. But did the jury have the money! He rang the changes on old Methodism and what it had done for them and for their fathers; touched up their patriotism by allusions to losses and damages through the war, his client being a sufferer in common with themselves; showed that relief was possible, and failure would be shameful. He enlivened the discussion with anecdote, and clinched it with argument, and at the opportune moment offered his bonds. Two generous farmers (brothers) on the south side of the Ohio took a thousand dollars' worth at par. Others followed with less sums; and the preachers, as they always do, came up promptly with twenty and fifty and a hundred. When the hand-shaking was over, the speaker looked like a victor; and so he was. From that day I never doubted that the bonds would go and the House be saved. He pursued the campaign, going through the Conferences until the work was done. Who that saw and heard can ever forget that dramatic scene, in which he represented the Bishops and superannuated and other preachers and their wives, and the official members, all assembled on the public square of Nashville, and the crier, with "one, two, three—l-a-s-t call," swinging down his hammer upon the Southern Methodist Publishing House? Those who heard and laughed and wept, said, "No, that must never be"—and they took the bonds.

Under his administration as Missionary Secretary a debt was paid that was heavy and depressing for those times. And yet the least success of his life was during the years he was at the head of the Missionary Bureau. The position was not suited to him. Enterprising new fields and selecting, from untried men, proper agents for opening and occupying those fields, involved experiment and adventures; and he was not adventurous. The changing aspects of times and places, in those unsteady years from 1866 to 1878, required new measures and expedients to meet exigencies; and, as he lacked the analytic faculty, invention was not his forte. True, he was strong on the platform: his speeches at missionary anniversaries were popular; he lifted large collections. But imitation is the homage unconsciously paid to genius, and the imitators of Dr. McFerrin's speeches, though numerous, were not successful or edifying. A broad and steady missionary movement in the church must be based on a quickening of the public conscience on information, rather than on entertainment. Not one worker that crowds a house upon announcement is wanted, but thousands of earnest men and women must be put to work systematically for cause, where no applauding audiences greet the advocate of missions. When a plan was devised to apportion the old war debt among the several Annual Conferences, according to an accepted ratio, he took the field and worked it so well that the missionary debt was paid.

As a public speaker, you know how ready and effective he was. The substance of discourse was sometimes premeditated in paragraphs, but not the words or style. Stimulus, rather than preparation, was what he required for success. His resources were at command. He took hints from the occasion; and the suggestion of circumstances was his main reliance. Who ever saw him, when pressed in debate, at a loss for a reply? The more he was interrupted, the more he was at himself. Those who injected questions at him on the floor made nothing by it, so easily could he turn everything that happened, and everything that was said, to his own advantage. Whether in social discussion or in deliberative assemblies, his power of repartee was formidable. Cicero's famous treatise, De Oratore, puts this among the "peculiar gifts of nature"—"a talent," says the master of Roman eloquence, "which appears to be incapable of being communicated by teaching." Cicero, after discoursing on this rare, quick, and terrible weapon of the orator through several chapters, and making on the reader the impression that he coveted the gift for himself, adds: "It is one of the things in which, unless the orator has a full supply from nature, he can not be much assisted by a master." If John B. McFerrin could not meet an argument, he parried it so skillfully that the crowd felt that he had met it, and cheered accordingly. A look, an attitude, an inflection of the voice, did the work effectually. A facetious remark or pathetic play on collateral issues, was unanswerable. Sharp wit, overwhelming drollery, unfailing humor, cheapened the adversary or broke the force of a logical lance. While he could see and appreciate the strong points of his cause, and could strongly urge them, he did not always resist the temptation to win victory by lighter and natural auxiliaries. But he never used that dangerous weapon maliciously. Often his own hand was first to pour in oil where it had made a wound. He was naturally cautious and modest, and yet a consciousness of this gift made him bold.

His ministry of the gospel was faithful and fruitful. The mission among the Indians was like a golden thread of poetry worked into his early life. At Chickamauga and Ross' Landing, where Chattanooga now stands; at the junction of Etowah and Oostanaula rivers, where Rome, Ga., now is; and at Gunter's Landing, were his principal appointments. I remember that once we ascended Lookout Mountain together, and he pointed out, with vivid reminiscences, some scenes of his mission life among the Cherokees. The chief, John Ross, he baptized and received into the church, doubtless with the same simplicity that he performed the like offices for ex-President Polk, a quarter of a century later. We traveled together through the Indian Nation some years ago, visiting the missions west of the Mississippi. A night was spent in a Cherokee home. The mother, who was also a grandmother, of the family was drawn into conversation

Her maiden name was Gunter, born on the Tennessee river. The names of her father and brothers were given, and of the missionaries who had preached to them before they left the "old nation" for the Western reservation. The conversation drew on to the climax of mutual recognition. "Katie Gunter," said the Missionary Secretary, "don't you know me?" "No, sir." "My name is John B. McFerrin." The Indian woman rested her hand on his knee for a moment, gazed intently into his face, and then in an abandon of joy fell upon his neck, and wept aloud. She was one of his converts, and still maintained her integrity.

As chaplain in the army, he was very useful. A stump or wagon served as his ready pulpit wherever the soldiers halted to rest or camp. In the hospital, or on the march, he was pastor, friend, nurse. Many seals to his ministry bear the date of those sad years. He introduced me at one session of an Annual Conference to two ministers, efficient and promising men, saying: "There are two of my boys, converted while Confederate soldiers; and there are a heap more of 'em. Hallelujah!" His final ministerial service was at the funeral of the late Rev. William Burr, whom he had licensed to preach forty-odd years ago. It was a race between them, like that of Peter and John, which should first reach the sepulchre. They lay on their death-beds, sending messages of love and Christian confidence to each other by telephone. The saintly Burr reached the grave first, and his aged companion rallied to bury him. "There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body," saith St. Paul. I entertain myself with thinking of the great hand-shaking that has been going on in paradise since Bro. McFerrin left us, as he greets, on the other shore, the thousands who have been awakened, converted, reclaimed, edified by his ministry, and helped on their way to that better country where now he has joined them. His old companions and his spiritual children are there to welcome him into everlasting habitations. White people, negroes, Indians—the small and the great are there—enjoying with him their release and "full felicity."

He was one of the few men whose preaching improved with time. Borne up by a wonderful constitution and will-power, he went around attending the Annual Conferences, at the rate of ten or twenty a year, selling books, making collections, and throwing off those inimitable speeches on various church interests of which the brethren could never get enough. There was an increasing unction. Even an ordinary business notice, in his later days, often left the Conference in tears and raptures, because of the spiritual peroration that unconsciously attached itself to a talk about plain dollar-and-cent accounts. Men observed that he was ripening for heaven. Some of his sermons at the Conferences, these last dozen years, were extraordinarily melting. He kept up the habit of the fathers—mixing experience with the exposition. His stock themes were sin, repentance, faith, regeneration, and salvation for all through Jesus. They were good enough for him; and his exactness of definition and distinction on these Divine topics was, to the last, a grateful surprise to those who crowded to hear him. In theology he held that what was new was not true, and what was true was not new; it was a revelation rather than a science. Without relaxing diligence in earthly things, he was coming daily more and more under the influence of things invisible and eternal. The attraction of the world to come grew evidently stronger; his speed quickened as he drew near the end. The personal Savior, the love of the Spirit, and his own deeper experiences of grace, were themes he most readily fell into conversation about.

I have spoken of him as a Tennessean, because his native State, I dare assert, has not produced a man better known, more beloved, and for rare combination of moral and mental power and wealth of character, his superior. But, far beyond the lines of his State and Conference he was esteemed. In the great synods of the church he was watchful and eminent. He represented American Methodism in the Ecumenical Conference which met in London, 1881. At the Centennial in Baltimore, 1884, Southern Methodism had in him her most eminent representative. No figure in that body of holy and picked men was more honorably conspicuous, no voice more eagerly heard, and no presence more respectfully greeted than Dr. McFerrin's. He was selected to respond to the address of welcome, and met that and every occasion, whether of counsel, discussion, banquet, devotion, or farewell greeting, with prompt and felicitous address. To him it was a joyous occasion. His soul overflowed with its bountiful fellowship.

We mourn not alone. In the North as in the South; in Canada and beyond the seas, in the foreign mission stations and along the wide frontiers, they weep with us to-day.

He grew old gracefully: a hard test. It has been well said that old age is, itself, a kind of day of judgment. Now begins the reaping of what has been sown; now begins the harvest of youth and middle life. The selfish are left without friends; the penurious are devoured by full-grown avarice; the meanly-ambitious are embittered by disappointment; and all evil passions and habits consume their victim in a helpless old age. Pitiable sight! But not so with one who has not lived to himself. "At evening time there shall be light." The temper mellows; peace flows as a river; children and friends crown the hoary head with love and reverence; temperate habits, chastened passions, and Christian hopes smooth the present and throw their light on the future. Even those alienations caused by conflicting interests and honest differences of opinion with our fellow-men find an end in the vindications of time, for, "when a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him."

Our deceased brother had a happy old age. "I will not, the Lord helping me, become sour and sore-headed," he once said to me, on observing the case of a friend who acidulated as he aged. Then, bending half down, removing his hat, and showing the full crown of his bald head—"Do you see any sore place there?" If he spent a few days as the Conference guest with a family, it was an era with that household—including children and servants.

The Lord blessed his servant in his home life. In 1833 he was married to Miss Probart. Their married life was blessed with six children, three of whom survive. Mrs. McFerrin died while her husband was attending the session of the General Conference in Columbus, Ga., May, 1854.

He was again married to Miss McGavock, a member of the family of McGavocks so well known in Virginia and Middle Tennessee. Of this marriage were born two daughters. These five children, with nineteen grandchildren, made his domestic life complete. In 1880 the oldest son, James W., was killed in a railroad accident. He was visiting a Conference in Texas when the sad news reached him. The "stroke was heavier than his complaint." In the last few delirious days he was overheard talking with "Jimmy." All his children and grandchildren of twelve years and upward are members of the Methodist Church. Wife and children, sons-in-law and daughters-in-law within the fold; all his business wound up and papers signed; the new church under roof where his family worship; the Publishing House safe; and 75,000 members added to the church this year—he was ready to say with Simeon: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace."

Over a year ago he was sick, as was thought, unto death. When doctors and nurses gave him up, he persisted that though it might be so that he was going to die, he did not feel as he had supposed a dying man would. His work was not yet done. He strangely recovered. But when this last sickness came he held a different language: "My work seems to be done; my eyes and my hearing fail; the old tabernacle is giving way." The Master was closing the doors and shutting the windows, thus saying to his servant: "Arise and depart, for this is not your rest."

He took the warning kindly. The prospect was unclouded. Indeed, he remarked to me that his trouble now was to keep from being impatient to go. The language of his soul was: "Now, Lord, what wait I for? My hope is in thee."

I found him one day rejoicing over a portion of Holy Scripture that had been read to him by a preceding visitor (II Corinthians iv and v). "I understand it better than ever. Portions of the Bible come back to me that I had forgotten." And he fed on that word.

At another time I found his son reading hymns to him out of the Unabridged Hymn Book, and he would have me read a few that he indicated by subject or title. Among them—

"Lo, on a narrow neck of land,
'Twixt two unbounded seas I stand."

And this:

"Rise my soul, and stretch thy wings,
Thy better portion trace."

Then, gathering in the family, he asked that—

"And let this feeble body fail,
And let it droop or die," be sung to a familiar tune. It was done, his nephew leading. At the conclusion of the stanza,

"Give joy or grief, give ease or pain,
Take life or friends away—
I come to find them all again
In that eternal day," he praised God and exulted. "Nothing like our old hymns," he exclaimed. "I hope the Committee (on Revision of the hymn book, then in session) will spare those dear old hymns on doctrine and experience that the Wesleys gave us." This charge he gave me, with emphasis: "Those little songs about 'Sweet By-and-By,' and 'Shall we know each other there!' and the like, may all be very nice, but don't you let any of them be sung at my funeral."

His last sermon was preached in Arkansas, near his mother's grave, to which, with filial piety, he had made pilgrimage. (Text, I Corinthians xv, 58.) He has helped to build, and pay out of debt, many churches for others. His last begging speech was made in this pulpit, for help to build the church in which he and his family worship. His last contribution to the press was an article in the Christian Advocate, insisting on the value of a systematic statement of theology and vindicating creeds. He has been an anchor to many who were ready to drift before every wind of doctrine. Eminent service he rendered his generation at this point. May there be no need of such service in the future!

I have spoken of him as a Methodist. In a high sense, he belonged to all Christ's people. With Charles Wesley he could say:

"And fellowship with all we hold,
Who hold it with our Head."

He loved Methodism, her creed and polity; but he loved, and was beloved by, members of other churches as few men have been.

On May 2, he called his son-in-law, the presiding elder of Murfreesboro district, to his bedside to receive a last message to the Tennessee Conference:

Tell them to hold fast to our articles of belief, justification by faith, the witness of the Spirit, and holiness of heart and life.

Tell them I forgive all who may have injured me at any time, and I ask forgiveness if at any time I have wounded a brother. Evil may have followed where evil was not intended: if so, I ask forgiveness.

I love the Tennessee Conference. I die in peace with them and all men, and in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the love of God, and in expectation of eternal life.

Again, tell the brethren I love every one of them.

His words, two weeks ago, to his son who has charge of a circuit twenty miles away, and had been summoned to see him die, are most expressive of character: "My son, I feel a little stronger, and you had better return and fill your appointment to-morrow. If while you are away, John, I should happen to slip off, you know where to find me."

He has gone, my friends and brethren: we shall behold him no more in this world. He has gone; we ne'er shall see his like again. John B. McFerrin has gone—BUT YOU KNOW WHERE TO FIND HIM. Amen!

At the conclusion of this admirable discourse, the large congregation assembled to honor the memory of the old Methodist hero sang with feeling:

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ:
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

In this issue of the ADVOCATE will be seen the advertisement of Hygeia Hotel, located at Citronelle, Ala. This delightful little city is just the place for a quiet sojourn for a few months during the heated term. There are good Sunday-schools and church privileges, and, being a prohibition town, rest and quiet is assured. Dr. J. G. Michael is at the head of affairs at Hygeia, and will make all guests his friends, in the way of looking to their comfort and pleasure.

Notice.

The Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi Conference will convene at Grenada, the evening of June 30. We hope to have a profitable, interesting meeting, and believe it is of vital importance that each auxiliary should be represented. All delegates, ministers and friends who intend to be with us are requested to notify at their earliest convenience.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—Cottage No. 75 for sale. W. B. Thomson, 64 to 70 South Rampart St., New Orleans.

"Yes, sir," remarked the veteran proudly, "I was in ten engagements—all Southern girls, too."

ROGERS & MAHER.—In another column will be seen the advertisement of Rogers & Maher's patented Automatic Ice Cream Freezer. This is simply ice cream without labor. Insist on seeing this freezer before taking any other.

"Luxuries are high this year," said the small boy as he climbed for the preserves on the upper shelf.

A PLAIN STATEMENT.—Elsewhere may be seen the advertisement of the great piano dealer, Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street. Certainly he has every reason to feel proud over the great popularity of the celebrated Mathushek Pianos. Some sixteen years ago he introduced here these celebrated instruments, and they have been tested and are pronounced superior in every respect. The prices and terms of this popular piano dealer are such as to attract all buyers. Mr. Werlein has also a number of cheap pianos and organs at such low prices that you would be surprised after seeing them. Write or apply to this great Piano House, and you will see what a bargain you can get.

Do not fail to read the statement of the New Orleans National Bank. No safer institution in the South for your deposits; and no more agreeable officers for transacting business with can be found anywhere.

In another column will be seen the advertisement of W. R. Stuart, offering a special inducement on choice strains of Plymouth Rock chickens and settings.

A good memory should always be cultivated when ordering stationery to remember to include some of Esterbrook's Steel Pens.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

We would again call the attention of subscribers and agents that, in making remittances, to make them payable to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Please keep this in remembrance.

Ditson & Co.'s Sunday School Music

ranks with the very best, and no Sunday School management should adopt a new Singing Book without carefully examining one of their "tried and true." Sunday School Song Books.

Voices of Praise (40 cts., $4.20 per doz.) Rev. C. L. Ulrichs. Music and poetry dignified and classical, but not dull; in fact, bright and enthusiastic. Very large collection for the money.

Singing on the Way (35 cts., $3.60 per doz.) by Mrs. Jewett, ably assisted by Dr. Hollibrook, whose noble compositions are known and loved by all the churches. This, like the book above mentioned, does excellently well for a Vestry Singing Book for prayer and praise meetings.

Songs of Promise (35 cts., $3.60 per doz.) J. H. Tenney and Rev. E. A. Hoffman—the first highly gifted, musically, and the second the author of many hymns of refined and beautiful quality. One of the newest books.

Song Worship (35 cts., $3.60 per doz.) L. O. Emerson and W. F. Sherwin, both celebrated compilers, composers and leaders, and the latter well-known as having had charge of the music at many Chautauqua meetings.

For other good books, please send for lists and catalogues.

For a lovely little book for the young children of a Sunday School, look no further than FRESH FLOWERS (25 cts., $2.40 per doz.) Emma Pitt. Sweet Hymns, Sweet Music, Pretty Pictures.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

Dyspepsia Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Rheumatism Is undoubtedly a blood disease caused by an excess of the lactic acid in the blood. Where there is perfect filtration of the blood there can be no rheumatism. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA will remove the poison, supply the acids and relieve the pains.

Scrofula is caused directly by impurities in the blood, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, by purifying the blood, forces the impurities from the system.

Kidneys Through the Kidneys flow the waste fluid containing poisonous matter. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing pain in the small of the back and loins, flushes of heat, chills. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic, causing the kidneys to resume their natural functions.

The Liver By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhœa, languid, weary feeling. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood resolvent.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Infections, while more or less common at all seasons, are more than usually prevalent during the present month, and the various preparations of worm seeds, which are manufactured all over the country, but their short lease of life is clearly evidenced, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and sprouts are most frequently the result of these hidden suppers and inmates. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy; therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for as surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your Vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.

Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. H. HANDY, M. D.

A BED-TIME SONG.

Sway to and fro in the twilight gray,
This is the ferry for Shadowtown;
It always sails at the end of day,
Just as the darkness is closing down.

Rest, little head, on my shoulder, so:
A sleepy kiss is the only fare:
Drifting away from the world we go,
Baby and I in the rocking-chair.

See, where the fire-logs glow and spark,
Glitter the lights of the Shadowland:
The winter rain on the window—hark!
Are ripples lapping upon its strand.

There, where the mirror is glancing dim,
A lake lies shimmering, cool and still:
Blossoms are waving above its brim—
Those over there on the window-sill.

Rock slow, more slow, in the dusky light;
Silently lower the anchor down.
Dear little passenger say, "Good-night,"
We've reached the harbor of Shadowtown.

—St. Nicholas.

Mr. Editor: I have heard the letters from the little cousins read, and was so much pleased that I thought I would write one. Now, Mr. Editor, this is the first letter I have ever written to a newspaper; so if you please, do not throw it into that horrible waste-basket. I am a little boy, not seven years old yet. I like your paper very much. I take a great deal of interest in the missionary cause, and save all my dimes and nickles to send to the heathen. I saved three dollars last year and sent the money to China. I am trying to save more this year. Maybe after awhile I can send $40 a year, and then I can have a boy named for me. When I am a man, if God calls me to preach, I think I should like to be a missionary. Mother and father are Methodists, and sister and I go to Sunday-school. Dr. Woodward is our pastor, and we like him very much. I have a question to ask the cousins: What king's (of Israel) hand was withered as he stretched it forth and ordered his servants to "lay hold" on one of God's prophets? If I see this in the ADVOCATE, I will write again.

Yours respectfully,

HILL HUDSON.

VAZOO CITY, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: The ADVOCATE has been a weekly visitor at our house for many years; but I have never offered a contribution to the children's column before, as I rather dread the waste-basket. There are only two white families living here besides our's: Uncle Tom, who is the bookkeeper at the store, and Mr. Drummond, the manager of the farm. There are very few children, and we have rather dull times. I have attended to mamma's chickens for several years, as she has had bad health. I have at present one hundred and twenty-six little ones. Not long ago one of the little cousins said Abraham and Jacob were Isaac's brothers; but Abraham was Isaac's father, and Jacob his son. I will close by answering Labell Gurry's and Wilmer Brothers' question. It was Joseph who was sold by his brothers to an Egyptian caravan. I will ask, Who cursed David when he was fleeing from his son Absalom?

Your little friend,

CHARLIE JONES.

REFUGE, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: I am a little girl eleven years old. I have two sisters. I am the youngest. I go to Prof. S. S. Robinson. He is a good teacher, and loved by all his pupils. We have preaching and Sunday-school every Sunday; gospel meetings every Sunday evening, and prayer meeting every Monday and Wednesday nights. Bro. J. W. Later is our pastor. He has been with us two years. W. H. Boothe is our Sunday-school superintendent. My uncle, Dr. Z. G. Pou, takes your paper. I will answer Ida L. Ellington's question. Christ preached his first sermon on a mountain. (Matthew v.)

Your little friend,

EDNA A. HARDY.

COURTLAND, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: I am a little boy ten years old. I can not write myself, but have to get one of my older brothers to write this for me. Last summer I picked 100 pounds of cotton in a day. I weigh about forty-five pounds: and, Mr. Editor, you ought to hear me play "Sweet By-and-By" on a French harp. I think, Miss Annie L. Wilson, that you can not kill twenty-five hogs at four killings, and kill an odd number at each killing, having four killing days. Mr. Editor, I have two sweet little brothers without names. Will you, Mr. Editor, please send me some pretty names for them. Good-by for this time.

GARNETT A. GLOVER.

NEW PROSPECT, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: As I never see any letters from this place, I thought I would write one. I am a little boy nine years old and am not used to writing to a great newspaper like our CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Mamma says she can not do without our good paper, so she will send on her subscription soon. Our new preacher has been to see us once this year. He talked so good to me that I like him very much. He is always the largest and finest-looking man in the church. I live in town now, but much rather live in the country, so that I can ride horses to water and enjoy other sports. I shall be glad to see a letter from my Bogue Chitto friends in the ADVOCATE. I have never been to school much away from home. I study fifth reader, grammar, spelling, geography and arithmetic. I will now answer Sallie Seaman's question. It was Samson who slew more in his death than he slew in his life. Now, I will ask a question: Where in the Bible are the words "light-bread" and "cucumber" found. I hope to hear from some of the little cousins soon.

Your little friend,

LUCIUS MARSHALL.

Catarrh, Hay or Rose Fever.

The cleansing, soothing and healing properties of Dr. Hays' Prophylactic Fluid are experienced in the treatment and cure of Catarrh and kindred complaints. The fluid soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and removes the offensive odor that characterizes the disease. Should the inflammation have reached the throat use the fluid as a gargle to allay the inflammation and to disinfect.

Mr. Editor: My mamma takes your valuable paper, and it is a welcome visitor to our fireside. I have seen no letters from this part of the State from the little folks, and have concluded to write one myself. I live near Mooringsport, a little village situated on the banks of Terry Lake. It is a beautiful lake; and steamboats visit it every winter and spring. We have a nice church here, too. Rev. J. S. Sanders is our pastor. This is his second year with us. We all love him very much. I am going to school. My studies are geography, arithmetic, history and composition. Our teacher requires us to repeat a verse from the Bible every morning. I will answer Lutie Hood's question. "Bridegroom" is found in Matthew xxv. I will also answer Sallie Seaman's question. It was Samson that killed more at his death than in his lifetime. Now, I will ask the little cousins a question: Where did Jesus get tribute money? If this does not go to that waste-basket, I will be encouraged to write again. Accept many good wishes for yourself and the dear old ADVOCATE.

Mr. Editor: We have been taking your paper only a short time, but I take great interest in the children's department. I am only five years of age, and I can read well and write some. I hope in a short while to be able to write to you without aid. I have a dear little brother. I call him "Bip." I have no pets except him. We have a large Sabbath-school here. My aunt is my teacher; and I always try to know my lessons. I do not go to school; but my mamma teaches me at home. I study reading, writing, spelling and arithmetic. The District Conference meets here; and I am glad, for I will get to see a good many preachers. When I write again, I will tell you about the tea-parties that we little girls have. I am,

What the impression on the yielding wax is to the image on the seal, the life of a faithful believer is to the precepts of the Lord Jesus. What is written in them is visible in his tempers and actions. Hence he may so yield himself to the pressure of that Divine seal as to be transformed by it into such spiritual beauty that as it was with Stephen, the proto-martyr—

"Men will behold his angel face
All radiant with celestial grace."

This radiance is often visible on the faces of dying saints. Why is it not seen more frequently than it is on the features of living, active men?—Zion's Herald.

COMMON SALT.—The power of the soda used in cooking to relieve the pain of burns is now extensively known. Its usefulness is enhanced by its being so common as to be usually within reach. Somewhat akin to this is the efficacy of table-salt in certain forms of inflammation. It is a remedy that finds a place in nearly all countries and households.

But the very fact that these articles are so familiar in domestic use makes it difficult to regard them as powerful remedies. It would be quite otherwise if they were rare, and could be obtained only of the druggist. It may not be amiss, therefore, to refer to what is marvelous in their chemical composition.

The base, or fundamental element, in each is the same—a most wonderful metal, which burns with an intense flame when heated to a temperature twenty-two degrees less than that of boiling water. This metal is sodium. Combine it in the proper proportion with carbonic acid—the gas thrown off from burning coal—and "soda," or, more properly, bi-carbonate of soda, is produced. Let it combine with chlorine, which forms, in chemical union with lime, one of our most powerful disinfectants, and we have the familiar salt of our tables.

It should be impressed on the minds of our readers that there is the highest medical authority for the statement that there is nothing better than common salt for any ordinary inflammation of the throat, mouth, or nasal passages. Dissolve a dessert spoonful in a coffee-cup, and gargle the solution, or snuff it up the nose until it comes out into the back-mouth. Repeat two or three times a day until cured.

Dr. Thackery, of Philadelphia, has found that salt is effective in the most violent attacks of erysipelas, and, moreover, leaves no unsightly scars behind. He uses a saturated solution—that is as strong as it can be made—and simply keeps the parts covered with a cloth wet with it. At the same time he cools the system with a dose of Epsom salts, mixed with lemon juice, and orders a light farinaceous diet.—Youth's Companion.

HEALTH "DON'TS."—Don't neglect your house-drains, nor the drainage about your house. The first consideration of family health is a dry and sweet atmosphere. With dry walls, dry cellar, and drains that carry off refuse without letting in foul gases, half the battle for good health is won.

Don't let your wells or springs be infected by drainage, or from other causes. Pure drinking-water is indispensable for health at home, or anywhere.

Don't keep the sun out of your living and sleeping-rooms. Sunlight is absolutely necessary for a right condition of the atmosphere that we breathe, and for our bodily well-being.

Don't sleep in the same flannels that you wear during the day.

Don't wear thin socks or light-soled shoes in cold, or wet weather.

Don't catch cold. Catching cold is much more preventable than is generally supposed. A person in good physical condition is not liable to colds, and will not fall a victim to them unless he is grossly careless. Keep the feet warm and dry; the head cool, the bowels and chest well protected; avoid exposure with an empty stomach; take care not to cool off too rapidly when heated; keep out of draughts; wear flannels, and with the exercise of a little common sense in various emergencies, colds will be rare. If colds were a penal offence, we should soon find a way to prevent them.

Martyrs to Headache

Seek relief in vain, until they begin to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Then they regret the years of suffering they might have escaped had they tried this remedy earlier. The trouble was constitutional not local; and, until Ayer's Sarsaparilla did its effective work as an Alterative and Blood Purifier, they were compelled to suffer.

The wife of Samuel Page, 21 Austin st., Lowell, Mass., was, for a long time, subject to severe headaches, the result of stomach and liver disorders. A perfect cure has been effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frank Roberts, 727 Washington st., Boston, says that he formerly had terrible headaches, and until he took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, never found any medicine that would give Permanent Relief.

"Every Spring, for years," writes Lizzie W. DeVean, 262 Fifteenth st., Brooklyn, N. Y., "I have had intolerable headaches. I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla last March, and have not had a headache since that time."

"I suffered from headache, indigestion, and debility, and was hardly able to drag myself about the house," writes Mrs. M. M. Lewis, of A st., Lowell, Mass. "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has worked a marvelous change in my case. I now feel strong and well as ever."

Jonas Garman, Esq., of Lykins, Pa., writes: "For years I have suffered dreadfully, every Spring, from headache, cause I lay impurity of the blood and biliousness. It seemed for days and weeks that my head would split open. Nothing relieved me till I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has cured me completely."

When Mrs. Genevra Belanger, of 21 Bridge st., Springfield, Mass., began to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, she had suffered for some years from a serious affection of the kidneys. Every Spring, also, she was afflicted with headache, loss of appetite, and indigestion. A friend persuaded her to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which benefited her wonderfully. Her health is now perfect. HEARD—GEN. SAMUEL S. HEARD, the subject of this memoir, was born in Wilkes county, Ga., June 6, 1807, and died April 24, 1887, being nearly eighty years of age at the time of his death. He moved to Mississippi, with his mother and older brothers, when seven years of age. The family first settled in Amite county; but, when grown, Gen. Heard married and moved to Hinds county, where he lived until his death, with the exception of a short time spent in some portion of Louisiana.

Gen. Heard was a man of marked character and strong convictions; a man who did his own thinking; and when his conclusions were reached, and his opinions formed, held them with great tenacity. He was a successful business man up to the breaking out of the war. He was prosperous, and had accumulated a considerable property in land and negroes, which was, of course, lost to him; but with his accustomed energy he still struggled on, and made some money, and was a good liver. He was of chivalrous spirit, and, at the beginning of the war, in 1860, he raised a company of volunteers in Louisiana, and hastened to the front. He was promoted to the rank of colonel, and at the battle of Shiloh commanded his regiment and led it through the fight. He was afterwards promoted to the rank of brigadier general, and held the title until death. But the best feature of his life was his religious character. His early training was favorable to the Baptist Church; but in middle life he saw reason to change his religious belief, with his habits of life, and under the ministry of Rev. Preston Cooper, of precious memory, he was converted and joined the Methodist Church, of which he was a faithful member until his death. For two or three years before his death such was his state of health that he was not a regular attendant on the means of grace. He was always a supporter of the church of his choice, a regular contributor to the support of the gospel. About one month before his death he sent his pastor $10 as his first installment of the quarterage for the year 1887, though he had not been able to attend service during the year. He had lived in Hinds county and about Raymond and Spring Ridge more than fifty years; and his reputation is that of an upright, honest man, a good citizen, a kind neighbor, a loving husband and father. Peace to his memory, and a joyous awakening on the resurrection morn! W. E. H.

STRICKLAND—DONA ALBINA STRICKLAND, daughter of M. G. N. and M. E. Strickland, died at Dover, Yazoo county, February 25, aged twelve years.

We love to gather rare flowers and preserve their memory and fragrance between the leaves of books. Lo! it gladdens, while it saddens, the hearts of bereaved ones, and enshrines, in tender obituary, the memory of a dear one gone. Little Donie was a member of the church; joined last year under a meeting held by Bro. M. A. Bell, now in the Christian's home in glory. A gentle, sweet, patient, thoughtful child; quiet, retiring, and very dearly loved. The writer will not soon lose the memory of sobs and tears, from young and old, as we sung and prayed about the snow-white casket. Vanished now from earthly sight, she will be always the same little, patient, cheerful Donie, though friends and class-mates grow gray and totter. And she has done much. She was a treasure every year of her young life; and now she leaves no thought that does not cause tender pleasure in all hearts that knew her. Parents, knowing where her pure spirit winged its flight, look up, and, in submission, breathe, "Thy will be done!" The young flower grew weary, the bud has broken—unmatured. God grant peace and rest to the sorrowing ones, and keep forever sprinkled, as falling dew, her gentle memory in their hearts!

W. H. HUNTLEY.

LAZENBY—SARAH FRANCES LAZENBY—known as "Fannie"—eldest daughter of Rev. J. J. and Helen S. Lazenby, was born in Calhoun county, Ala., February 26, 1856, and, after a long and painful illness, died March 26, 1887, aged thirty-one years and one month. She moved with her parents to Mississippi, in 1866. She professed religion and joined the church at the age of thirteen.

She traveled in many parts of the State, and was punctual at church, and a devoted Sunday-school worker wherever she went. She left to us many sacred remembrances of her pure life. All she dreaded was the sting of death; but when she came to step out upon the great ocean of eternity, not only her life, but her face spoke. There is no sting in death. She expressed it as going to sleep. Thus her pure soul took its flight to heaven, for it is said, "The pure in heart shall see God." The Lord, in his infinite wisdom, has transplanted a sweet flower to bloom in a more congenial clime. E. LAZENBY.

GERMANY—REV. WILLIS H. GERMANY, M. D., died, of pneumonia, January 21, 1887, at his residence, near Johnston Station, Pike county, Miss. Dr. Germany was converted while quite young, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Mississippi. He was licensed to preach when about eighteen years of age, and soon after joined the itinerant ministry, and traveled about eight years. At the close of 1858 he located, and soon after began the practice of medicine.

Dr. Germany was a talented young itinerant preacher, and successful in this high vocation—in winning souls for Christ. In his sphere as a local preacher he evinced the same talent, and stood high as a preacher, and as a Sunday-school worker and steadfast friend to the church. As a physician, he was successful and popular. As a citizen, he was highly esteemed and useful. As a friend, he was true and steadfast. As a husband and father, he was devoted, kind, loving, provident. True Christianity, enthroned upon the heart, is the great factor that operates and consolidates the elements of true and highest character—Christian character—and adorns human life with the "beauty of holiness." Dr. Germany was a true and intelligent Christian. We were told by his now sainted wife that the last years of the Doctor's life was lived under the extraordinary influence of the Holy Ghost. Hence his readiness to depart and his strong faith in a glorious immortality of soul and body and a home with God, and eternity as his lifetime to enjoy them. In the graveyard at Johnston Station was laid the remains of Dr. Germany, to rest until the trump of God shall wake it. We drop the tear of personal friendship, of brotherly love, on his grave, while we sweetly cherish the buoyant hope that ere long we shall strike hands and look into eyes immortal "at the beautiful gate" "in the home of the soul." "There, friends shall meet again who have loved." The Doctor left a wife, and also several children, all grown and members of the church, and a large circle of friends, who sorrow, but not as those without hope. His devoted wife has since gone to him, leaving the hearts of loved ones more desolate, but making the attractions of heaven sweeter and stronger. WM. B. HINES.

SMITH—MRS. NANNIE J. SMITH, wife of Thomas E. Smith, of New Hope Church, Scotland circuit, Mississippi Conference, died on March 22, 1887. Sister Smith was born and brought up in this part of Mississippi, and was married to Thomas E. Smith, in September, 1874. Sister Smith joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1880, and in 1883 was converted soundly, and started for her heavenly inheritance. There was a predisposition in her physical organism to consumption, which developed and terminated her earthly career at the early age of thirty years. But "all is well that ends well." Although cut down in the prime of life, and leaving a devoted husband and several children, and others to mourn her early departure, she gave full assurance of a safe passage "through the valley of the shadow of death" to an "inheritance incorruptible and eternal," where, "at the beautiful gate," she will be "waiting and watching" for the coming of the loved and the left. WM. B. HINES.

A Woman's Sweet Will.

She is prematurely deprived of her charms of face and form, and made unattractive by the wasting effects of ailments and irregularities peculiar to her sex. To check this drain upon, not only her strength and health, but upon her amiable qualities as well, is her first duty. This is safely and speedily accomplished by a course of self-treatment with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, a nervine and tonic of wonderful efficacy, and prepared especially for the alleviation of those suffering from "dragging down" pains, sensations of nausea, and weakness incident to woman—a boon to her sex. Druggists.

How grand the inspiration which art has received from Christ. The masters expended their talents on Christian subjects. In sculpture, Michael Angelo's Moses is considered by art critics to be far superior in expression to the Apollo Belvidere. Architecture reached its highest advancement in the building of cathedrals, churches and other religious structures. Music has been greatly developed. Bells and the organ were invented to meet the requirements of church service. The Christian hymn-writers and musicians are unrivaled.

Col. W. H. Sinclair, president Galveston Railway Company, says he believes a man can do an incredible amount of overwork while taking Moxie, and not break down. Mrs. A. Carusteins, proprietress of Washington Hotel, Galveston, speaks of it in the same terms; says it gives her extraordinary powers of endurance.

The name of Cæsar means power; the name of Herod means cruelty; the name of Alexander means conquest; the name of Demosthenes means eloquence; the name of Milton means poetry; the name of Benjamin West means painting; the name of Hiram Powers means sculpture; the name of Beethoven means music; the name of Howard means reform; but the name of Christ means love.

General Geary, while Governor of Pennsylvania, wrote Dr. Shallenberger: "I regard your Antidote as a public benefaction. In my case, as well as in many others known to me, it has proven an invaluable remedy for chills; not only prompt in curing, but singularly pleasant and beneficial in its general effects upon the system."

DYSPEPSIA.

Up to a few weeks ago I considered myself the champion Dyspeptic of America. During the years that I have been afflicted I have tried almost everything claimed to be a specific for Dyspepsia in the hope of finding something that would afford permanent relief. I had about made up my mind to abandon all medicines when I noticed an endorsement of Simmons Liver Regulator by a prominent Georgian, a jurist whom I knew, and concluded to try its effects in my case. I have used but two bottles, and am satisfied that I have struck the right thing at last. I felt its beneficial effects almost immediately. Unlike all other preparations of a similar kind, no special instructions are required as to what one shall or shall not eat. This fact alone ought to commend it to all troubled with Dyspepsia.

THE OPINION OF

Sir Robert Christison,

Baronet, M. D.,

Physician to Her Majesty the Queen, President Royal Association, Professor at the University of Edinburgh, &c.,

Liebig Co.'s Coca Beef Tonic

is a remarkable preparation. It contains the nutritive elements of the muscular fibre, blood, bone and brain of carefully selected healthy bullocks dissolved in rare old sherry wine. To be precise, each tablespoonful contains the nutritive elements of one ounce of choice beef, one grain and a half of pure quinine, and two grains of iron. It also embodies a concentrated extract of coca, a South American tonic of which Sir Robert Christison, M. D., F. R. S., physician to Her Majesty the Queen, says: "The properties of this wonderful plant are the most remarkable of any known in the medical world. From repeated personal trials I am convinced that its use is highly beneficial and harmless."

ARTIFICIAL EYES

Are Now so Perfectly Made That No One Can Distinguish Them from the Natural Eye.

The Artificial Eye is not only a beautifier, but it serves other excellent purposes.
It enables the eyelids to move as freely as ever.
It restores the functions of the tear passages.
It prevents the eyelashes from turning within, causing inflammation.
It prevents distortion of features, as happens always in case of a young person who has the misfortune to lose an eye—and sometimes in the case of older persons.
Mr. W. HOUSE, our Optician, has made a specialty of selecting and inserting them.

Y. The Parnell branch of the Irish National League of Nashville have invited him to visit Nashville, and will make an active effort to induce him to do so.——The steamers "Celtic" and "Britannic" of the White Star Line collided in New York harbor on Thursday during a dense fog. Both are badly damaged.——The men who are supposed to have robbed the train at McNeil Station, Texas, have been arrested.

MAY 23.

President Grevy has appealed to DeFreycinet to make another attempt to form a Cabinet.——Four hundred members of Parliament attended jubilee service at St. Margarets' Church, Westminster, yesterday.——An assault was made on Wm. O'Brien at Hamilton, Ontario. Eight shots were fired at his carriage, and the driver wounded. No arrests made.——Forest fires are still raging in the upper Michigan peninsular.——Two four-story brick buildings in New York, in course of construction, collapsed today and buried ten men in the ruins. Seven were hurt; five seriously, two slightly. The others escaped injury.——A tornado struck Idana, Kansas, Sunday evening. The new school-house was entirely demolished, two churches were badly damaged and six dwelling-houses were blown down.——The village of Hawthorn, Wis., on the Omaha road, was entirely destroyed by fire, which is sweeping through the valuable timber in that vicinity.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1887 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (thirteenth), July, 1887.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds. Several distinguished preachers invited from a distance will be in attendance and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. A very general expression having been made to continue the meeting for a longer session than usual, it has been determined to extend the time of the services of the camp meeting to two weeks.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.; W. Olis, W. J. Hearin, R. E. Jones, Mobile, Ala.; J. J. Flowers, Bolling, Ala.; Dr. E. F. Griffin, Moss Point; J. P. Carter, Hattiesburg, Miss.; W. H. Foster, E. P. Mackie, J. H. Campman, B. O. L. Rayne, T. J. Carver, H. Jamieson, Jr., P. Werlein, H. Haag, New Orleans, La.; or H. E. Price, the keeper of the camp ground, near Biloxi, Miss.

The public are invited to attend.

W. H. FOSTER, Pres.

HUGH JAMIESON, JR., Sec.
NEW ORLEANS, May 16, 1887.

The second annual camp meeting for 1887 on Sam Jones Camp Ground will commence on the last Friday, August 26, 1887. The camp ground is beautifully situated, surrounded by mountainous scenery, and as fine ice cold springs as ever sought its level. The ground is situated on the L., N. O. & T. R. R.—commonly called Valley Route—146 miles from New Orleans, and ninety miles from Vicksburg; and the hotel and tabernacle are within a stone's throw of the railroad. Several distinguished preachers who have been invited will be in attendance, and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. The meeting will be continued ten or twelve days. The accommodations are large, and large additions will be made, and the accommodations will be sufficient for all who may come. Reduced rates of fare will be published later.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. F. Cassels, Dr. J. R. Whittington, A. J. Roberts, W. G. Longmire or J. K. Cobb, Ghoster, Miss.

The public are invited to attend.

A CLERGYMAN AND THE PEDDLER.

BY P. BATES.

A clergyman, who longed to trace
Amid his dark a work of grace,
And mourned because he knew not why
You fleece kept wet while his was dry,
While thinking what he could do more,
Heard some one rapping at the door,
And opening it there met his view
A dear old brother whom he knew,
Who had got down by worldly blows
From wealth to peddling cast-off clothes.
"Come in, my brother," said the pastor,
"Perhaps my troubles you can master,
For since the summer you withdrew,
My converts have been very few."
"I can," the peddler said, "unroll
Something perchance to ease your soul,
And to cut short all fulsome speeches,
Bring me a pair of your old breeches."
The clothes were brought; the peddler gazed,
And said: "No longer be amazed,
The gloss upon the cloth is such,
I think, perhaps, you sit too much
Building castles bright and gay,
Which Satan loves to blow away.
And here, behold! as I am born,
The nap from neither knee is worn.
He who would great revivals see,
Must wear his pants out on the knee.
For such the fervent prayer supplies,
When pastors kneel, their churches rise."

Dedication of the Methodist Church in Jackson, Miss.

While Rev. C. B. Galloway (now Bishop) was serving his first year of his second pastorate in Jackson, for the Conference year of 1882, the idea of building a new and more spacious house of worship was conceived, and plans at once adopted for the raising of means to carry out this project. The plans met with a hearty approval from the congregation and friends, who at once entered the work of raising means, lead on by their pastor, who, with a most untiring zeal, encouraged them to persistently "go forward," and soon a sufficient sum was in sight to justify the tearing away of the old building, the labor of which was commenced on Monday, July 10, 1882, the last sermon having been preached in it on the Sunday before. Although it was important to tear away the old to make way for a more extensive and commodious building, yet many hearts were made to mourn and bleed because of its having been the place of many, very many happy scenes to them.

After the tearing down of the old, and while the new was in course of erection, for about a year the dear, good people of the Christian Church voluntarily gave us the use of their house, where we worshiped, and, though that building, like our own dear old church, has been torn away, yet there is a sacred love for its once consecrated walls felt by our congregation that can never be forgotten or eradicated, and we will always love the good congregation who so generously and so kindly helped us in time of need.

On September 14, 1882, the corner-stone of the new building was laid under the direction and imposing services of the Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of Free Masons. A vast concourse of people were in attendance, and addresses were made by many of Mississippi's most distinguished citizens and eminent divines. The occasion was a grand one. At the Annual Conference of 1883, Bro. Galloway was transferred to another field of labor, and the carrying on of this good work turned over to the boy preacher, Rev. A. F. Watkins, who, with a zeal equal to the emergency, took hold of the plow in the unfinished furrow, left by his predecessor, and carried it on until he, too, was taken away by the same power that placed him here, and our own beloved Rev. C. G. Andrews put at the helm, and who for the last two years, and over, has faithfully, zealously and earnestly "worked and prayed, and prayed and worked" until we now look with fond pride on the most beautiful, capacious and well-arranged house of worship in the State. Verily, "the workmen may be taken away, but God carries on the work." The conception of the erection of this building was a grand one, and for it the honor belongs to Bishop Galloway and to the ladies of the church, who so earnestly co-operated with him. Bro. Watkins did his whole duty while here. Dr. Andrews, when he took hold, set fire to all the bridges in his rear, and saw nothing ahead but the magnificent building that now adorns the spot where the old Methodist Church in Jackson once stood. All the pastors named did their duty nobly; the women, as they always do, did theirs grandly, and the brethren helped all they could. The building proper is sixty by forty feet, with a seating capacity of 576; spire on southeast corner, 127 feet high; vestibule under front tower for main entrance; entrance also through vestibule under tower containing spire in southeast corner; pastor's study in northeast corner; lecture and Sunday-school room, capable of seating 300 persons, immediately in rear of and attached to main building, with front entrance through vestibule under northwest tower. The building is of brick, covered with slate; the inside walls and ceiling most beautifully and appropriately painted; lighted with gas through two most beautiful coronas, hung longitudinally in the centre of the main auditorium. The floor is covered with elegant body Brussels carpeting; the seats are made of walnut and maple, arranged in semi-circular form, with wide centre aisles converging from front entrance to altar, and aisles on either side. The lectern is of the most modern style, elegant in finish and beautiful in design, as are also the pulpit chairs, all of which are private donations.

May 15 was a day long to be remembered by the citizens of Jackson generally, but more especially by the Methodist congregation. The day was ushered in with a cloudless morn, and the sun rose with a dazzling splendor unsurpassed. Before the hour of ten, notwithstanding the services would not begin until eleven o'clock, the congregation began to gather. Not only did our own congregation "congregate in force," but the Baptists, the Presbyterians, the Disciples, the Episcopalians, the Hebrews and the sinner came in crowds until every aisle, vestibule, side entrance and every other place was jammed and packed to an intensely uncomfortable degree. The seating capacity of the church is 576, but not less than one thousand persons managed to get within seeing distance, at least, of the Bishop. Around and on the pulpit platform was seen the venerable John G. Jones, the oldest preacher in the Mississippi Conference, now in his eighty-third year, and who, more than fifty years ago, preached the first sermon in the old church which stood upon the very spot where the new one now stands; Rev. J. L. Forsythe, the next oldest; Rev. W. E. Ballard, Rev. G. F. Thompson, Rev. F. M. Featherstun, D. D., Rev. J. W. McLaurin, Rev. A. F. Watkins, and then our own beloved pastor, Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D.—all having once been pastors of this station. The services began with a voluntary by the choir; then the reading of the 78th hymn by Dr. Featherstun, and after the singing of same, prayer by Rev. W. E. Ballard; then the reading of the Scripture lessons as laid down in the ritual for dedication services, by Rev. John G. Jones; then the reading of the 887th hymn by Rev. J. W. McLaurin, followed by the singing of the same, in which the whole congregation joined with a zeal most truly refreshing and joyous. The Bishop, our own Bishop Galloway, whom we all love and in whom we all feel a just pride, arose and read for his text I Chronicles xxix, 3: "Moreover, because I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house." During the delivery of this sermon the attention was so strict and the silence so great that had a pin fallen in any part of the house it might easily have been heard by the entire congregation. The sermon was a grand one, the Bishop seemingly surpassing many of his grandest previous efforts. Notwithstanding his congregation was composed of all the different denominations in the city, yet all wore expressions of pride, pleasure and perfect satisfaction. The allusions, by the Bishop, in his sermon, to the old church building, its hallowed associations, its members that had gone up to glory, and the many ties that made the spot a consecrated one, were so grand, so beautiful and so pathetic, that very many eyes were suffused with tears, and all most solemnly affected. The occasion was a grand one, and long to be remembered by the large congregation in attendance. At the close of the sermon the pastor, Rev. Dr. Andrews, announced that the house would now be dedicated to the worship of Almighty God, when the officers of the church, consisting of J. P. Stevens, W. L. Nugent, W. L. Hemingway, H. H. Hines, W. A. Whitfield, F. P. Barr, A. G. Moore and George S. Green, stepped forward around the chancel railing, in front of the Bishop, and presented the same to him, when he formally dedicated and set it apart for the worship only of the living and true God. This service was most solemnly beautiful and impressive. The Doxology was then sung, and the vast congregation dismissed.

In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, a "Children's Day" service was held, the exercises being in accordance with the programme arranged and sent out by the Southern Methodist Publishing House, at Nashville. Several good talks were made, especially by Bro. Watkins, of Brookhaven, and young Bro. Featherstun, of Brandon. The day's exercises wound up with a good sermon at night, to a large congregation, by Bro. W. E. Ballard.

The day will long be remembered in Jackson.

ATCH. ATCH. ATCH.

From Dr. Cottrell.

The sentimental mood is, perhaps, not the best in which to write for the press. It is that mood that has me this morning—this Saturday, May morning. What is the cause—the occasion—of it? One may be as much at fault in an endeavor to analyze subjective conditions as in reckoning the objective reasons for his moods; but in this instance, slow recovery out of the agonies of RHEUMATISM! (print it large) coupled with meditations and memories which news of the death of Dr. McFerrin has aroused, account for the mellowness. Simple softness might be the word from one less partial to the writer. Terms are fraught with power. There may be softness from greenness, and from rottenness. We are wont to term our own soft moods, mellow moods; and it is benevolent for us to take it turn-about in allowing each other the best terms to characterize his conditions of mind and spirit.

Those who have been agreed with Dr. McFerrin, and who have regarded him as the regulator in the machinery of Methodism, may be expected to speak and write pronouncedly in regard of the effect of his definitive course and his uniform utterance; but this is no reason why others who have had another philosophy and who have spoken and written contrary, may not, from the heart, render just and generous tribute. Controversies have been many, and in the heat of dispute, touching dogmatic and economic issues, there has transpired what ever be incident to such engagements. We are all human. It is well we should avoid betrayal into what may be properly termed inhuman. Quite as important that we should not affect, whilst in the flesh, to be transhuman or superhuman. Were I to mention all that I admired in Dr. McFerrin, the eulogy would be above and beyond what would have been delicate during the time he read the Advocates. It was seldom we met that we did not take a turn—a tilt—on points we both deemed vital; and when I say that through it all he grew upon my regard and affection, I render him about the highest tribute I can conceive. He lived to see incorporated into our Methodism quite abundantly what he deemed adverse to its welfare and efficiency. He lead the opposition to the schemes urged by McTyeire, Myers, Doggett and others, which prevailed at the General Conference of 1866, at New Orleans; but he lived to see that no detriment was wrought. It was not he that suggested, through the press, that such as those I've named should rather withdraw from the Methodist Church than urge the changes then proposed; and, therefore, the indignant protest of Bishop Andrew against such a suggestion, which he pronounced from the chair, to the General Conference, lit elsewhere than on the head of the great champion of old Methodism. He could endure; as he could indulge, great plainness of speech.

The last time I had a protracted interview with him was last December, as we went down to Jackson, Tenn., to attend the session of the Memphis Conference. We talked over many matters, and converse grew into communion. His brother, with whom his youth and manhood had been associated, was among the dead of the Memphis Conference, and at the memorial service it was affecting to see and hear the Doctor. His own feet at the brink of the dark river, the eventful past seemed to come up, and I sat and thought of A. L. P. Green, Pitts, Baldwin, Summers, Hamilton, Paine, L. M. Lee, Doggett, and scores of others who were potent in our Zion but yesterday.

I've just read Bishop McTyeire's sermon on the occasion of the Doctor's funeral. Like all that the Bishop has said or written, it is apt, graphic and judicious. Qualification at one point may be considered, as by no means in abatement of the truth. It is this: He who serves most effectively the generation in which he lives is promotive of progress. I suggest that he who provides "new bottles for new wine," is he who most efficiently serves the times in which he lives, in their relation to the times to follow. Where had been Methodism had Wesley mistaken the paths in which the clergy of his church and his day were treading, as "the old paths?" Reversion to antecedent and abiding principles is often occasion of most signal modal changes, and growth seems a process of destruction. When we all learn to defer, courteously, to those who are antipodal to us in opinion, "Conference" will become what the name implies. Do we grow toward this? I apprehend we do.

A two weeks' meeting here, in which Bro. J. B. Whitford, of Princeton, did the preaching, refreshed and renewed us. Several additions to the church, and an awakening to tasks, requisite to advancement, are the results. To-morrow is Children's Day: and as this rheumatism may allow me, I hope to have joy with them. When Bishop Keener prophesied that "the church would yet march through the beautiful gates of childhood to the conquest of the world," he yielded one of the most delightful of the many sayings which attest his genius.

JOSEPH B. COTTRELL.

CADIZ, KY., May 11, 1887.

Church Extension vs. Conference Claimants.

It seems that church extension is the leading idea in the church at this time; but it does appear to me that there is another matter of more vital importance at the present, and I am astonished that our leading men don't see it. I believe it as much as I do I exist, that if something is not done, there will be a revolution of some kind in the church. I mean suitable provisions for our old worn-out preachers. You remember the story of the old gray horse? Well, I will relate it anyway. A millionaire in Chicago had a very fine gray horse he drove in his carriage through the city. He had old gray dressed up with bows and ribbons; but at last old gray became old and worn out and an expense. His master had him carried out on the commons and turned loose to shift for himself; but old gray was too well known by the people to let him starve. They took and led him down the streets where his master could see what they were doing. They had him dressed up, and a collection taken up for his support. The indignation of the people was so great his old master was glad to take care of him.

Now, I will ask what is the difference between old gray and another case I will relate. A man entered the itinerant ministry when young, with a limited education; no prestige of any kind to back him up. He had to paddle his own canoe. He served in every pastoral relation in the church—on missions, circuits, stations, districts, for thirty-four years; and in those years he, in connection with the colleagues he had, took over thirty-two hundred persons into the Methodist Church; but circumstances forced him to retire from the pastorship of the church. As such, he had to step down and out; penniless, homeless, sick, worn out, and at a time, too, of the greatest monetary depression that was ever upon the country; every avenue in which there was supposed to be a dollar a half dozen young, strong, able men was there waiting for the place. One evening a postmaster was found to be a defaulter. Next morning eight petitions going round for the place; but who knows or cares how or where that old itinerant lives. Not a stroke of a pen was ever made against his moral character in Church or State. Well, I will give you some idea. He walks down the street with the pastor of the Methodist Church, with a salary of seven hundred dollars; comes to a blacksmith shop. The blacksmith said to his pastor: "Go, get a dozen oranges on my account. Take them to the family." The old itinerant brings a plow to sharpen. "How much is the price?" "A dime is the usual price; but your plow is very rusty. I will charge you fifteen cents."

Now, Mr. Editor, I will try and come to the point. I speak as unto wise men. Judge ye what I say: From the beginning of the Methodist Church up to recent years, when it became necessary for a traveling preacher to have a home, he had to get one at his own expense. It became his property, and he could stay in his home as long as he pleased. As such a great cry was gotten up against a local itinerancy, to meet this contingency the parsonage question was sprung, and it became very popular as such. To-day there is scarcely a pastoral charge anywhere that has not a parsonage, and now we don't have hundreds only, but thousands of preachers going round from one parsonage to another; but how soon will be the years when these thousands of preachers will reach a condition of life when they, too, will have to step down and out? Then what? Will our great leading men submit to such? They can't all be made Bishops or get a connectional office with a fat salary. We have too many of them. I don't believe they will take the place of old gray out on the commons. Some few of us little fellows have to do it now; but that time I am speaking of is coming, and if the Mississippi Conference was assessed ten thousand dollars a year to secure homes for these old worn-out preachers that spent their long, toilsome life in its service, and brought up the church to what it is, instead of for building fine churches in large towns and cities to pamper the pride of the people, then their storehouses would be filled with plenty. There are many of our old preachers that ought to be superannuated. They believe it; but it is to superannuate and starve as such. They will hold on until they are forced to do so. Another trouble: When a preacher becomes superannuated he is cast off like an old suit of clothes, not recognized any more as he once was. Now, these things are talked in private circles. Why not let the facts be made known? I know these are plain truths. Some will be ready to kick at them; but that don't change the facts.

A. B. NICHOLSON.

THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT.—The Alabama Christian Advocate closes an interesting and instructive article on this subject with this significant paragraph:

"Every sign of the growth of the missionary spirit is a good ground for rejoicing, but there is danger of being misled and deluded by the parade of big figures so common these days. We must do better or stop shouting, for the fact is the church of to-day is, in proportion to its resources, behind the church of a half century ago."

We once read that a member of the British Parliament made the statement "that nothing told so many falsehoods as figures, except facts." We would emphasize the above warning. "The parade of big figures so common these days" will deceive the "very elect." In this connection there are two established facts which ought to open our eyes a little. The Book Agent reports we gained last year over 75,000 members. The treasurer of the Mission Board reports that the debt of the Board has been very largely increased since last year's report. Does increase of debt indicate growth of the missionary spirit?

SUNDAY.

—By S. S.

Dear Lord, we thank thee for this holy day,
The day thyself hast made and kept and blest.
We lay aside our week-day toil and care,
And greet with joy this day of sacred rest.

Make this a Sunday to our darkened minds;
Shine with bright beams of warmth and love
Into our burdened, earth-bound hearts,
And draw us nearer to thyself above.

Make this a Sabbath to our weary frames,
A rest-day full of glad and peaceful calm;
An emblem sweet of heaven, our better home,
And for the week to come a strengthening balm.

May this a first day be in better things,
A new beginning in our work for thee;
And in our busy lives and service here,
More wholly consecrated may we be.

And so, dear Lord, may all our Sabbaths here
Bring light and joy and hope and rest and peace
To every weak and weary, troubled soul,
Till earthly work shall end, and Sabbaths cease.

THE COMMANDMENTS—THE FIRST TABLE.

Exodus xx, 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart."—Matthew xxii, 37.

CONNECTIVE AND EXPLANATORY.

The history of the journeyings of the children of Israel from the time of the institution of the manna to the giving of the law is full of instructive and exciting incident. From the wilderness of Sin, where their cry for bread was answered by the giving of manna, they journeyed to Rephidim, where there was no water for the people to drink. As before, they began to chide Moses, holding him responsible for all their troubles. Moses carried their cry to God, and received instructions to smite the rock in Horeb with his rod. He did so, and the waters gushed forth an ample supply for man and beast. In procuring the water, Moses was guilty of an act which entailed a life-long disability upon him and prevented him from entering into the promised land. The exact character of the sin has excited discussion. Some say it was because he smote the rock twice instead of once; others say it was because he spake harshly to his people, "Hear now, ye rebels;" still others say it was because he ascribed the miracle to himself: "Must we fetch you water?" All these opinions point out the state of mind from which resulted the sin, as it is authoritatively declared in Psalms cvi, 33: "Because they provoked his spirit, so that he spake unadvisedly with his lips."

At Rephidim occurred the memorable contest between the Israelites, under the leadership of Joshua, and the Amalekites. While Moses held up his hands Israel prevailed; when his hands hung down Amalek prevailed. Aaron and Hur stayed up the weary hands of Moses, and the Amalekites were utterly routed. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Write this for a memorial in a book." This memorial teaches its beautiful and impressive lesson even unto this generation. The Lord of hosts is the source of power; glorious victory the result. The intermediate steps are: (1) The spiritual intercessor pleading; (2) his associates with their help and sympathy; (3) the leader planning the campaign; (4) the rank and file executing the order. "To every man his work." "All at it, and all the time at it." Moses ascribed no praise to his intercession, although it was the direct medium to convey the power; nor to the staying up his hands, although without it the connection was broken; nor to the valiant captain whose military skill was essential; nor to the host whose charges swept the enemy from the field; but he "built an altar, and called the name of it Jehovah-nissi"—the Lord our banner.

Jethro, the father-in-law, brought to Moses in the wilderness his wife and two sons. They exchanged cordial greetings, Moses recounting "all the travail that had come upon them by the way," and Jethro rejoicing in "all the goodness which the Lord had done to Israel." Jethro's sagacity relieved Moses of much of the drudgery which was wearing his life away. He caused him to appoint magistrates under him who should adjudicate all smaller matters and bring the more important and difficult ones to him.

From Rephidim the Israelites went unto Sinai. It must have been with peculiar feelings that Moses approached this memorable place. It was there that he had received his Divine call; there he saw the burning bush; there he had been told that he should serve God upon this mountain. As he looked back over the dangers by flood and field; over the murmurings and marchings; over the temptations and the triumphs, and realized that the Lord had brought him through all and was now about to redeem his promise, doubtless feelings of gratitude and of exultation strove for the mastery.

Sinai, or Horeb, as it is interchangeably called, is a point of exceeding interest. God seems to have chosen it as a favorite place for communing with his servants. It was there he appeared to Moses as mentioned above, telling him to take off his shoes because the ground was holy; there he bade him smite the rock; there he made a covenant with his people; there that Moses prevailed with God to spare his people, using those words that seem almost audacious: "If thou wilt not forgive their sin, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book." It was on Horeb, also, that Elijah stood when the Lord passed by in the wind and earthquake and fire, and spake to him in a still, small voice. This lesson tells of a still more important event, even the giving to the children of Israel, and through them to all the children of men, the laws for the government of their lives, written by the finger of God upon tables of stone, and called

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

Verse 1. "God spake." In addition to writing the law, God proclaimed it orally to the people. The words, of course, were similar to those used by man's voice, because the people understood them: yet they were accompanied by such a majestic display, by such a terrifying evidence of the presence of Jehovah, that the people said to Moses: "Speak thou with us; but let not God speak with us, lest we die."

2. "I am the Lord thy God." A forceful and appropriate preface to the book of commandments. How impressively is taught the absolute right of God to issue commandments! He is "the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt." Creator, Preserver, Deliverer.

THE FIRST COMMANDMENT.

Verse 3. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." The ten plagues sent upon the Egyptians were intended specially to overthrow their idolatry. They were aimed at the destruction of the objects they worshiped, and right terribly did they accomplish their purpose. They were dragged down from their pedestal of reverence and made to be loathsome and offensive. The sanctity with which they were invested as benefactors was ruthlessly torn away, and they were exposed as objects of cursing and bitterness. On the other hand, the living and true God had proved himself equal to all their emergencies and appeared now unto them as deserving of their supreme homage, because of his own perfect attributes and of his kindly offices to them. Thus has it ever proved, and thus will it ever prove, that the gods of this world are utterly unable to provide for the wants of men, and that he who trusts in them is only leaning upon a broken reed, which will pierce his side, but give him no support.

THE SECOND COMMANDMENT.

Verses 4, 5, 6. "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image." Make in order to bow down to them. By Moses' direction the figures of cherubim, brazen serpents, oxen and other things were made without condemnation; only the bowing down to them made the sin. Heaven above, earth beneath, water under the earth, is very sweeping and comprehensive. No possible conception of anything anywhere is worthy of the worship of man made in the image of his Creator. "A jealous God." The term "jealous" applied to a human being carries along with it a damaging sense. It does not mean that God feels a sense of unhappiness or injury because worship is paid to any other being; but it means that homage rendered to aught else, which is deserved only by him, brings disability upon the idolater himself. It is sometimes said of a certain profession or calling in life, "It is a jealous profession." The ministry or the law is a jealous profession, which means that no man can ever succeed at either who divides his attention. In this sense God is jealous. No man who bestows a half-hearted service upon him can ever receive his highest blessing. "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children." This is not in the sense of vindictiveness, but simply in the ordinary course of nature. The man whose disregard of the laws of health brings disease upon himself, will naturally bequeath it to his children. Consumption and scrofula descend to children. The children of an inebriate are sometimes born with a taste for intoxicants. "Shewing mercy unto thousands that love me." Those who keep God's commandments will be happy in this world as well as in the next. They will be successful and honored and loved.

THE THIRD COMMANDMENT.

Verse 7. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." Sometimes ministers in the sanctuary use the name of the Creator irreverently. In common conversation the flippant mention of the sacred name is a violation of this commandment. Any use of it which is not intended for worship, or instruction or solemn judicial affirmation, is forbidden. The use of this holy name in profane swearing is inexcusably wicked and abominable. A quaint preacher, illustrating the silliness of profane swearing, said: "The devil baits his hook with whatever his intended victim likes. When he wants to catch a miser, he baits his hook with a dime; when he wants to catch the drunkard, he uses a bottle of wine; but when he wants to catch the profane swearer, he throws out the naked hook, and the poor fool bites at it."

THE FOURTH COMMANDMENT.

Verses 8, 9, 10, 11. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." "Six days shalt thou labor." The affirmation to work six days is as binding as to rest one. One day of rest in seven has been shown to be necessary for the well-being of man and beasts apart from any idea of worship. Continuous work impairs the elasticity of the body and brings on premature age. By actual experiment it has been ascertained that for a given length of time men and beasts can do more work in seven days by resting one than they can by working on continuously. Then the Sabbath is to be hallowed as a day of worship when the thoughts must be upon God. Just as little service should be done upon this day as possible. The Savior took care to teach that it must not be regarded superstitiously; that works of mercy and works of piety were proper and right upon the Sabbath. But secular business, whether it employs the mind or the body, should be given up. Blessings, temporal and spiritual, will attend the man who hallows the Sabbath day. Isaiah beautifully writes: "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

Old Maids Again.

In a recent issue of the ADVOCATE we find the following: "It is far better to be an unmarried woman than to become an unhappy, discontented wife." Again, "Many would not exchange this freedom for the most devoted husband in the world." The first quotation is a statement of the editor of the Watchman, from which the article is taken, and is grounded upon the declaration of a female physician, who says she "will have the best or none." These quoted statements are made in view of the fact that marriage is the fulfillment of one of the highest callings of our nature.

After God made Adam in all of his original beauty and great intellectual and physical powers, every effort of which was attended with exquisite satisfaction, nevertheless, the Infinite saw there was one thing more necessary to round up and perfect his happiness—even in a paradisiacal garden—and that was a wife. His social, intellectual and moral well-being demanded it.

A woman, therefore, who has made up her mind never to marry has begun a process which dwarfs, more or less, those vast humanistic qualifications mentioned above. If anyone wishes to become acquainted with the evils and wretchedness of celibacy, let him read Taylor's "Monachism."

It is a recognized fact that any function of the soul or body unused sets up a process of decline, and then decay. Marriage brings into healthful and happy exercise a hundred splendid elements of man's being which nothing else can. Allusion is made to the delightful home of two old maiden sisters—Alice and Phœbe Cary. They were poets, and have left to the world, as their only legacy, some small works of good fiction, and one or two indifferent poetical productions. In a hundred years they and their works will be buried and forgotten beneath the immense accumulation of literary trash. Ask a mother who has a boy bursting into the sweetfulness of manhood what estimate she puts upon him. Would she exchange the love and veneration of that young heart for Alice's and Phœbe's happiness and the ephemeral reputation these girls have left their friends and generation? Certainly not. Her language would be, should a proposition be made to build her a world and install her perpetual queen, provided her boy's love and being were blotted out, Never, never! A poor husband, therefore, is a thousand times better than none. It is said, "Celibacy is better than to be an unhappy, discontented wife." But we ask, What right, in this Christian country, has a woman to be "unhappy and discontented"? This looks like a gratuitous slander upon the millions of happy and contented homes in America and Europe.

Paul says, "I have learned in every state to be content." Here we have a lesson enforced on all, whether married or unmarried. It is also the privilege of all. If Paul, amid his hunger and thirsting, nakedness, cold, peril, shipwreck, imprisonment, stripes and abundant, hard, unrequited labor, could say, "Thank God, having food and raiment, I am content," so ought also all in this heaven-blest land "be content with such things as they have," even with a scolding, discontented and ungrateful old maid in the house.

In conclusion, let us look at something Divine. See how beautifully the Psalmist describes the happiness of a Hebrew home: "Happy shalt thou be; it shall be well with thee. Thy wife is as a fruitful vine by the sides of thy house: thy children like olive plants round about thy table." "Lo! children are the heritage of Jehovah, the fruit of the womb, a reward: happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them."

This is the estimate God puts upon matrimony; and it stands in strange contrast with that of the sensible female physician.

A Reminiscence.

Bro. W. B. Lewis has written an article for your paper, of April 21, in which reference is made to a revival of religion under the ministry of the sainted George D. Wade and myself, at the time and place where he was converted some thirty-two years ago. There was one striking incident in connection with that meeting. Likely Bro. Lewis does not remember, as he was quite a boy at that time. We had but two services a day; lunch on the ground. On Tuesday evening some one came to me, and said: "We want you to go to Uncle Quincy Lewis'. We want to have a prayer meeting there tonight." So I did. Bro. Lewis said his mother was quite demonstrative. Yes; she was all demonstration when it came to religion, for she was a matriarch indeed, in whom there was no guile; a grand old saint of God, whose light did not only shine, but burned and flashed out in rapturous joy. As such, about the setting of the sun, she took several young women down in a hollow in the woods to instruct and pray for them. Bro. Wade and myself were sitting on the gallery waiting for the congregation to come, when one of those young women began to shout. I said to Bro. Wade I would go down there. "No, no," he said; "there are none but women there." About that time another began shouting. I started. I did not wait to go by the gate, but jumped over the fence; and went where they were. This was the year I was married; and my wife was in the crowd. She professed to have been converted, but up to that time I saw but little evidence of it; and I was concerned about it. But directly I got there she began shouting, and was so happy. It overcame me so I lost my mind. How long I remained in that condition I know not. When I came to myself, the whole congregation was there; the moon was shining; too late to go to the house to hold services. I don't remember whether anyone named it to me or not, but there was a little rise in the ground. We sometimes call it a "knoll." I took my stand upon that, and made a little talk. I then made a proposition that if anyone there wanted religion, to come and get down there, and we would pray for them. There came up twelve; and it was not long before eleven of them were up praising God. The twelfth one would not acknowledge he was converted, but said he felt a change; and until this day he has made a good member of the church. Three out of that number became preachers—H. P. and W. B. Lewis, of the Mississippi Conference; James Y. McNabb, a local preacher, who died in the army. Not one of the twelve turned back. Several of them have crossed the last river, and, before this, have hailed their old pastor, under whose ministry they were converted, on the shining shore. Happy meeting! O how bright in memory are all those scenes of long ago! The tones of the mellow voices of loved ones gone comes stealing around us until the whole atmosphere becomes one intense and mournful melody, as they whisper to us, Would you know where we are? Yes, yes, Mr. Editor, will it not be at least part of the joys of heaven for old friends to sit down in the kingdom and recount those events of this life when standing side by side in the battle of life.

"Charbone."

There are some things known about this most dreadful disease, but many more still that are unknown; hence, endless and conflicting conjectures and theories, etc. "Charbone" is a name for a kind of blood-poison that is injected in the system by the bite of the buffalo gnat. This disease may be communicated to all kinds of stock, and to man also, by means of bites, both of gnats and mosquitoes, whose lance has already been drawn from an infected animal, and is so charged with this virulent poison as to infect the lance and insect, so that its bite in turn inoculates the last bitten. This fact has been clearly demonstrated in eight cases out of the nine that have occurred in the neighborhood of the Colony. Again, it appears in two distinct forms, to wit—that of external and internal.

The external form is more easily managed. It usually appears in a slight swelling which generally spreads very rapidly; but, if taken in time, yields readily to treatment.

The internal form is very stealthy and rapid in its movements, giving but little, if any, sign of its existence until the animal (if a cow), falls, giving signs of great suffering, with an occasional spasm, expiring in from twenty to eighty minutes.

In this neighborhood at least ninety-five per cent. of those taken with the last-named form of this disease have died.

The following is somewhat of a summary of the loss in the way of stock: Horses, mules and cattle, about 250; hogs, sheep and goats, about 1,000.

The following is a list of the persons afflicted with this fearful malady. The two first mentioned cases were fatal ones; one an external and the other an internal case. It is useless to attempt to give a pen description of the sufferings of these persons, and the treatment given; suffice it to say, all was done for them that could be done; but to no effect. The disease was rapid, and the suffering untold. The victims are Marion McCallum, son of Mr. G. M. McCallum, and Mr. Ed Ambleton.

The following are recovering, but slowly; are afflicted with boils—nature's remedy to purify the system, to wit: Dr. W. Y. Cosper and wife; Mr. G. M. McCallum and wife and little son, Wat McCallum; and Mr. S. Jarrett.

There are other portions of the country that have suffered with this disease; but this community was the greatest sufferer, and has our sympathy and prayers.

Our crop prospect is fine—never better—and we have some signs of progress in church work generally. May God bless the church and prosper the people!

Woman's Work.

MR. EDITOR: I have thought for some time I would write you about the woman's work at Carrollton, Miss. We have two interesting missionary societies.

The Woman's Missionary Society was organized November 7, 1886, with eighteen members and five honorary members. It now has twenty-seven members and sixteen honorary; total, forty-three, showing an increase of twenty members since its organization. There are sixteen subscribers to our Woman's Missionary Advocate. We have had two public meetings—both being instructive and entertaining. At our last public meeting we made our beloved pastor a life member. It was quite a surprise to him, as the money had been collected beforehand, and he knew nothing of it until at the close of the meeting he was presented with a certificate of life membership. Bro. Lewis is always at our monthly meetings to assist and encourage us.

The Juvenile Society, Galloway Gleaners (named in honor of our beloved Mississippi Bishop), was organized about three months ago. It now numbers twenty-seven members. The children take great interest. It is wonderful to see how much money they bring in from their quilts and thank-offerings. At the last meeting they brought in $3 90, not counting the monthly dues. They always take part in the public meetings of the Woman's Society, and work anyway and anywhere they are told. May God bless the little lambs, and make useful workers out of them to carry on this work after we have gone to our rest!

Another great work has been, and is being, accomplished here. We had a Ladies' Aid Society, but have adopted the name "Parsonage Society;" and will give one-half of the money we raise to the connectional work, and use the other half on our parsonage. This society was organized several years since by a few of the faithful to furnish a room for our pastor. We soon bought a parsonage, and have put it in thorough repair, and furnished it throughout, besides carpeting our new church, and buying the pulpit furniture.

We have a ladies' prayer meeting that meets every Tuesday afternoon. We have precious seasons of grace at these meetings. To God be all the praise and glory for his abundant mercies! We are in hearty sympathy with the week of self-denial, as suggested by Bishop Galloway. With best wishes for the editor and all the readers of our ADVOCATE, I am,

Yours in the work,

EVA R. BINGHAM.

From the Work.

GRAND CANE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: We are thankful to report things going on well on Grand Cane circuit. We have six good Sunday-schools. So much can not be said for regular prayer meetings, however.

The people have been very kind to us. They have bought and furnished a comfortable parsonage in Grand Cane. The people all over the work have shown an unselfish spirit in this. Among others, Rev. T. W. Scott, local elder, and many Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist ladies, deserve especial mention for their zeal and tireless energy. We are praying now for a great awakening and a gracious revival all over the work.

Bro. Wimberly did a good and faithful work here last year. We hope to reap of his sowing.

We would be delighted to have you at our District Conference. Please come.

A. T. GALLOWAY.

WESSON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: You ask for items from the work. This is the response:

1. Accessions, to date, thirty-three, with nine applications for membership pending.

2. Two young men admit the call to preach, and will doubtless apply for license at our next Quarterly Conference.

3. Finances well up.

4. No "storms," nor "poundings," but an uninterrupted succession of deeds of kind thoughtfulness.

5. A kitchen added to the parsonage improvements, and adding greatly to the comfort of the parsonage inmates.

6. We confidently expect Wesson and Beauregard to lead all the other charges in the Brookhaven district.

T. L. MELLEN.

BETHEL CIRCUIT.

There are seven churches on this charge, most of which are in a properous condition. There is a very good Sunday-school at each appointment, some of which are very prosperous. There has been only about seven accessions to the church up to date. We are looking and praying for a great revival all over this charge. May God be with us and help us to take the world for Christ.

R. A. BRELAND, P. C.

The Missionary Quilt.

Reports concerning the missionary quilt enterprise are quite encouraging. It is hoped the ladies who have the management of the work will have their quilts completed in due time and that, at least, $10 will be collected on each quilt thus made, on or by Thanksgiving Day, for the cause of missions. Thanks to ministers for their kindness.

COUSIN CATE.

Worship in Song.

The truth is, singing is a part of our public worship. At a concert, we listen and criticise. We go for that purpose. We have nothing to do but pay our money, and get the best we can. The singers are performers, and we are the auditors. In the church, we are worshipers, and not mere auditors; and performers in the orchestra, the pulpit, or the pew are an abomination and a mockery. The hymns are before the eyes of the people, they know the words that will be sung and they are for the people to to sing. And where this part of the worship is removed from them, either by their authority or consent, there is a withholding from God of the service that is due. There need be no arraying the congregation against the choir, but a blending of the two. The choir is needed with the organ, not to do the singing, but to lead the congregation. Let it be a good choir and well trained, and let it sing with its best skill; but be it remembered that its only office is to lead, and not perform. Scattered through the pews, in almost every church are voices as sweet and musical, belonging to persons as well instructed, as any that are in the choir: and these voices have no right to be silent. We should place the hymn book in the hands of all our children, and teach them to sing with us the songs of Zion. Then, when is read from the Scriptures, "O, come, let us sing unto the Lord," the words will have a deep significance; and they will meet their proper response in our dealing with the songs of the sanctuary. There are churches where these words are not needed. There is a refreshing glow and earnestness in their worship. Their choirs will sometimes open with a chant or an anthem, but the three hymns are held to belong to and to be for the congregation. A new tune is occasionally sung, but it is repeated until it is made familiar. Far, with harmony of plan and effort, it is intended that all the people shall praise the Lord. So may it be in all our churches, as it is with them that sing the new song before the throne.—Musical Herald.

Says Frank Siddall: "I inhale Compound Oxygen nearly every day of my life, it invigorates the nerve centres. My capacity for work increases, and also my enjoyment of life. I go up to Drs. Starkey & Palen's office at any hour that I am able to get away from my office. I prefer the morning, for its beneficial influence endures throughout the day. Then I come straight back and buckle to work again. I am a well man now, and continue its use only as an invigorator; but both my wife and son have tried it (the former for serious complaints) with the most satisfactory results.

"Dr. Starkey left a lucrative practice to apply the fruits of long researches; and if he had advertised as I have done, he would now be a millionaire. But he and his partner, Dr. Palen are well known. Here is Judge William D. Kelley, 'the father of the House of Representatives,' as he is called. Ask him."

"Yes," said Judge Kelley, "I can endorse all that Mr. Siddall has said about the benefits of Compound Oxygen, for it was the means of restoring me to health after everything else had failed, and I thought I must die. I had frequent hemorrhages. But Compound Oxygen came to my notice; I tried it and was saved."

"I have known Dr. Starkey for thirty years," resumed Mr. Siddall. "He is worthy of my most sincere endorsement. But I wish he would advertise his great remedy."

Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., will send their pamphlet of cures and testimonials to anybody who will write for it.

Sorrow was made for man, not for beasts; yet if men encourage melancholy too much, they become no better than beasts.—Cervantes.

Facing Trouble.

"I had plowed around a rock in one of my fields for over five years," said a farmer, "and I had broken a mowing-machine knife against it, besides losing the ground in which it lay, all because I supposed it was a large rock that would take too much time and labor to remove it. But to-day, when I began to plow for corn, I thought that by and by I might break my cultivator against that rock; so I took my crowbar, intending to poke around and find out its size once for all. And it was one of the surprises of my life to find that it was little more than two feet long. It was standing on its edge, and so light that I could lift it into the wagon without help."

"The first time you really faced your trouble you conquered it," I replied aloud, but continued to enlarge upon the subject all to myself; for I do believe that before we pray, or, better, while we pray, we should look our troubles square in the face.

Imagine the farmer plowing around that rock for five years, praying all the while, "O Lord, remove that rock!" when he didn't know whether it was a big rock or a little flat stone. We shiver and shake and shrink, and sometimes do not dare to pray about a trouble because it makes it seem so real, not even knowing what we wish the Lord to do about it, when, if we would face the trouble and call it by its right name, one-half of its terror would be gone. The trouble that lies down with us at night and confronts us at first waking in the morning is not the trouble that we have faced, but the trouble whose proportions we do not know.

You Who Lead Sedentary Lives

will find great relief from constipation, headache and nervousness, by taking Simmons Liver Regulator. It is a simple, harmless, vegetable compound, sure to relieve you. Persons of sedentary habits often suffer with kidney affections. If they would maintain the strength of the digestive organs and improve the quality of the blood by taking the Regulator, it would restore the kidneys to health and vigor.

A Letter for God to See.

Who is there that at one time or another has not been in a strait, not knowing how to decide between this or that? Advice is the easiest thing in the world to obtain; indeed, it is so very easy that most every one gets more than is needful. Do we come to a turn in the long lane of difficulty, with a right or left hand to follow, friends are never wanting to show us manifold reasons why the one that they choose is the only one that leads to the best way out. Do emergencies arise that need a careful handling to manipulate them for the best, how many know just what to urge as the wisest and best of plans!

A young man, who had lived only twenty-five years, was in such a place. He wanted to do as God would have him do, because he loved and served him, even although he was king and was seated upon a throne: and as far as he knew how his decisions were wise.

But there came into view another king, who was proud and ambitious, who did not love God, and who desired to conquer all the land with all its fenced cities, and make the young king subject unto him. He sent three of his greatest men to ask the young king in whom he trusted, and telling him that the God in whom he put his confidence was quite unable to save him from his enemies; but offering to be a deliverer to him and his people if they would put confidence in his strength. We can well imagine the advisers that stood about the king, who was so greatly frightened by the adversaries; how some counsel one way, some another; and now he listened to the suggestions of his courtiers as he gave them audience. But after he had read the letter that Sennacherib, the great king of Assyria, had sent to him, containing a mixture of advice and threats, what did he do? Did he sit down and fret and worry? No. "Hezekiah went up into the house of the Lord and spread it before the Lord." And then he prayed over it. And God heard and delivered the land.

Have you any letters for God to see? Have you any prayers to offer? His ear is not heavy that he can not hear, nor his arm shortened that it can not save. There is just as much chance for you to spread your troubles before the Lord as there was for young King Hezekiah. His kingly greatness had nothing to do with his getting deliverance; he just went before God and knelt in prayer, and his prayer was heard. Can you do the same?

David says in a psalm of praise: "O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come;" that includes us. There is a great deal of comfort in the verse that says: "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him." There was a time when Moses had pitched the tabernacle without the camp, and he went into it to spread his anxieties before the Lord; and he heard the precious words, "I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight." And as if that was not enough to fill his servant's heart to overflowing, God adds: "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."

Are you looking for rest, and finding none? Read that verse again: it is God who gives thee rest. When—after death? Oh! no: it is here, now; day by day, when you need it. Spread your letter before the Lord, and ask for help: and you shall surely obtain it.—Christian at Work.

THE ETHICS OF DRESS.—Ought there not; among Christian women, to be greater simplicity in dress on certain occasions, when costly or elaborate attire may place a stumbling-block in the way of those who are poor? In church, for instance, or for shopping, our beautiful satins or lustrous velvets are offenses against fitness and violations of good taste. It should not be in the power of any woman who can obtain a whole and decent gown of any dark and inexpensive woolen stuff, to complain that the dress of her wealthy neighbor shuts her out of the church, because those who can afford the elegant toilet ought to make simplicity fashionable. There are always social occasions which afford opportunities for the wearing of beautiful costumes in the company of those who are not tempted to envy or covetousness by any lack of their own.—Christian Intelligencer.

How many of our most cherished beliefs are like those drinking-glasses of the ancient pattern, that serve us well so long as we keep them in our hand, but spill all if we attempt to set them down!—Holmes.

Women needing renewed strength or who suffer from nervous weakness, will find nothing to help them like Moxie Nerve Food. It is certainly a great invigorator, and will restore a shattered nervous system to a healthful and natural condition in a few days. The physicians say it is the best nerve food yet discovered.

A man's heart gets cold if he does not keep it warm by living in it, and a censorious man is one who ordinarily lives out of his own heart.—F. W. Faber.

CRYING BABIES

ARE MADE

GOOD NATURED, HEALTHY, HEARTY,

BY THE USE OF

Lactated Food

Babies do not cry if they are satisfied, and they can not be satisfied if they are not properly nourished by their food, or if it produces irritation of stomach or bowels.

Very many mothers can not properly nourish their children, and the milk of many mothers produces bad effects in the child because of constitutional disease or weakness.

For in such cases there is a remedy in

LACTATED FOOD.

Hundreds of physicians testify to its great value. It will be retained when even plain water and milk is rejected by the stomach, hence it is of great value to all invalids, in either chronic or acute cases.

ITCHING FIVE LONG YEARS.

New Rhinegield, Miss., Jan. 2, 1886.

Hop Bitters Co.:

I wish to say to you that I have been suffering for the last five years with a severe itching all over. I have heard of Hop Bitters and have tried it. I have used six bottles, and it has done me more good than all the doctors and medicines that have combined to do with me. I am old and poor, but feel to bless you for such a relief from your medicine and torment of the doctors. I have had fifteen doctors at me. One gave me seven minces by solution of arsenic; another took four quarts of blood from me. All they could tell was that it was skin sickness. Now, after three four bottles of your medicine, I am well and my skin is well, clean and smooth as ever.

HENRY KNOCHE.

Good Words—From Good Authority.—* * * We confess that we are perfectly amazed at the run of your Hop Bitters. We never had anything like it, and never heard of the like. The writer (Bentley) has been selling drugs here nearly thirty years, and has seen the rise of Hostetter's, Wheeler and other bitters and patent medicines, but never did see of them, in all her days, begin to have the run that Hop Bitters have. * * We can't get enough of them. We are out of them half the time. * * From letter to Hop Bitters Co., from BUSTON, MYERS & CO., Wholesale Druggists, Cleveland, O.

Good for Both.—"We are pleased to say that our baby was permanently cured of a serious protracted case of diarrhœa of the bowels by the use of Hop Bitters by its mother, which at the same time restored her to perfect health and strength."—THE PARENTS.

MISERABLE INDEED.

"I do not know a more miserable wretch than I was, in case where persons are sick or pining away from a condition of miserableness that no one knows what ails them or can obtain patents for the boons to be obtained by the use of Hop Bitters. They begin to cure from the first dose, and keep it up until perfect health and strength is restored.

WICKED FOR CLERGYMEN.

"I believe it to be all wrong, and to be wicked, for clergymen or any one publicly even to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article is made up of common valuable remedies known to all, and that all physicians and druggists use and trust in daily, we should freely commend it. I, therefore, cheerfully and heartily endorse and use Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them."—REV. E. R. WARREN, Scipio, N. Y.

A Good Account.—"To sum it up, six long years of forbidden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year—total, $1,200—all of which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her own housework for a year since without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it for their benefit."—JOHN WILLIS, Butler.

Never Forget This.

If you are sick, Hop Bitters will surely aid Nature in making you well when all else fails.

If you are costive or dyspeptic, or are suffering from any other of the numerous diseases of the stomach or bowels, it is your own fault if you remain ill, for Hop Bitters is a sovereign remedy in all such complaints.

If you are wasting away with any form of Kidney disease, stop tempting Death this moment, and turn for a cure to Hop Bitters.

If you are nervous, use Hop Bitters.

If you are a frequenter, or a resident of a miasmatic district, barricade your system against the scourge of all countries—malarial, epidemic, bilious and intermittent fevers—by the use of Hop Bitters.

If you have rough, pimply or sallow skin, bad breath, pains and aches, and feel miserable generally, Hop Bitters will give you fair skin, rich blood, and sweetest breath and health.

That poor, bedridden, invalid wife, sister, mother, or daughter, can be made the picture of health with Hop Bitters, costing but a trifle. Will you let them suffer?

In short they cure all Diseases of the stomach, Bowels, Blood, Liver, Nerves, Kidneys, Bright's Disease. $1,000 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help.

From the General Minutes we gather the following figures of ministerial relations for the past ecclesiastical year: There were admitted on trial, 280; admitted into full connection, 233; readmitted, forty-two; discontinued, forty-three; located, sixty-two; withdrawn or expelled, twelve. There are 359 superannuated, and 184 supernumeraries, and 3,891 effective, making, in all, 4,434 traveling preachers. There were 145 traveling deacons and 121 traveling elders ordained. There were 143 local deacons and fifty-one local elders ordained, making, in all, 460 ordinations. The increase in the total number of traveling preachers is 107 over last report. There were 33,871 children baptized, and 74,582 adults. This is an increase over last year of 4,325 infant baptisms and 15,827 adult baptisms. There are 11,177 Sunday-schools, being an increase of 555 over last year. There are 77,517 teachers—an increase of 5,544. There are 612,519 scholars—an increase of 50,772. There are 10,951 churches, valued at $13,835,149. There are 2,030 parsonages, valued at $2,247,288.

BEGIN AT ONCE.—Begin at once to do whatever your Master commands. Begin to practice religion. A child would never learn to walk by a hundred talks about the law of gravitation; it must use its own feet, even at the risk of many a tumble. Wait not for more feeling, or more pungent convictions, or for anything that you read of in other people's experiences. These are all snares and hindrances, if they keep you from doing at once the very first act that will please Christ. Have you never opened your lips to an unconverted friend, either to avow your own feeling or to do that friend some good? Then try it; you will strengthen yourself, and may bring an unexpected blessing to him or her. In short, you must begin to obey a new Master; to serve a new Savior; to strike out a new line of living, and rely on God's almighty help to do it. When you give yourself to Christ in this whole-hearted and practical fashion, he will give you a thousandfold richer gift in return. Yes, he will give you himself! When you possess Christ you have everything.—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

The Spirit of Christ.

In the eight chapter of Romans, Paul has written this unequivocal sentence: "Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." We suppose this to mean that the possession of the Holy Spirit is essential to a true disciple of Christ. It is said of Christ that he was "full of the Holy Ghost." His disciple must be filled with the same Spirit. The life of Christ on earth is a vivid exhibition of the work of the Spirit through that life upon the world. It is unfortunate for us, and a hindrance to our personal development in religious character, and a serious barrier to the aggressive movements of the church, that we study the Spirit of religion, as manifested in the lives of men, rather than as manifested in the life of Christ. And it is a very serious error to follow men rather than to "follow on to know the Lord."

The life of Christ among men was the only manifestation the world has ever had of perfect obedience to the second table of the law. Every act and word and movement of that life was a simple commentary on the beauty and utility and power of that law. The works of the Spirit on his human heart were transformed into the fruits of the Spirit in his human life; and these fruits were offered to the hungry souls that waited upon his ministry. Studying the workings of the Spirit in him by their outward manifestations toward men, we find the proof of his love to men in the work he did among them, and for them. The plain truth is, his love for men was demonstrated to be genuine by the deeds of his life; and those deeds were the results of his being "full of the Holy Ghost."

Now, if the disciple has the same Spirit, he will do the same works. The Holy Spirit will not produce one temper in Jesus and a different temper in his disciple. The world has judged Christ by the very law he laid down for the judgment of others: "By their fruits ye shall know them." These fruits of the Spirit are not only the evidences of our love to men, but they are the only evidences to men of our loyalty to Christ. Loyalty to Christ and love to men! These are the two great principles that underlie and permeate and vivify every true religious life. They are the complements of each other. They are the essence of the two great tables of the law given forth amid the Divine splendors of Sinai. They are so closely correlated that it was a matter of surprise to the Apostle John that a man could pretend to be loyal to Christ and at the same time not love his brother. "If a man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" It is simply impossible to sever "what God has joined together." Love to men is the effect of love to God. If we love God, the effect is sure to display itself. If the effect is wanting, it is because the cause is absent. If we do not love our fellows, it is no use to make protestations of love to God. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God."

The Christian religion is not a one-sided thing. It has two sides: one facing God-ward, and the other facing man-ward. The two tables upon which God, with his own finger, wrote the moral law were exactly alike in size and shape and weight. The inscription on the one balanced the inscription on the other, so that they are in perfect equipoise forever. John puts the case in this way: "This commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother also." There is no other way to do.

The fruits of the Spirit are manifested more largely under the second table of the law than under the first. In our work for men we declare the character of our religion; and here the world, as well as our Lord, passes judgment upon that religion. Love and long suffering, gentleness and goodness, meekness and temperance are the graces that are developed in keeping the precept: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." These graces the Spirit of Christ produces in every heart of which he has possession. And when these graces flower out in the life, in deeds for the good and salvation of men, we may say truthfully, We are his.

Christianity Dying Out in This Country!

The Independent has lately given the statistics of the different churches in the United States. It having been often asserted that "the religion of Christ has lost its power," we reproduce part of the Independent's editorial for the comfort of any who entertain gloomy views in regard to the successful propagation of Christianity in our country:

Four years ago we presented statistics, showing that our churches, not including several denominational fragments, independent congregations, the Jews, or Mormons, had 115,610 churches, 81,717 ministers, and 17,267,178 members. The totals for the same bodies are now 132,435 churches, 91,911 ministers, and 19,018,977 members. We do not claim that the figures are in all cases exact. Estimates have, in some instances, to take the place of actual count; but the returns, as a whole, are to be relied upon as closely approximating the truth. No deduction has been made for members in mission fields abroad; but, on the other hand, the Methodist statistics of members do not include the ministers, and the Congregational statistics do not include the missionary membership of the American Board.

The gains of the four years are magnificent. The net increase of members is 1,631,799. That is, the churches have in this period not only received enough new members to make good their losses by death, discipline and otherwise, but to increase the number of professing members by over sixteen hundred thousand. This allows, as will be noticed, only a comparatively slight gain to the Roman Catholic Church. Sixteen hundred thousand increase in four years is at the rate of 407,949 a year, or 1,117 every day in the year, or 46 every hour in the day. Is not this a grand demonstration of the propagating power of Christianity?

The increase in churches has been 15,325. This means a gain of 3,831 every year, and more than ten every day. And every new society means a new building, a new building means an investment of money, and such investments mean faith in the present and future of Christianity. The increase of ministers is 9,694, which is about twelve per cent., and is at the rate of 6½ a day, or 2,423 a year. This, too, is an indication that the alleged decay of faith is purely imaginary. The churches must have some vitality if they can go on adding 2,400 ministers every year to the great army already in commission and furnish means for their support.

The table of net gains shows that the Methodist family is at the head of the list, with the Baptists second, the Lutherans third, the Presbyterians fourth, the Episcopalians fifth, and the Congregationalists sixth. The order is a little different if the various families be arranged according to present strength in numbers. The Methodists are first, the Roman Catholics second, the Baptists third, the Presbyterians fourth, the Lutherans fifth, the Congregationalists sixth, and the Episcopalians seventh. Of 19,018,977 communicants, nearly every fourth communicant is a Methodist, every fifth a Baptist, every seventeenth a Presbyterian, and every twentieth a Lutheran.

Some interesting results are brought out in the classification according to polity. The Episcopal polity is easily first as to churches, ministers and members, the Congregational second, and the Presbyterian third. It is noticeable that the Methodists appear in each of the three classes. In respect to churches and ministers the Congregational polity is not far behind the Episcopal polity, but of members it has little more than half as many.

More than 132,000 churches, almost 92,000 ministers, and over 19,000,000 members in a population of less than sixty millions! What a mighty force in the education, civilization and elevation of our country! Inspired and guided by the Spirit of God, united in bonds of Christian fellowship, this mighty force must be irresistible.

This leaves a most insignificant number to be classed as infidels and atheists, for the general opinion is that the adherents to Christianity are about two or three times as many as her communicants. What if this mighty army of the Lord of Hosts should spend just one-seventh of the time in earnest, practical Christian work? What if the Spirit of God should come upon this host as he did upon the little company on the day of Pentecost? What if the fire that burned in the very bones of the prophet should kindle its flames in the hearts of all those servants of the Lord? Oh! for the fervent, holy ambition to fill the souls of these Christians which filled the heart of Isaiah when he cried: "For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth."

In the Valley.

SOME SECRETS TOLD.

A visit to the Mississippi Valley in the latter part of May, this year, delights the eye and gladdens the heart of a lover of agriculture. The fields everywhere give promise of abundance of all that man would have grow upon them. I rarely ever saw such prospects for crops. Think of wide acres of corn being "laid by" on May 20, averaging five or six feet high (it looked a foot higher three days later), thick as a cane brake, and of the richest dark green color. Late in the evening it looked almost like a thunder-cloud lowering in the distance. From one acre of that land 122 bushels of corn were gathered last year, weighing the normal fifty-six pounds to the bushel. It was the Mosby Prolific kind, and shelled one bushel and over three pecks from an ordinary barrel of ears. It has a very small cob and a very long grain. If the reader is wise, he will not be carried away with wonders. Wonders are often attractive only as wonders. The most useful things of life are usually not of that kind. The land on which that large crop was grown was fertilized freely, not with the delusive stimulant called "cotton-seed meal," but with pure cotton-seed, with all their rich and lasting nutritive powers.

As I rode out Saturday morning from the plantation of Captain W. W. Moore, where this corn was seen, the cotton, yet growing and small, gave decided signs of maintaining its reputation as the great staple of the South, and assured the beholder that the snowy glories of the field will not be wanting in the coming autumn. In places where it had been planted early and chopped out it was mounting up to a foot in height, and was putting on its pyramidal forms with vigor and rapidity. Warm days, and especially warm nights, are the life of the cotton plant. The temperature of the last few days is the elixir of commerce, transmuting the elements of nature into gold.

Leaving the plantation, I plunged into a vast wilderness where no Cowper yet has found his lodge, and where naught disturbed the quiet monotony of my solitary way, save here and there a snake that lay basking in a genial spot where the sun's rays had found a pathway through the "boundless contiguity of shade" above, or a singing bird that, perhaps, had never seen a man before, or else a chattering squirrel that still enjoys safe liberty in these sequestered wilds. The path was narrow, and, in places, a little indistinct. The trees were tall and large, and the undergrowth and vines were here and there impenetrably dense, and everywhere unbrowsed. In these dark shades an owl can see at mid-day; and to hear suddenly one's hoot or laugh startles a man almost out of his saddle, and makes him hasten from the place. I imagined that a bear might meet me at almost any turn and throw himself upon his haunches in token of his readiness for an embrace which I should shudder at the thought of reciprocating. Happily for me, that bear did not appear, though he was doubtless not very far away. The soil over which I was passing was black and light and rich in the highest degree. The ultra-riparian deposit of the great Father of Waters, as well as of all his tributaries in the valley, is the very cream of the cream of soil. Near the banks, the coarse, heavy and sandy materials are deposited in times of overflow, while further away from the streams the finer essence of alluvial richness is lightly laid down. Every foot of this land might be cultivated. My horse did not wet his hoofs in going from Deer Creek to the Mississippi river. These middle lands are said to be low, but are quite as dry in good seasons as those on the banks of streams, and much richer and more easily cultivated. In times of overflow all the lands go under; in dry seasons none of them are too wet for the plow. They are being opened constantly. Here the African wards of the American nation are finding, and shall for generations find, congenial and most useful employment in bringing the richest lands in the world into the service of man. These fertile plains are to be the future home and earthly paradise of the negro. It is the only region left in America where the negro can make a clear living with reasonable labor. Here he has health, peace and plenty.

At Hayes' Landing we had a large congregation of attentive hearers on Sunday. The white population is increasing in this region. They have here a fine growing Sunday-school. Bro. Moore, our pastor at Mayersville, has strong hopes of the permanent growth of the church under his ministry. The people, white and black, are being Christianized. The negro churches have a rule that no member shall sign a whisky petition, or drink at the bar of a saloon; and they enforce the rule. Men who have shielded their own moral cowardice under the ebony shadow of the negro voter can no longer find a refuge there, but must acknowledge that if the saloon shall stand at all, it must stand, as it really always has stood, upon the misguided judgment and the perverted cravings of the white man alone. The drinking-saloon is the white man's institution. Its ungodly gains have been his; and the blame and the shame of it shall be his forever. It is getting to be an open secret, of which it might be well to inform the advocates of whisky, that the business of selling it is doomed. It is doomed to speedy extinction by an overwhelming and growing majority of the people. I discovered another secret on this trip: the secret of good luck. A planter on Deer Creek has found out and proven by years of trial that to give one-tenth of one's yearly income to the cause of God brings the best luck in the world. He has been trying it, and has to pay more and more each year to the Lord, and keeps out of debt, while most of his neighbors' plantations, I am told, are heavily mortgaged. Others are trying this secret of good luck; and what the end of it will be for good no man can foresee. I preached Sunday night on Deer Creek to a large, attentive, well-behaved and appreciative congregation of colored people. Peace reigns among the people throughout this region. I wish it were so everywhere. They said they wanted me to come again.

Thoughts on Church Extension.

BY REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

MR. EDITOR: Before me lies the report of the Church Extension Board to the General Conference for the four years ending March 31, 1886—the end of its first quadrennium. During this time the amount collected for this cause aggregates $136,875, which has been divided equally between the General Board and the Conference Boards.

Now, Mr. Editor, is this in accord with the genius of Methodism whose motto has always been to go forward, and that the strong should help the weak? The work of providing places of worship for those whom we gather from the world is inseparably connected with the idea of missions. To secure houses of worship is an indispensable to success and prevention to disintegration. Sheep not only need a shepherd, but also a sheepfold. While others wait for a door to be opened, the spirit of Methodism urges onward to new fields and seeks an entrance. While others may wait for finished houses and fixed salaries to call them, Methodism goes into the highways and hedges, calling men to come into the Master's feast. Thus Methodism has stretched out her arms and increased her strength till her achievements are an anomaly and a wonder to the ecclesiastical world. Where the brawny frontiersman goes felling the forest and preparing for civilization, the Methodist preacher, with saddlebags and Bible, follows next.

Indeed, Mr. Editor, I have always thought that that inquisitive gentleman who has become famous by calling at the house of the Arkansaw men must have been a Methodist preacher looking out for some place to make another appointment. Is it in keeping with our genius or our necessities to keep so much of this money in the old Conferences? Here where we are strong; where we number our members by the thousands; where we stand equal, if not ahead, of any other denomination in numbers; where we have the influence of strong, prominent men and women and thousands—yea, millions of dollars in the hands of our people? Could not our people at home with such advantages build their churches by voluntary contributions and allow all this money now collected to go into the more needy fields in the West?

In that field, if we succeed at all, we must build. The day for worshiping in school-houses and underbrush arbors has passed away in the West. Other denominations are there to build houses and prepare for permanent organization; and, if we would succeed, we must plan as wisely. Here we may sustain ourselves in inferior buildings and otherwise, but not so in the great West. To live there means to provide houses of worship. Fortify strongly and thoroughly the outposts where the enemy is strongest, is the principle of the good general. The policy of concentration on the weaker points is that pursued by the politicians of the day: those places where the weight of influence is all in favor of success to the party contributing the more to the doubtful places. Should not the same plan be pursued by the church? But, some brother says, we need help at home. That is true; but should not the people build their churches by contributions and assistance from the neighboring strong churches?

In a District Conference, not long since, a brother spoke of a church which he had built in a destitute (?) place. By making to the people a promise of $100 from the Church Extension Board, he succeeded in erecting a $1,000 house. Now is it not just and reasonable to suppose that a community which could raise $900 on the promise of $100, could have easily raised the other. Or could they not have erected a sufficiently neat house with the nine hundred? The trouble, I fear, of our people, since the establishing of the church extension movement is to depend too much on what they can secure from the Board.

By reference to the map which accompanies the report we find that by the operations of the Church Extension Boards the great majority of churches have been built in the older Conferences, while the work in the needy West has been meagre indeed. For instance—The two States of Tennessee and Georgia, with their strong Methodist population, their three strong Conferences and their influential position, socially and financially, are represented as having received aid for more churches than all the territory west of the State of Missouri, the State of Texas excepted. Or again, the State of Mississippi, with her two Conferences, and more than sixty thousand members, has received for more churches than all the Conferences on the north and eastern border put together. I do not mean to complain at this work done in these home fields. Churches are as necessary here as in the more destitute regions. To house-keep anywhere we must have a house. But I submit that this is not the genius of our Methodist spirit, nor the fundamental idea upon which the church extension movement was organized.

Too often, no doubt, we find communities applying to the Boards for help who are abundantly able to build houses of worship if they would only put forth the proper effort. Again, it will be seen that, taking our membership to be 1,000,000, and the amount collected to represent only three years, we have contributed less then five cents per member per annum for this great connectional interest. Certainly this is a poor showing indeed for a people occupying such a country as we and boasting such a church as ours. Two cents and a half per member to build churches in the destitute places at home or abroad does not signify much of the spirit of aggressiveness or brotherly kindness.

In the last issue of the ADVOCATE we notice the assessments on the Conferences for the present year aggregates $85,500, or a fraction more than eight cents per member for this cause. Is this assessment based upon the timidity of the Board, or is it an index to the lack of liberality of our people? Undoubtedly the Boards need more money than they get, and I can not believe our people would refuse to pay the full assessment of eight cents per member if they understood the work and its necessities. This is certainly a small per capita, and I do not see how any church can afford to send up less than the amount asked for. Let us push the cause with energy and intelligence, and all complaint will cease.

Personals.

One Charles B. Reynolds, once a Christian minister, but now an infidel, has been indicted, tried, convicted and fined $25 for blasphemy, under the law of New Jersey.

Dr. Sendder and wife go as missionaries to Japan at their own expense.

In one of the obituaries of this paper, occurs this sentence: "He had pluck, was a stirring man, a good provider, but had time to go to Quarterly Conference on Saturday." Will that be said of you, brother steward, when your obituary is written?

The degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon our corresponding editor, Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, of the Mississippi Conference, by Hiwassee College at its late commencement. This is an honor worthily bestowed, and will be worthily worn.

Rev. Dr. Parker, of City Temple, London, has invited Rev. Hugh Price Hughes to arrange for an eight day's mission in his church. Rev. Newman Hall has made a similar request for his church, and Mr. Hughes hopes to avail himself of these opportunities.

Rev. J. F. Hall, an old member of the Arkansas Conference, died May 13, at his home, in Quitman, Arkansas. "His sufferings were intense, but he was resigned, and his end was peaceful."

President Pope, of Millersburg Female College, Ky., writes that his school has had a fine session and that every boarder in the college has made a profession of religion!

Dr. Fitzgerald, of the Nashville Advocate, was in New York City, last week, and charmed the Methodist Preachers' Meeting with a sparkling talk.

Three of the most prominent laymen of the Methodist Episcopal Church have died lately: Hon. Oliver Hoyt, of Connecticut; Hon. W. C. DePauw, of Indiana, and David Preston, of Michigan.

Rev. John Ritchy, of Okolona, will preach the commencement sermon of the Buena Vista (Miss.) Normal College, June 12.

Rev. T. D. Witherspoon, D. D., of Louisville, Ky., has been elected to the chair of the Perkins professorship in Columbia Theological Seminary. If we mistake not, this is the chair which was occupied by Prof. Woodrow, and from which he was with so much difficulty ousted.

Mr. Blaine will take a trip to Europe, this month. It is said that he needs rest!

The Advocate of Missions is hereafter to be called, The Missionary Reporter. That is a good change.

Mr. Estey, the great organ maker, celebrated his golden wedding the other day. The six hundred employees were given a holiday in honor of the occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Estey are members of the Baptist Church.

Mr. Hostetter, of Bitters fame, has his life insured for $1,000,000. That speaks volumes for the value of his Bitters!

Buffalo Bill crossed the water, and the passage transformed him into the biggest lion that England has seen in a long time.

Jonas G. Clark has announced to the corporators of the new Clark University, at Worcester, Mass., that his gift will be the sum of $2,000,000.

Dr. T. S. West, the diligent presiding elder of the Seashore district, gave us a call lately. The work is going on well under his administration.

Rev. T. J. Newell, president of Grenada Collegiate Institute, writes as follows: "We are closing a most delightful session, the most successful and prosperous of our history." The commencement exercises will begin June 12. The programme has been published.

Thomas A. Edison has returned to New York, from Florida, with his health much improved.

Rev. B. S. Raynor, of Enterprise, Miss., writes that "Childrens' Day" with him was a success. The attendance was large, and the collection reached $11 95.

Rev. J. R. Zachary, at Stonewall, has added twenty-three members lately—the result of a week's special services.

Rev. D. A. Givens, formerly a member of the Mississippi Conference, has been immersed and joined the Baptist ministry.

Dr. S. K. Cox, in the Episcopal Methodist, speaking of Dr. McFerrin, makes the following suggestion:

Would it not be a suitable tribute to this grand old Nestor of Southern Methodism, to raise a Memorial Fund, say of $100,000, to be turned over to the Church Extension Board to be expended in the erection of houses of worship, each to bear the name of "McFerrin Chapel." This would perpetuate his name and memory in every part of our territory, and in a manner most worthy this faithful servant of the church. Let the amount be raised in one dollar subscriptions, that all may take a part. Of course, individuals who are able may multiply their subscriptions to any amount they desire.

Items of Interest.

During the past year the disbursements from the Slater Fund for the education of the negroes amounted to $10,000.

After a desperate effort of two months' duration, the Florida Legislature concluded to elect Hon. Sam Pasco, United States Senator by acclamation.

J. C. Clark, president of the Illinois Central railroad, has resigned, and Stuyvesant Fish has been made his successor.

The sixth Annual Convention of the Societies of Christian Endeavor will meet in the Methodist Church, Saratoga Springs, July 5.

The New York Legislature has passed a bill (!) against the English sparrow. If they will turn the boys loose on him, he will soon get tired of this country.

The Baptist Mission in Burmah contributed $31,000 last year for missions. The "heathen's blindness" is being cured.

The California Legislature appropriated for school purpose the sum of $1,600,000, which is $300,000 more than for any previous year.

Kentucky is also to have a Chautauqua. The place and date of meeting: Woodland Park, Lexington, June 28-July 8. A full programme is published in the Central Methodist.

Hereafter, New York is to have "Arbor Day." It is to be the Saturday after the first of May.

Philadelphia has 127 Protestant Episcopal Churches and Chapels.

The Wesleyans, last year, reported 1,970 itinerant preachers and 15,009 local preachers and 21,579 class leaders.

The United States Forest Commission reports that 605,000,000 trees are thriving now where a few years ago none could be seen. So much for Arbor Days!

Princeton Theological Seminary graduated fifty-seven young ministers at its recent commencement.

The American Tract Society printed during its last year over 7,500,000 tracts, books and periodicals.

Union Theological Seminary recently graduated fifty young ministers.

From the Independent's statistics of the churches, we have figured it out that there is one minister to every 210 members of the church. If the population of the county is 60,000,000, then there is one minister to every 652 of the population!

Temperance.

WHAT ONE SOCIETY IS DOING FOR TEMPERANCE.—The twenty-second annual meeting of the National Temperance Society and Publication House was held in New York City, May 10. Rev. T. L. Cuyler was elected president; J. N. Stearns, secretary, and Wm D. Porter, treasurer. More literature has been printed and circulated, and the receipts of the publication department have been greater, than in any former year of its existence. One hundred and twenty-two new publications have been issued, of which fifteen are bound books, fourteen are pamphlets, and the remainder tracts, lesson-leaves, and other publications. Three thousand and fifty-six pages have been stereotyped during the past year. The full catalogued list of the publications of the society now numbers 1,591. 37,453,950 pages of books, tracts, and papers have been printed the past year, making 711,4171 27 pages since the organization of the society. Eleven new books have been issued especially adapted for Sunday-school libraries, and 397,631 volumes have been published. Over 100,000 copies of the Youth's Temperance Banner have been published every month, the past year. The total receipts for publications have been $51,155 62 the last twelve months, and for donations $9,813 47, making a total of receipts of $58,289 09; expenses, $54,096 63.

OUR LIQUOR BILL.—From the Quarterly Report No. 2, 1886-87, issued by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department of the United States, and reprinted in pamphlet form by F. N. Barrett, editor of the American Grocer, we collect the following:

The annual consumption of domestic and imported distilled spirits has averaged during the last five years 75,000,000 gallons. The annual consumption of beer, for the same time, has averaged 609,705,367 gallons. The annual consumption of imported wines, for the same period, has averaged 5,260,443 gallons. The annual consumption of domestic wines, for the same period, has averaged 17,302,982 gallons. Thus we drink down every year 706,196,364 gallons of liquors. The spirits costs us $337,500,000. The beer costs us $301,852,683. Imported wines cost us $16,402,656. Domestic wines cost us $34,782,686. Total—$693,538,025. Mr. Barrett's figures on the cost of these liquors are less than those in the last yearly statement of the Bureau, which makes the total cost to be $711,227,888. That is enough for this time.

Mr. Murphy closed his temperance campaign in Chicago, May 7, with an enrollment of 20,000 in his blue ribbon army.

The result of the vote in Wayne county, Miss., last week, was a majority of 397 for prohibition.

A PLAIN STATEMENT.—Elsewhere may be seen the advertisement of the great piano dealer, Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street. Certainly he has every reason to feel proud over the great popularity of the celebrated Mathushek Pianos. Some sixteen years ago he introduced here these celebrated instruments, and they have been tested and are pronounced superior in every respect. The prices and terms of this popular piano dealer are such as to attract all buyers. Mr. Werlein has also a number of cheap pianos and organs at such low prices that you would be surprised after seeing them. Write or apply to this great Piano House, and you will see what a bargain you can get.

ranks with the very best, and no Sunday School management should adopt a new Singing Book without carefully examining one of their "tried and true" Sunday School Song Books.

Voices of Praise (40 cts., $4.20 per doz.) Rev. C. L. Hutchins. Music and poetry dignified and classical, but not dull; in fact, bright and enthusiastic. Very large collection for the money.

Singing on the Way (35 cts., $3.60 per doz.) by Mrs. Jewett, ably assisted by Dr. Hollbrook, whose noble compositions are known and loved in all the churches. This, like the book above mentioned, does excellently well for a Vestry Singing Book for prayer and praise meetings.

Songs of Promise (35 cts., $3.60 per doz.) J. H. Tenney and Rev. E. A. Hoffman—the first highly gifted, musically, and the second the author of many hymns of refined and beautiful quality. One of the newest books.

Song Worship (35 cts., $3.60 per doz.) L. O. Emerson and W. F. Sherwin, both celebrated compilers, composers and leaders, and the latter well-known as having had charge of the music at many Chautauqua meetings.

For other good books, please send for lists and catalogues.

For a lovely little book for the young children of a Sunday School, look no further than FRESH FLOWERS (25 cts., $2.40 per doz.) Emma Pitt. Sweet Hymns, Sweet Music, Pretty Pictures.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

Dyspepsia Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Rheumatism Is undoubtedly a blood disease caused by an excess of the lactic acid in the blood. Where there is perfect filtration of the blood there can be no rheumatism. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA will remove the poison, supply the acids and relieve the pains.

Scrofula Is caused directly by impurities in the blood, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, by purifying the blood, forces the impurities from the system.

Kidneys Through the Kidneys flow the waste fluid containing poisonous matter. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing pain in the small of the back and loins, flushes of heat, chills. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic, causing the kidneys to resume their natural functions.

The Liver By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood resolvent.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is without universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the most reliable remedy. Worm Confections made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country, but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and worms are the most frequently the result of these hidden appearances. When they are ill-tempered and feverish, moving over, restless and eating ravenously, again refusing a wholesome diet, loosing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave when the disease which caused the death has become entirely understood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms axid to the hopeless system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers—who are constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for as surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most infantile infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Direct attention to the signature to every package to be sure you get it, as it is to examine every bottle to see that the letters of it. The simple name of Fahnestock is not sufficient. Be sure to look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, Howard Co., Mo.

Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.

Yours, etc., J. V. HUBBARD, M. D.

BALTIMORE, MD.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock's" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. D. HASDY, M. D.

Our Young People.

THE GIRLS THAT ARE WANTED.

The girls that are wanted are good girls—
Good girls from the heart to the lips;
Pure as the lily is white and pure,
From its heart to its sweet leaf-tips.

The girls that are wan(e)d are home girls—
Girls that are mother's right hand.
The fathers and brothers can trust to,
And the little ones understand;

Girls that are fair on the hearthstone,
And pleasant when nobody sees,
And kind and sweet to their own folks,
Ready and anxious to please.

The girls that are wanted are wise girls,
That know what to hear say;
That drive with a smile or a soft word
The wrath of the household away.

The girls that are wanted are girls of sense,
Whom fashion can never deceive;
Who can follow whatever is pretty,
And dare what is silly to leave.

The girls that are wanted are careful girls,
Who count what a thing will cost;
Who use with a prudent, generous hand,
But see that nothing is lost.

The girls that are wanted are girls with hearts;
They are wanted for mothers and wives,
Wanted to cradle in loving arms,
The strongest and frailest of lives.

The clever, the witty, the brilliant girls,
They are very few, understand;
But oh! for the wise, loving, home girls,
There's a constant and steady demand.

—New York Ledger.

MR. EDITOR: We appreciated Bishop Galloway's letter, and hope that he will continue to remember our column. I like the ADVOCATE's new dress and think the type is plain. Daisy Smith, I don't think that the length of letters sends them to the waste-basket. It is another fault. I guess you can solve what it is. Ella L. Ragsdale, it was Elisha who made iron swim. It is found in Kings vi, 6. Sallie Seaman, it was Samson who slew more at his death than he slew during his life. Lutie L. Hood, Noah's ark was made of gopher wood. It is found in Genesis vi, 14. "Bridegroom" is found in Psalm xix, 5. Jesse was the father of David. Rev. S. H. Whatley is our pastor. This is his fourth year here. He preaches in Big Cane on the first Sunday of every month. Dr. S. P. Ward superintends a Sunday-school in the Methodist Church; but it is too far for me to attend regularly. I attend a school in the afternoon which is taught in a school-house nearer my home. I close this by asking, Which of Joseph's dreams was the most interesting? With many good wishes for the ADVOCATE, its editor and its readers. Your little friend,

ROSA MIXER.

BIG CANE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I have written to your paper once before, and you were kind enough to publish it. I will venture to write again. We have a very nice Sunday-school that seems to be progressing well. Our preacher this year is Bro. Anders. We all like him very much. I think he is going to do great work on this circuit this year—something we have been needing for a few years past. I will answer some of the little folk's questions: The word "bridegroom" is found in Matthew xxv, 1. Noah's ark was built of gopher wood, and is found in Genesis iv, 14. Jesse was the father of David. It is found in Ruth vi, 17. The word "ear-ring" is found in Exodus xxxv, 22. Samson slew more at his death than in all his life. It is found in Judges xv, 30. The nineteenth chapter of second Kings and the thirty-seventh chapter of Isaiah are alike. I will close by asking a question: How long did the children of Israel weep for Moses after his death? Your friend,

FANNIE HANSEY.

EAST BATON ROUGE PARISH, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to the ADVOCATE, I thought I would write this morning. I love to read the little children's letters. I am a little boy twelve years old. I live on the bank of Lake Providence, and the fishing is splendid. They catch white and striped bass in the lake. I go to the public school and study Nicholson's Arithmetic; grammar, geography, spelling, history and reading. There are three teachers in the school—Cousin Charlie Miller, Cousin Mattie Keller and Cousin Dessie Bell. We have a large Sunday-school, and Mr. Upton is our preacher. He is having a new Methodist Church built. I will close by asking the little folks a question: What does the word "Isaac" mean? I wish the ADVOCATE and its editor abundant success. Your true friend,

CHARLEY E. BEARD.

LAKE PROVIDENCE, Louisiana.

PERSONS who lead a life of exposure are subject to rheumatism, neuralgia and lumbago, and will find a valuable remedy in Dr. J. H. McLean's Volcanic Oil Liniment; it will banish pain and subdue inflammation.

MR. EDITOR: We are two little boys, six and four years old. We do not go to school, but recite our lessons to mother. We have one little sister; she is just as sweet as can be. We love to hear the letters and stories read to us every week when the ADVOCATE comes. We have always lived with grandpa until this year. Father bought a place and had a nice little house built, and we are living in our new home, which we like ever so much, but miss grandpa, grandma and Uncle Willie. We are only five miles away from them, and go to see them nearly every week. We are living but one mile from grandmother's, and can walk to see her any time. The answer to Sallie Seaman's question is found in Judges xvi, 30. We hope you will print this letter, as we want our grandma to see it.

Your little friends,

T. GRANVILLE BRABSTON,
JOHN B. BRABSTON.

BOVINA, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl twelve years old, and I thought I would write a letter to the dear old ADVOCATE, as I have never seen one from this part of the country. I am not going to school now; it was suspended on account of the measles. Miss Pattie Rodgers was my teacher. Rev. H. L. Vaughn is our pastor this year. We all like him so much. I will answer Sallie Seaman's question: Samson slew more at his death than he did in his life. I will ask one: What was Lot's wife's name? Your little friend,

ELLA LAUGHTER.

COCKRUM, Mississippi.

FAR better than the harsh treatment of medicines which horribly gripe the patient and destroy the coating of the stomach, Dr. J. H. McLean's Chill and Fever Cure by mild yet effective action will cure. Sold at 50 cents a bottle.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years of age. I have been going to school to Miss Annie Locke, and liked her very much. My papa is a local preacher. We have a Sabbath-school about two miles from us, and I attend. I will answer Nettie May Cameron's question: The word "needle" is found in Matthew xix, 24; Mark x, 25; Luke xviii, 25. Now will the children tell me where and how often is the word "eternity" found in the Bible. As this is my first letter, I hope it will be published. Your friend,

BESSIE BRUCE HOLMES.

WINONA, Mississippi.

A Memory of Early Days.

Bane of childhood's tender years,
Swallowed oft with groans and tears,
How it made the flesh recoil,
Loathsome, greasy castor oil!
Search your early memory close,
Till you find another dose:
All the slumbering frame revolts
At the thought of Epsom salts!
Underneath the pill-box lid
Was a greater horror hid,
Climax of all inward ills,
Huge and griping old blue pills!

What a contrast to the mild and gentle action of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, sugar-coated, easy to take, cleansing, recuperating, renovating the system without wrenching it with agony. Sold by druggists.

A BOY'S ESTIMATE OF HIS MOTHER'S WORK.—"My mother gets me up, builds the fire, gets my breakfast, and sends me off," said a bright youth.

"What then?" said the reporter.

"Then she gets my father up, and gets his breakfast and sends him off, then gets the other children their breakfast and sends them to school; and then she and the baby have their breakfast."

"How old is the baby?"

"O, she is 'most two, but she can walk and talk as well as any of us."

"Are you well paid?"

"I get two dollars a week, father gets two dollars a day."

"How much does your mother get?"

With a bewildered look the boy said, "Mother! Why, she don't work for anybody."

"I thought you said she worked for all of you."

"O, yes, for all of us she does; but there a'n't no money in it."—American Farmer.

JOHNNY'S COMPOSITION ON MEDICINE.—"There is two kinds of medicine besides the kind you Rub On and the first kind is the Soft Kind which you take with a spoon while A man holds your Head and you kick and Riggle some because it Tastes so, and the other kind is the Hard kind which is called Pills and it is the Hardest of the whole because it is so hard to go down but it does not make any Difference which kind you Take when you get it Took you wish you Had not for it makes quite a Row in your Stomach and Riots Around."

Farm and Home.

SENSIBLE.—I notice, says a Chicago lady, that, in all of this talk about what is designated as woman's sphere, the every-day routine work of the housekeeper is ignored. There is no reference to the work of the women whose lives are passed in home-making and keeping. They are not considered as active workers. They are regarded as a negative, non-productive class. Yet the profession of the housekeeper is regarded as the most natural and proper avocation of women. There is no other trade so complex. None more difficult. Add to this the cares of motherhood, and what else can a woman engage in which will as completely absorb every energy of which she is capable? To be a good housewife and mother is by no means the occupation of an idler. Perhaps my notions are obsolete, but I think the woman who creates a comfortable home, and raises children to worthy manhood and womanhood, is the noblest work of God, and is quite as much of a producer as the woman who writes a book, invents some machine, or follows a profession.—Congregationalist.

A GOOD DISINFECTANT.—However good your plumbing may be, your security will be greater if, every week, you use a disinfectant liberally. One that costs very little, and is perfectly odorless, is made by dissolving a heaped teaspoonful of nitrate of lead in a quart of boiling water, stir it with a stick and then add it to a pail of cold water. This is odorless and will not stain; it costs about three cents, and if it is thrown once a week down the bathtub closet and stationary wash-bowl, it will be money well spent. Another disinfectant may be preferred, only use something of the kind regularly on a certain day. If the day for doing a thing is fixed, it generally gets done; if "once a week" means any day, it is often forgotten.—Good Housekeeping.

MULCHING ORCHARDS IN SPRING.—An orchardist qualified to advise tells us that one of the difficulties in making apple trees bear is in keeping the soil around the roots moist and cool, as it used to be when they were surrounded by forests and when the soil was full of vegetable matter. But orchard soil is always thoroughly soaked at some time in the year, and if a heavy mulch is spread under the trees in spring the moisture can not be rapidly evaporated. The trees will be in nearly the same state that all orchards were in when the country was new, and other conditions being the same, there is no reason why they should not bear as they formerly did.

WORK-HORSES IN SPRING.—Few people are sufficiently careful with their work-horses at this season. If the horses have been idle, or nearly so, during the winter, it will be necessary to use caution in beginning severe work. Take plenty of time, give frequent rests, and if the collar chafes or sweats during a hot day, stop the horse, pull the collar back, and give him time to cool. A little care in this respect will save many bad sores, which may compel the owner to let the horse lie idle during a great part of the summer. Such is the sensible advice of an experienced horseman.

Never serve potatoes, boiled or baked whole, in a closely-covered dish. They become sodden and clammy. Cover with a folded napkin that allows the steam to escape, or absorbs the moisture.

You Carry

A reliable medicine chest to your home with one box of Ayer's Pills. As they operate directly on the stomach and bowels, they indirectly affect every other organ of the body. When the stomach is out of order, the head is affected, digestion fails, the blood becomes impoverished, and you fall an easy victim to any prevalent disease. Miss M. E. Boyle, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., puts the whole truth in a nutshell, when she says: "I use no other medicine than Ayer's Pills. They are all the any one needs, and just splendid to save money in doctors' bills."

Here is an instance of

who lost his medicine chest, but, having at hand a bottle of Ayer's Pills, found himself fully equipped.—J. Arrasmith, M. D., of San José, Cal., writes:

"Some three years ago, by the merest accident, I was forced, so to speak, to prescribe Ayer's Cathartic Pills for several sick men among a party of engineers in the Sierra Nevada mountains, my medicine chest having been lost in crossing a mountain torrent. I was surprised and delighted at the action of the Pills, so much so, indeed, that I was led to a further trial of them, as well as of your Cherry Pectoral and Sarsaparilla. I have nothing but praise to offer in their favor."

John W. Brown, M. D., of Ona, W. Va., writes: "I prescribe Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

T. E. Hastings, M. D., of Baltimore, Md., writes: "That Ayer's Pills do control and cure the complaints for which they are designed, is as conclusively proven to me as anything possibly can be. They are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of the profession."

HOLLEY—ZACHARIAH HOLLEY was born September 4, 1823, in South Carolina, in what was then known as the Chesterfield district. At the age of twenty he was married, and but a few years elapsed before he was converted and joined the Methodist Church. In 1854 he left his home in South Carolina and settled in Red River parish, La., where he resided until typhoid fever carried him to his grave, May 16, 1887, after an illness of but three weeks. He was the father of eleven children, eight of whom are still living, and has had twenty-nine grandchildren, seven of whom have passed away.

Since his conversion, Bro. Holley lived a consistent Christian life: the older he grew the stronger his faith, the brighter his hope, and the more perfect his peace. He fully realized the preciousness of his Savior. The church is sadly bereaved by his death; his family, heart-broken, and the community to a man deplore his loss. The general sentiment is, "What shall we do without Mr. Holley." He has raised his sons and daughters to revere the name of Christ, and, better than all else, he has left them an example of godly living, which will serve to restrain them from sin and draw them towards God. It was the privilege of the writer to receive from his lips, a short time before they closed in death, a glowing testimony to the faithfulness of Christ, and his entire dependence in him. He was "full of faith and the Holy Ghost," and triumphed in death, as in life, through Jesus Christ, his Lord, whom he had followed nearly thirty-nine years.

To his bereaved wife, who has walked life's paths with him for forty-three years; to his children and grandchildren, who loved him, and to his numerous friends, who respected and revered him, we can only point to the shining path by which he has ascended to his Father, and entered into the rest which remaineth to the people of God," and bid them, "Go and do likewise." G. A. MANDEVILLE.

DAVIS—GABRIEL W. DAVIS was born in Edgefield district, S. C., October 22, 1807; was married, in 1828, to Emeline Crawford, of Abbeville district. Together they began the journey of this life in Alabama, where he was powerfully converted under the preaching of Rev. Humphrey Williamson. He at once joined the Methodist Church, becoming an active member, performing the duties of class leader and steward. For more than forty years he walked with God; "and was not, for God took him."

For more than a year he was confined to his room, and, as a consciousness of the approaching end became more evident, his faith grew stronger, relying at all times upon a forgiving, compassionate Savior. His dear companion of so many years asked him a short time before his death if he was afraid to die. He said: "Oh! no. I have been leaning on Jesus for many, many years." He requested Bro. Parker to administer the sacrament, and for hours afterward he seemed to have a foretaste of that heaven to which he was hastening. His sufferings were very great; but he never doubted his acceptance with his Savior, or complained of his afflictions. He was a zealous supporter of the Methodist Church, and we all feel that he has entered upon his reward; and when he departed this life on December 16, 1886, he entered upon an everlasting inheritance with his loved ones who had gone before. May his children who he has left never forget his example, and strive to meet him in that blessed abode! L. D.

CARTER—WILLIAM B. CARTER was born January 17, 1816, and died in Jackson county, Miss., May 1, 1887. He married Mrs. Susan Davis in 1854. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in his sixteenth year. He was the father of seven children; four of them survive him. I have known but few, if any, who had the confidence of all his neighbors more fully than this man. There was, perhaps, not a more useful man to the church in that community. He was one of those men whom to know was to command your regard and esteem. He was quiet and unassuming in his manner, unpretentious in his religious professions, but deeply pious, observing scrupulously the laws of the church. He was not a mere, good, easy, inoffensive sort of man; he had pluck, energy, was a stirring man, a good provider, but had time to go to Quarterly Conference on Saturday. In his death the community sustains a great loss. We believe their loss to be his gain. T.

WRIGHT—The sweet little bud of promise, THOMAS GEORGE, the son of W. M. and Dillie Wright, of Gainsville, Texas, died April 30, at the residence of Judge W. C. Pipkin, Greensburg, La., having lived about four months. Death, being fixed in nature by the fall, as a destroying worm, began its fatal work as soon as it came into the world, and soon it faded, withered and died, and passed from the keeping of sorrowful parents to him who said, "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven." And friends laid him away for the resurrection morning. May God bless and save the surviving loved ones!

J. W. ELLISON.

SMITH—Mrs. LAURA A. SMITH (nee Epsom), wife of Wm. A. Smith, was born in Halifax county, Va., 1824, and died at her home in Carroll county, Miss., April 19, 1887. Sister Smith professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1842, and remained a faithful member of the same until the Master said, "Come up higher." A good woman has gone; her name gone from the roll of the church militant, but will be found written in the "Lamb's book of life."

Sister Smith was the mother of ten children, five of whom preceded her to the better land. She leaves a husband, five children, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. May the good Lord sustain the husband and children, and finally gather them, an unbroken family, to dwell in heaven.

D. C. FOUST, Pastor.

KOCH—NETTIE, eldest daughter of Peter and Lorenzo Koch, was born in Bozman, M. T., September 4, 1876, and died at the residence of her grandfather, Bogue Homo, Hancock county, Miss., January 8, 1887. During the month of October, 1886, Mrs. Peter Koch (Nettie's mother) left her home in the far Northwest, and with her family of children came to Hancock county, Miss., to see her aged parents. Here little Nettie sickened and died, far from her home and father. She was at the proper age to be interesting to all who knew her. To know her as a child was to admire her. Her intelligence was beyond her years. Respectful to her elders, kind and gentle to her playmates, and almost worshiping her parents, she won the esteem of all. It seems hard for one so young, with the great possibilities of life before her, to be taken away.

INDOLENCE IN THE CHURCH.—There is a good deal of religious laziness in this world. Once in a while we hear of a Christian worker who is overwrought, one who dies too soon or is laid aside through excessive devotion. But the occurrence is so rare that a small volume would probably contain the records of all such lives in a generation. There are more churches dying for the want of working pastors than they are pastors dying through excessive work for their churches. There are Sabbath-schools languishing for the want of energy in those who conduct them. There are classes that make no progress because lazy teachers sit before them and yawn through a lesson which they have not earnestness enough to teach if they were prepared. There are Christian men who let their church run down because they are too lazy to keep it up. Yet these same men make their own secular business succeed. It is a shame to do the world's work well and then Christ's work shabbily. What is wanted is a revival of Christian energy and zeal. God never blesses laziness. It is a farce for you to ask him to bless your parish work, your preaching, your teaching, your superintendency, if you put no life into your work. Consecration is a mockery unless it be made real by the utmost we can do. The curse of the church to-day is laziness!—The Presbyterian.

The Correct Time.

There are very few men who do not pride themselves on always having the correct time; and wonderful and delicate mechanisms are devised to enable them to do so. But the more delicate a chronometer is made, the more subject it becomes to derangement, and unless it be kept always perfectly clean, it soon loses its usefulness. What wonder, then, that the human machine—so much more delicate and intricate than any work of Man—should require to be kept thoroughly cleansed. The liver is the main-spring of this complex structure, and on the impurities left in the blood by a disordered liver, depend most of the ills that flesh is heir to. Even consumption (which is lung-scrofula), is traceable to the imperfect action of this organ. Kidney diseases, skin diseases, sick headache, heart disease, dropsy, and a long catalogue of grave maladies have their origin in a torpid, or sluggish liver. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, by establishing a healthy, normal action of the liver, acts as a cure and preventive of these diseases.

The pleasing announcement is now made that the Chinese government has issued a proclamation tolerating Christianity throughout China and promising protection not only to the foreign missionaries, but to the native converts. And what does this mean? Simply a Divine reiteration of the great commission—"Go." Will God's people recognize the command of their Master by generous contributions for those now in foreign lands, and for those who are eager to go and preach the gospel in the regions beyond?—Central Baptist.

Testimonials from persons who have been cured by a medicine ought to convince those suffering from the same disease, and would, if known to be genuine. Please notice that whenever we publish any testimony in favor of Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria, the name and address are given, and that we invite you to verify it by writing directly to the parties themselves.

ARTIFICIAL EYES
Are Now so Perfectly Made That No One Can Distinguish Them from the Natural Eye.

The Artificial Eye is not only a beautifier, but it serves other excellent purposes.
It enables the eyelids to move as freely as ever.
It restores the functions of the tear passages.
It prevents the eyelashes from turning within, causing inflammation.
It prevents distortion of features, as happens always in case of a young person who has the misfortune to lose an eye—and sometimes in the case of older persons.

News Summary.

MAY 24.

The French Cabinet crisis is growing serious. President Grevy has again appealed to M. Flonquet to form a ministry.——An attempt was made to kill the Tsar, in the Don Cossack country, by a student who fired at him as he rode by in his carriage.——The Emperor William will go to Gastein in July, as usual, notwithstanding the rumors to the contrary.——The strike of the Northumberland miners has ended, the men having submitted to a reduction of 12½ per cent. in wages.——The condition of Major Ben: Perley Poore was somewhat worse to-night.——In the trial of Jacob Sharp, for bribery, the jury was completed, when the prosecution challenged Foreman Lyons, and he left his seat. His place has not been filled when the hour for recess arrived. This ends the seventh day of the triat.

MAY 25.

The Opera Comique (Paris) was burned to-day. Fourteen persons who jumped from the windows are dead; forty-three are injured. It is believed that the occupants of the galleries are buried in the debris.——All efforts to form a French Ministry have, so far, proved futile.——The Crown Prince Frederick William's condition is improved. The doctors have decided that the disease is not cancer of the throat. They hope for his early recovery.——Advices from Panama state that small-pox is raging on the upper banks of the Amazon.——Major Poore was reported much worse this morning.——Queen Kapiolani has embarked for Europe.

MAY 26.

Additional details from Paris show that 200 lives were lost by the burning of the Opera Comique.——A campaign of incendiarism has been inaugurated in Russia. A destructive fire occurred near St. Petersburg on the twenty-fourth, by which sixty houses were destroyed. Placards were posted Sunday, saying that at twelve o'clock that night the villas would be in flames. Loss, several million roubles. The incendiaries have not been arrested.——The British steamer Wydale collided with the tug Ivy opposite Algiers to-night. The tug sank in about five minutes. One life lost.——President and Mrs. Cleveland have gone to the Adirondacks.

MAY 27.

M. Rouvier has consented to make an effort to form a Cabinet for President Grevy.——Evictions are being carried on at Bodyke, Ireland. Severe fighting and even bloodshed is feared.——Four hundred and sixty more men have joined the great strike in Belgium to-day. They attacked the troops guarding the mine property. Three of the lancers were wounded.——The Belt Line car stables were burned in New York to-day. Loss estimated at $1,345,000. Twelve hundred horses were roasted in the flames.——Thirty buildings were burnt in the Sixth District, this city, to-day. Loss estimated at about $35,000.——There have been four cases of yellow fever at Key West.

MAY 28.

M. Rouvier has formed a Cabinet for President Grevy. Gen. Boulanger has been left out.——It is officially announced that seventy-five bodies have been recovered from the ruins of the Opera Comique.——The Swiss Government Spirit Monopoly Bill has become a law.——The English cotton spinners have proposed, if two-thirds of the trade agree to run their mills on half time for eight weeks, to offset the cotton corner in Liverpool.——The strike in the Mons district, Belgium, is becoming general.——Maj. Ben: Perley Poore died in Washington, to-day, aged 67.——Another case of yellow fever is reported at Key West.

MAY 29.

The River Theiss, in Austria, has broken dykes at Csongrad and inundated 15,000 acres of land. The Temes and Bega have have overflowed their banks, submerging 100 square miles of fields and twelve villages.——Several German rivers are rising, especially the Elbe and Vistula, threatening serious damage.——Cardinal Gibbons has sailed for New York.——It is reported that cholera is making fearful ravages in the Argentine Republic. The people are dying like sheep.——The Pope celebrates his jubilee this year. On October 21, he enters on the fiftieth year of his sacramental career.——President and Mrs. Cleveland are spending their vacation at the Prospect House.

MAY 30.

The search for the bodies of the miners who lost their lives by the explosion in the Udston coal pit, at Blantyre, Scotland, still continues. Sixty bodies have been recovered; twelve are still entombed.——The Radical Congress, held in Brussels today, adopted a program embracing the separation of Church and State, compulsory education, regulation of the employment of children in factories, establishing a State fund for invalid women, and the enactment of a law holding employes liable for accidents to workmen.——In the National Drill, at Washington, the Lomax Rifles, of Mobile, won the first place and the prize of $5,000.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

The Abbott and Halliday Life of Beecher.

There seems to be more brain talent connected with the book written by Lyman Abbott, D. D., and Rev. S. B. Notice.

It is important that each auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society in the Vicksburg district be represented in the approaching meeting of the Mississippi Conference Society by a delegate or a carefully prepared report.

Presidents will please give attention to this matter, and also to the sending of delegates' names to Miss Annie Linfield, Wesson.

Summer Corsets.

It will be very comforting to ladies to know that Dr. Scott has just introduced his New Electric Summer Corset. It is a perfect fitting, comfortable, durable, and thoroughly ventilated corset. We invite the attention of our lady readers to Dr. Scott's advertisement in this issue. It strikes us as being just the thing required for Summer wear.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1887 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (thirteenth), July, 1887.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds. Several distinguished preachers invited from a distance will be in attendance and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. A very general expression having been made to continue the meeting for a longer session than usual, it has been determined to extend the time of the services of the camp meeting to two weeks.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.; W. Otis, W. J. Hearin, R. E. Jones, Mobile, Ala.; J. J. Flowers, Belling, Ala.; Dr. E. F. Gridley, Moss Point; J. P. Carter, Hattiesburg, Miss.; W. H. Foster, E. P. Mackie, J. H. Campman, B. O. L. Rayne, T. J. Carver, H. Jamieson, jr., P. Werlein, H. Haag, New Orleans, La.; or R. E. Price, the keeper of the camp ground, near Biloxi, Miss.

The public are invited to attend.

HUGH JAMIESON, JR., Sec.
NEW ORLEANS, May 16, 1887.

The second annual camp meeting for 1887 on Sam Jones Camp Ground will commence on the last Friday, August 26, 1887. The camp ground is beautifully situated, surrounded by mountainous scenery, and as fine ice cold springs as ever sought its level. The ground is situated on the L. N. O. & T. R. R.—commonly called Valley Route—146 miles from New Orleans, and ninety miles from Vicksburg; and the hotel and tabernacle are within a stone's throw of the railroad. Several distinguished preachers who have been invited will be in attendance, and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. The meeting will be continued ten or twelve days. The accommodations are large, and large additions will be made, and the accommodations will be sufficient for all who may come. Reduced rates of fare will be published later.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. F. Cassels, Dr. J. R. Whittington, A. J. Roberts, W. G. Langmen or J. K. Cobb, Ghoster, Miss.

The public are invited to attend.

A. J. ROBERTS, Pres.
J. F. CASSELS, Sec.

The sixteenth annual camp meeting for 1887 of Hemdington Camp Ground, near Crystal Springs, Copiah county, Miss., will begin on Thursday night, July 28, 1887, and continue eight days. This camp ground is situated on the Illinois Central railroad, 158 miles from New Orleans, and twenty-six miles from Jackson, Miss.

Ample accommodations will be made on reasonable terms for all visitors.

The ticket system will be preserved.

Reduced rates on the railroads are being secured.

All ministers friendly to camp meetings, with the public, are invited to attend.

DR. SCOTT'S
SUMMER CORSET

Owing to the unprecedented success attending the introduction of our Electric Corsets, and the hundreds of inquiries for an Electric Summer Corset, we have determined to make a special effort to market Dr. Scott's "Electric Summer Corset." It has already met with the most flattering popularity, thereby proving its value, comfort and durability. It is a beauty, made of extra sheer fine quality linen netting, with pockets all around which are placed our warm-giving magnets, which are highly charged with electro-magnetic fluid, that imparts a steady and gentle current, all feeling no discomfort to the wearer. They create no unpleasantness whatever. They can be worn by the most delicate with the electro magnetic power tested, and will last as safely as by the most robust, with comfort and quick results.

The above remarks refer equally to our entire line of Electric Corsets, which retail at $1, $1.50, $2, and $2.50. Abdominal, $3. The $1 and $1.50 goods are sold at $1.50. Abdominal Corsets of Superfine English Sateen, except Summer Corsets made in white and drab, are made to 36 inches; we make the Abdominal up to 36 inches. The postage on each is 15c. Every one is sent out in handsome box accompanied by a silver plated [illegible] with which the electro magnetic power is tested. Professional men assert that there is hardly a [illegible] which Electricity or Magnetism in any modification, and they daily practice the same, as your own physician will inform you.

THE SUNSET.

BY ROBERT GILMOUR.

I stood on a grand old mountain
And watched the setting sun
As it sank in the distant ocean;
And the day at last was done.

The encircling clouds grew crimson
With the glory of its light,
And, tinged with its farewell splendor,
They brooded o'er the night.

All day had a ceaseless worry
Pervaded heart and brain,
But the glorious light of the sunset
Brought back His peace again.

And only the sweet reflection
Of His care throughout the day
Threw comforting light around me,
And kept the night away.

O, holy light of the sunset!
Sweet emblem of peace to come,
When the cares of life are over
And we reach "home, sweet home!"

No more shall earth's troubles annoy me,
For God's sweet, sacred rest
Shall dwell in my heart like the crimson
That floated in the west.

Origin or History—Which?

A great blunder running very much through the evolution debates, as most generally seen, is in not carefully distinguishing between origin and history, and, secondly, in not as carefully distinguishing between the fact and the mode of creation. If we confine our debates to debatable ground, we will get along far more safely. Logomachy is a waste of words to no purpose. Proof that proves nothing need not be insisted on.

Let two axioms be immovably fixed at the outset, and we will avoid the laborious handling of a vast amount of heavy timber. First, there can be no debate about origin. Secondly, there can be no debate about a mode of creation. Both these things are inconceivable—absolutely unthinkable, and so are not debatable. The idea of absolute origin can not be crowded into the imagination. Try it.

Of course, there is no such thing as the origin of a principle. Origin, if there ever was such a thing, must relate to matter of some kind. And to think of matter, you must think of it as existing. You can not think of it as non-existent. That would be to think of nothing, which is a contradiction. If we think of matter, we think of its changes, its form, its history in existence. As to the question of the eternity of matter—that is no question at all. Practically—imaginably—there is no difference between the eternity and the disturnity of matter; while, philosophically or theoretically, the two things are as wide apart as the Poles.

There are two things that may be supposed to have been divinely created—viz., matter and life. And we may, perhaps, imagine, though we can not possibly know, that such creating was done in some way, or by some mode. We can not predicate mode, or manner, or way, or process of any Divine acts. We can take cognizance of such Divine acts, and such only as are brought about by secondary agency. Of direct Divine acts we can not take cognizance, because God is a Spirit, and we perceive sensorially.

Now, suppose, for the sake of the argument, we grant everything that is claimed by all the evolution theories. Evolution may begin with matter at a very early period in the history thereof. It is changed, and matter must exist in some form before it can change. Evolution supposes that matter, in some very primitive condition, evolved into other forms, and still others, on and on, and away in long periods evolved into living man. All this is history.

Now, whether this is true or not, is a question. It may be quite destitute of proof; may appear ridiculous; may contradict all the analogies of nature; may appear absurd and be untrue, and yet it may not contradict any distinct Scripture statement. It is an attempt to set up a mode of the creation of man. And we have seen that we can have no perception of a direct Divine act.

Suppose I were to assert the most ridiculous and incredible absurdity imaginable about the mode of human origin. I would say that at a certain exact point in the heavens, about half way to the sun, was the theater of man's making; that all the planets were summoned to assist in the work. To each was assigned his particular duty. One was to bring a leg, another an arm, another the head, and so forth; and, when they were all met, a supervising angel was to put the parts together and bring the man to earth, where God would put life into him. Very few would believe it, especially if I had no better proof than the monkey, tadpole and monad process. But can it be denied? On what ground? On the ground of its non-conformity to the usual order of nature? Do we believe in a Divine creation on the ground of its conformity to the usual course of nature? Surely not. We receive it as an exclusive, unparalleled sui generis. It has no support whatever in nature, but rests on its own single dogma. The Bible says God made man; but is as silent as to the method as to any other instance of Divine agency when the secondary agency is not named.

Then how can you deny some particular supposed method of human origination, however untrue it may seem, so long as you can not set up some true method instead? You have no more right to deny the monkey, mushroom and monad method than I have to deny the aerial star-agency process. I disbelieve the tadpole method, not, however, because of any scientific or philosophical reasons, for on that ground I would be obliged to deny any conceivable method. To deny that man grew, emanated, developed, or evolved from some former material conditions, would be to deny the plain teaching of Scripture in the first place, for the Bible says, in terms, that he was made out of existing material.

As to the mode in which this change was effected: by what processes, if any, the length of time required by such historic processes—on all questions of this sort the Bible is totally silent. And on all or any of them the mere Christian, not professing to be versed in natural science, can have no quarrel with the infidel scientist. The quarrel, and the only one we have with him, relates to another thing altogether. What is that other thing where we join issue with the skeptical naturalist? Answer: The Agency by which this change was brought about. Christianity holds that that agency is God, the Maker. Infidelity denies this agency, and, with inconsistency amounting to logical imbecility, confesses its inability to suggest any other efficient agency. So inquiry is driven to the alternative of Divine agency or no agency.

Therefore, all this suggestion about spontaneous generation, or tadpole-monkey generation, is mere logical twaddle. Grant it all, and you grant nothing material to the argument. The most apparently successful experiment in spontaneous generation conceivable is overwhelmingly answered thus: Then that was the Divine method. And as to the animal ancestry theory—the theory is in itself no theory at all. And for this reason: Chemical science has of late years unquestionably demonstrated the non-identity of matter. Then what is the difference between saying monkey-and-tadpole matter, and dust-of-the-ground matter? The meaning is essentially the same.

"The Age and Origin of Man, geologically considered by S. R. Pattison, Esq., and Dr. Friedrich Pfaff, professor of natural science in the University of Erlangen," is the title of a learned fifty-page treatise sent me by a literary friend, and is one of more than a hundred such essays now in my library, many of them from the Victoria Institute, and the American Institute of Christian Philosophy.

These papers evince a vast amount of learning and labor. In the Bavarian tract above cited, it will be noted, the subject is "geologically considered." The result is thus stated:

"We must, therefore, conclude from our researches until other facts are before us, that man appeared suddenly; and the oldest men that we find are as perfect and complete as those now living."

This is, no doubt, a sound conclusion of a debate between geologists; but it is one in which the mere Christian, who is not competing in geological fields, has no particular interest. Whether man appeared suddenly or gradually is immaterial in considering the question of Divine or non-divine agency in bringing him into being. It raises a question of method, not the question of whether. If man's emanation was sudden—that is, requiring no time in the process—be it so. If some period of time was required—a minute, an hour, a year or a million of years—be it so. In the one case instantaneousness was the method; in the other, gradual process was the method. Science might claim the sudden method, or the gradual method; but the mere Christian is an uninterested listener, unless they raise a question necessarily involving a denial of Divine agency at all. Method inquires how, but does not deny that God created.

A Christian ought to be unwilling to stake the veracity of revelation on any debatable question. The question whether God created is not debatable, because some other originating agency is not conceivable. To suppose some other originating agency would be only an attempt to change the name of the Almighty. Originating Agent is God, divide appellatives as you may.

I am not arguing against skepticism. I am only requiring skeptics to keep on their own ground. We admit far too much when we tacitly assert that if they could prove a lengthened process in man's creating, or making—no matter what may be the real or supposed length, variety or character of such processes—that then they have proved something about the question whether God did or did not create man. No, they have not touched that question. If they have proved anything, it is concerning the method of creating, not concerning the fact. So long as the Bible is silent on the subject of method, who cares what skeptics imagine or say about it? History of origin is an absurdity. Method of creating is an absurdity.

A Complete History of Methodism in the Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I respectfully ask the publication of a few explanatory items in relation to the work mentioned at the head of this article. For many years previous to 1872 the older members of the Mississippi Conference had felt much solicitude about rescuing from utter oblivion the history of our church within its bounds. Our older ministers were all dead, and not a page of our history had ever been published. Justice to the memory of the dead and to the edification of the living required it should be done without further delay. In 1872 our Conference, by a unanimous vote, requested me to undertake the task. At first I hesitated, was almost ready to say I could not; but I had always deferred to the will and wishes of my Conference, and I immediately commenced the work with a determination to write a true and readable history, with an expressed promise on the part of the Conference that they would see to its publication. At the end of three years and eight months I had finished a manuscript covering the history of our church in the widely-extended Mississippi Conference, from 1799 to 1869. When I reported to the Conference that the manuscript was ready for publication, we waked up to a recollection that we had all been reduced to pecuniary poverty by the late war, and of the one hundred and fifteen members of our Conference, but few ever had a spare dollar over current expenses, and we could not make the required cash advance for the publication of our history. As I had advanced even then beyond the common limits of human life, I committed the manuscript for safe keeping to my son, Rev. J. A. B. Jones, as I believed it would be needed some day. The publication was discussed at several Conferences, but finally deferred to the unknown future. In the meantime all our journals and papers on file were destroyed by the burning of Dr. Andrews' house in Vicksburg, at 3 o'clock A. M., December 27, 1883. I had but recently used all our journals with great care in the compilation of our history, and returned them to our secretary. But they were hopelessly lost, and the only written history of our church in the Mississippi Conference was to be found in my manuscript, and could be found nowhere else. This state of affairs roused up my son and I to feel that we must publish our manuscript if it cost us years of self-denial and rigid economy. We conferred with Dr. McFerrin last December, and he told us if we could put down five hundred dollars in cash, in conformity to the cash rules of the House, he would publish one thousand copies of the first volume, and give us until the end of 1887 to pay any balance that may be due. He said, in this way, if it met with a fair sale, we could make one volume pay for the next until all should be published. And now, in conclusion, I wish to emphasize a few wishes. My son and myself have already paid out of our own pockets between five and six hundred dollars in this enterprise; but we can not go on with it any further without the substantial aid of the ministers, members, and patrons of the church; but if they will promptly purchase the edition which will soon be on sale at the Publishing House, it will enable us to put another volume in press in a short time, and in this way we hope to publish the complete history in due time, without any embarrassment to any party. I make this appeal not only to those who live within the present limits of the Mississippi Conference, but to all who live in the nine Conferences, on territory which was formerly a part of the Mississippi Conference. Their primitive history was written in our lost journals and nowhere else, and, unless they get their early history from our book, it will be lost to them forever. For illustration: All of Alabama south of the Tennessee river, up to 1832, will have to get their history from our book, that being the time they were set off as an independent Conference. The North Mississippians will find their history in our book until they became a part of the Memphis Conference. The Texas Conference until 1840, when Texas was set off from our Conference; and the Louisiana Conference until 1847. If the preachers and members in those Conferences will obtain and read our book, they will find many rare and racy incidents in their early history of which they now have no knowledge.

Our history will be kept on sale at the Publishing House on the same terms as our catalogue books generally. The price will be fixed by the business manager, and wholesale purchasers will be allowed the usual per cent. for selling. All the money paid in will be placed to our credit for future publication until the end of the series. This will be the foundation-stone for all future histories in the same territory.

Yours affectionately,

J. G. JONES.

WEEK OF PRAYER AND SELF-DENIAL.

The suggestion of Bishop Galloway made through the press that a week of prayer and self-denial be set apart by the church was indorsed by the Mission Board in the following action:

Resolved, That in view of the pressing need of our missionary work growing out of the expansion of our missionary operations in the several fields occupied by us, and believing that the blessings of the Head of the church will not be withheld when properly sought by his people, we recommend that the week beginning August 8, and ending August 14, 1887, be observed throughout the church as a week of prayer and self-denial. The money obtained by such denial and by such thank-offerings as may be made in view of the abundant mercies of God in the large increase of membership in the church during the past year shall be applied to meet the existing exigency.

Pressing exigencies rest upon the church which arrest the enlargement of our mission work at a time when the hand of God is evidently opening "great doors and effectual" in every part of the field. The call for help, deep and earnest, comes to us from Japan, Mexico, Brazil, the Indian reservations, and our great field in the West. Barriers to the work are giving way in every direction, fresh fields are inviting us to enter and occupy, and our missionaries are overwhelmed by the demand made on their time and strength. They call for more laborers to enable them to proclaim Christ to the nations who are now, as never before, eager to hear. The Holy Spirit is moving on the hearts of many of the best men in the church, who are ready to consecrate their lives to the spread of the gospel. Like Saul and Barnabas, they are ready to go. Is the church ready to obey the command, "Set these men apart unto the work whereunto I have called them?" There is need of prayer. Christ shrunk from no pain and withheld no gift when opening the way of salvation for man. Is the church willing to give one week to self-denial and prayer for missions? God has done great things for us. Our land is prosperous. We have the gospel. Last year seventy-five thousand souls were added to our membership. Have we no thank-offering to lay on the altar.

The Sunday-schools are invited to unite in this week of self-denial and prayer. Let each pastor, superintendent and teacher press the matter on the hearts of their scholars. A gift from each of our seven hundred thousand Sunday-school children, if given with a prayerful, self-denying and grateful heart, will be as acceptable to God as the widow's mite.

MISSIONARY INFORMATION.

In the revised By-laws, under the duties of secretary, is the following:

In order to secure the greatest possible efficiency in the secretary's office as a bureau of missions, the secretary shall not be called from his office to attend the Annual Conferences, except for special reasons. He shall, in co-operation with the presiding elders and pastors, enterprise missionary mass meetings at such times and places as may be deemed most expedient.

One design of this regulation is to secure greater efficiency in the dissemination of missionary intelligence among our people. The growing demand for information respecting the operations of our church in the mission fields is one of the cheering signs of the times. The Board not only relieved the secretary of other duties, but placed at his command increased facilities for the publication of missionary literature. The monthly paper will be continued under the name of the Missionary Reporter. Leaflets will be placed at the command of each preacher who will send his address with the postage. For three cents in postage stamps we will send from fifty to one hundred leaflets for gratuitous circulation. We have some on hand, and shall issue them every month.

The secretary would be glad to correspond with the presiding elders and pastors relative to missionary mass meetings. We hope to enlist our ablest men in this work.

Bible Work.

MR. EDITOR: I desire, through the columns of your excellent paper, to give notice to all the friends of Bible distribution in Louisiana and Mississippi that I have been appointed district superintendent of the American Bible Society for Mississippi and Louisiana, and to let you know that I am now ready to visit auxiliaries and churches, and to attend to the various duties connected with my office. The religious importance of the work which I am to represent, in a general way, in the two States above named, is second to none under the sun. The sole object of the American Bible Society is to encourage a wider circulation of the Holy Scriptures, without note or comment, among all people. Its motto is, "An Open Bible for Every Family" and person that will receive it. Much has already been accomplished in this grand work, but the fields are still white to the harvest. To say nothing of heathen lands, there is great destitution in our own country. There are multitudes among us who have no Bibles. This fact, of itself, should lead Christians everywhere to do all in their power to aid the American Bible Society, their own grand institution, in its efforts to supply all the people with the Divine Word, whose entrance giveth light. We most sincerely hope to have the aid and sympathy of all lovers of the Bible and of humanity in forwarding the good work herein referred to. All the papers in the two States above named that would aid in the good work are requested to copy this notice.

Dist. Supt. A. B. S. for Miss. and La.

The Opelousas District Conference will convene in Franklin, commencing Thursday afternoon, June 16, 1887. Bishop Keener will preside. The preachers are expected to have the Bishop's and educational collection in full.

"FOR MY YOKE IS EASY, AND MY BURDEN IS LIGHT."

BY S. S.

Thy yoke is easy, Lord, thy Word declares;
And yet how oft it seems a heavy load!
Like a high mountain rise our daily cares,
And our faint hearts do naught but sorrow bode.

'Tis hard to fight for Love, when foes are strong;
The battlefield of earth is filled with snares:
'Tis hard to work for Love, and not lose heart
Amid so many sins, so many cares.

Tempests and clouds do often darkly shroud
The sky that once was calm, and clear, and bright;
Temptations come and doubts and fears arise,
And we fain think our burden is not light.

But we forget whose burden 'tis we bear,
And, if we listen, we may hear him say:
"Come, weary one, and I will make it light;
Come unto me—I only am the way."

Lord, may we come; and trusting all in thee,
So shall we find our burden light to bear;
And may we prove through every trying scene,
Thy "yoke is easy," if thy strength we share.

THE COMMANDMENTS—THE SECOND TABLE.

Exodus xx, 12-21.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Matthew xxii, 39.

FROM DUTIES TO GOD TO DUTIES TO MAN.

When the Savior was asked which was the greatest commandment, he replied: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment." This first commandment embraces the first four commandments of the Decalogue, called the "first table," and they relate directly to obligations to God alone, without reference to man. The Savior merges the four into one, because if any should love his Creator with all his heart and strength, he would certainly do nothing that was displeasing to Him.

The blessed Savior continued: "The second commandment is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." These mutually suggest the one, the other, and neither could be kept without embracing the other. Neither could be violated without breaking the other. It is written: "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar;" and, on the other hand, "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us and his love is perfected in us." It is common to hear men say that while they make no pretension to Christianity, still they do their duty to their neighbor. The teaching of the Bible is that a man who does his duty to his neighbor will assuredly love and reverence God, in whose image his neighbor is made; and, furthermore, that if he does not obey his God, he will necessarily be recreant to the claim of his neighbor. "Foe to God was ne'er true friend to man." It is a most inconsistent plea that an entrance into heaven should be barred solely upon a claim of having done duty to man, while duty to the God of heaven had been wholly neglected. The young man in the Scriptures, whom Jesus loved, said that he had kept all the commandments which related to his neighbor from his youth up; yet all this availed not to remove his sorrow, because he could not submit to the test of having kept the first table of the law, in that he had not loved God with all his mind, and all his heart, and all his strength. The laws of our great Creator are a unit; each statute suggests the whole, and the whole harmoniously embraces all the parts. Hence, St. James is justified in writing: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of the whole." God looketh at the heart, and he sees that the same spirit of irreverence and rebellion which prompts an individual to break one law would, under a like provocation, cause him to break any one or all of the others.

DUTY TO MAN.

THE FIFTH COMMANDMENT.

Verse 12. "Honor thy father and thy mother." Parents stand in the place of God to children under the age of accountability. God is the law to the parent, the parent is the law to the children. Every principle of justice and gratitude appeal to children to render homage and obedience to the authors of their being and providers for their daily wants. Children who do not reverence their parents are not apt to serve and obey their Maker; and just in proportion as they respect and honor their parents will be their habitual inclination to transfer to a higher Power the complete control of their lives. "That thy days may be long upon the land." There is no reason to think that God from pure favoritism should attach the blessing of long life to the keeping of this commandment any more than one of the others. It will follow as a natural consequence that children who are obedient to their parents will be preserved from bad company, bad habits, and from all influences which have a tendency to break down the health and bring on disease and a premature old age.

THE SIXTH COMMANDMENT.

Verse 13. "Thou shalt not kill." The Author of life hath put all possible protection around human existence. His law stands up as a protest with penalty against the injury of his creature: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." This relates not only to manslaying, but also to maiming and harming the body in any way. "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." The violation of this commandment can not be justified for any reason in the world except that of self-defense, and even for defense there is no plain "Thus saith the Lord." It is by implication merely—that is, that the protection of life is a God-given duty, and that he who violates it may in some sense be said to be destroying his own life. In the same sense a war of defense may be justifiable. So also magistrates have the power of taking life by due process of law, if that life has been forfeited. Except for the above reasons no man has a right to endanger the life or well-being of a fellow-mortal, no matter how gross the offense or how stinging the insult. God's law especially says, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord."

THE SEVENTH COMMANDMENT.

Verse 14. "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Not only overt acts, but all thoughts or looks or manners which have a tendency to invite or promote impurity are construed to be a violation of this commandment. The Savior said that even an improper glance was sufficient to bring one under the condemnation of this statute. All impure books and songs and pictures inflame and debauch the mind, and will, if not resisted, bring utter ruin. That miserable custom of polite society, falsely so called, which permits the shameless exposure of the person, ought to be denounced by every parent and custodian of morals. Those who persist in thus exposing their persons prove themselves to be wanting either in common sense or common decency. They can choose whichever horn of the dilemma they prefer as least damaging.

THE EIGHTH COMMANDMENT.

Verse 15. "Thou shalt not steal." The laws of "mine" and "thine" are innate in the breasts of all men, and whoever violates them is guilty of the double wrong of harming his neighbor and of sullying his own soul. To take anything whatever that belongs to another is practicing an indignity upon him, and inflicts a wound upon one's own sense of worthiness that is only retrievable by restoration and reparation. All gain gotten without an equivalent is a violation of this commandment. The gambler steals only in another way. Lotteries are stupendous swindles, and all who sanction them by their political recognition or by their patronage are encouraging and imbibing a spirit of theft and dishonesty. If mortal man is conscious of having wronged his fellow out of a farthing, there can be no peace of conscience nor acceptance with God until the wrong is righted as far as is possible.

THE NINTH COMMANDMENT.

Verse 16. "Thou shalt not bear false witness." Every word, every look, every act which has for its intention to practice a willful deception is a violation of this precept. Also every suppression of truth which has an injurious effect upon men is a virtual falsehood. "Speaketh the truth in his heart" is the only real test of innocence in this particular. The term "neighbor" in this text refers to all mankind, even to an enemy, as in the case of the parable of the Good Samaritan.

THE TENTH COMMANDMENT.

Verse 17. "Thou shalt not covet." This means to long ardently for anything which does not belong to you, and which would deprive another of his rights. Covetousness is called idolatry in the Scriptures. It is such a dissatisfaction with the apportionments of Providence, and such a longing for something which is forbidden, as to invest that something with an idolatrous affection. "Take heed and beware of covetousness," the blessed Savior said. Paul wrote: "Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have: for he hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

"Children's Day" in Camden, Miss.

Bro. Robertson's regular appointment being the third Sabbath at Soule Chapel, he had "Children's Day" here the fourth, in lieu of the time set apart by the last General Conference.

It certainly was an enjoyable occasion of interest and instruction. Our lesson being of such great import, so pointedly typical of the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," we could not omit it. All the exercises were entered into with a zest, proving that the hearts of the people were in their work.

Many, many thanks to our faithful organist, Miss Lizzie Porviance, for the sweet music. She certainly is teaching our children to sing most delightfully. Our Sunday-school and congregational singing was with the heart and understanding.

The world is full of beauty, song and gladness when the heart is full of love; and on this occasion the children were as happy as could be, and the facial muscles of us older ones were relaxed, and all wore a pleased, approving expression.

We have a real live Christian, Mr. Edwin Meloin (a Presbyterian), for our superintendent. He works, prays (and sings, too), just as if his soul's salvation depended upon what he does for us. Oh! that the world was full of such Christian workers!

Our pastor's good wife was sick that day, and we missed her, as she is so punctual and takes such delight in instructing her class. Bro. Robertson seemed to be in a good humor with himself and all the rest of mankind. He delivered an effective address, full of wholesome doctrine, instruction and solid thought. His subject was "Character;" and he said: "There is nothing great in this world but man, and nothing great in man but character." He most beautifully delineated the noble, refined and lowly traits of the genuine Christian character. His address is fully worth a place in your columns.

He appointed four sweet little girls to take up the collection, which they did in the most approved manner. The good people were compelled to open their purses when the collection was for such a benevolent purpose and the hats presented by these smiling little girls.

Everything passed off most pleasantly, and we all returned home thanking the appointing power for this new institution of our church, and hearts filled with love and gratitude unto our Father in heaven for the "sweet Sabbath of rest."

Thanks for Recovery.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to say through the ADVOCATE, for the information of my friends, that, after being confined to my bed for over three months, I am now convalescing and able to sit up and walk across my room. Thanks be unto the Lord for his great mercy and goodness to me! "O Lord! my strength and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, thou that liftest me up from the gates of death, I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy, for thou hast considered my trouble: thou hast known my soul in adversities." Truly, "The Lord is good: a stronghold in the day of trouble: and he knoweth them that trust in him."

My physicians say that by abstaining from all labor, both mental and physical, for a few months, I will regain my usual health. I hope I shall, and that I will again be able to labor in the vineyard of the Master in my humble sphere, also to be of some benefit to my family and friends.

I am truly grateful to my friends everywhere for their deep solicitude and prayers in my behalf. IRVIN MILLER.

Prohibition in Copiah County, Miss.

Few counties in the State can make a better showing, morally and financially, than old Copiah. Her citizens have ample cause for feeling proud of the existing order of things.

There are now about $15,000 in the county treasury, with few outstanding warrants. This is no small matter when we reflect that only a few years ago Copiah county was $16,000 in debt. This is splendid showing, and reflects great credit on our present Board of Supervisors.

The report of the grand jury, at the term of court just closed, shows that Copiah county now leads the State in point of morals. The grand jury had before it 377 witnesses, and found ninety-two indictments for petty misdemeanors. They further say that while the prohibition law has been violated in a few instances, it has, perhaps, been better enforced than any other law. This should be especially gratifying to the friends of temperance.

The grand jury further states that they have passed upon the books of the sheriff and treasurer, and are satisfied that everything is right with them.

The report goes on to congratulate the people of the county on the good condition of affairs, the criminal dockets having been disposed of in a little more than three days, and settlements of the county reported correct.

MR. EDITOR: Above I send you a clipping from one of our county papers, which may be of service to those who have yet to make the fight against the great enemy to our country and race. I do not claim that the above report is necessarily the result of prohibition, which our county has enjoyed for more than two years; but I do claim that the report shows that prohibition does prohibit to a great degree—that the absence of the saloon has a wholesome effect upon the morals of the people, and that prohibition, rather than proving an injury to the finances of a county, is demonstrated to be a great benefit. Just think of the criminal docket being disposed of in three days! Fifteen thousand dollars in the treasury against an indebtedness of $16,000 a few years since, when whisky ran freely! Moreover, I learn that the county jail has not an occupant. Some may seek to discount the report by reference to the mills (12½) levied as tax. To this let me say that this is much less than many counties have assessed, and, I doubt not, is as low as the lowest. In Copiah we are satisfied with prohibition; and I believe if the question were put to vote to-day, that there would be no opposition.

At Crystal Springs the people are busy with the vegetable crops. The estimate is that between $25,000 and $30,000 were realized for strawberries alone. Carloads of snap beans have been, and are being, shipped daily. Fifteen thousand dollars for this crop, I suppose, is not an over-estimate. Shipments of tomatoes are beginning quite briskly; and the prices received in Chicago reported at the fabulous figures of $6 to $7 per bushel, net. Of course, that will not last during the season. Peaches and apples are now coming in, and find a ready sale, at fair prices, in your city. To one unacquainted with this business a few days around our depot would be a revelation.

The Lord willing, the writer will attend the International Sunday-school Convention, which meets in Chicago, next week, June 1 and 3. If opportunity permits, I may send you a communication from the City of the Lakes. Till then good-by.

Fraternally,

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

MAY, 28, 1887.

Woman's Missionary Society, Ruston, La.

By request of the president of our society (Ruston Auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society), I write you a few lines concerning our organization.

Our society was organized in September, 1885, with but few members. Since then our number has been increased to thirty or more, with eight subscribers; and the society is now in active working order, and meets regularly once a month. We have recently introduced the feature of reading original essays, or selections on appropriate subjects, at each meeting, which we hope to be productive of beneficial results. We elected officers for the present year some time ago, the names of whom are as follows: Mrs. T. C. Standifer, president; Mrs. W. E. Ashley, recording secretary; Mrs. Mattie Pearce, corresponding secretary; Miss Eva Slaton, treasurer.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the State will be held in our town this year—some time during the month of July. We are anticipating good results from the meeting. Very truly,

MRS. MATTIE PEARCE.

Church Suppers.

MR. EDITOR: Some of your scribes of late have had a great deal to say on the above subject, and, strange to say, they have all gone one way—that is, against. Every man, I suppose, has a right to think as he pleases about church suppers and to express his thoughts, too, provided he can get the chance.

I have been surprised that they have associated raffling with the supper and as belonging to it. A church supper is one thing, and raffling is another. If it is the raffling objected to, then say, No; but if it be the church suppers, don't bring in raffling to make it look unjustly bad. In other words, if there is nothing in the church supper to condemn, it's unjust to try to make it appear condemnable by the defects of something else. Anybody knows that the good ladies can have a church supper, and no harm be done. They are cheating and defrauding no man. They furnish the material, cook the supper, and serve it—generally for fifty cents; and such a one as they prepare is worth it anywhere. All in the world they get pay for is the cooking and sewing; and certainly they have as much right to get money for the church in this way as the farmer has by his labor, or the physician by his practice. Where the wrong in a decent church supper is I am unable to see. Of course, you can do wrong at a church supper. You can get up a raffle, or hop, either of which is sinful. But, mind you, they are no part of the supper; and people can do wrong anywhere as for that matter.

Neither can I give in to the view that church suppers are hurtful to the spirit of liberality. That needs a large measure of demonstration to prove. I have had them in my pastoral charges (and I guess a good many of those who object to them have), and I unhesitatingly say that I don't believe that anybody has been hurt, but, on the other hand, the spirit of liberality has been augmented. Nearly all of our churches renowned for liberality, if of any age, have at some time had a church supper, while a great many stingy ones never saw a church supper. Young men generally let go a certain amount of money; and when they are induced to give it to the church, either in this way or any other legitimate way, it becomes fruitful, producing love to Christ and his church. Many a young man has been lifted to a higher plane just in this very way.

Neither is the church supper a social disadvantage, but a blessing, as I conceive. People will talk, and when they have nothing better, will talk hurtfully about each other. Church suppers put a quietus upon conversations which are unkind, and stimulate those which are affable and pleasant. It helps members to become acquainted with each other, and thereby to love each other.

In conclusion, I like any innocent thing that gives our noble women a chance to work for God. It is poor getting along without them; and certainly they are doing their share. God bless them all and open to them a thousand ways for building churches and saving the world from sin and death!

Burned Out Three Times.

How strange God's providences seem to us in the daily unfolding of the panorama of life! Three times in a short life my earthly home has been consumed by fire. When a child, our dwelling-place in New Orleans was consumed. In 1872 our "Forest Home" passed out of existence while I was serving the Brownsville circuit. In 1876 I purchased for wife and children our seaside home at Ocean Springs. When we left Ocean Springs for Providence circuit, we left almost all our worldly goods remaining in our house. Rev. George F. Thompson has been occupying it since. We felt perfectly safe in having Bro. and Sister Thompson in charge. You may never have experienced such a shock as the mail of May 21 brought us, when a postal from Col. W. B. Stuart—May 17—stated: "Your home consumed by fire, 12 M. this day." Later tidings confirmed the truth of the postal. Bro. Thompson says my "library of books a total loss; some furniture saved." Alas! alas! A small insurance saves us from a total disaster; not enough to rebuild the house. I have not learned the loss of Bro. and Sister Thompson. The cause of the fire unknown; but supposed to have been a spark lodging in crack of shingle or attic. It is a comfort to know that fire can not destroy our heavenly home.

R. B. DOWNER.

Parsonages.

Mr. Editor: I have just received $5 25 from Mrs. J. P. Collier, treasurer Parsonage Society, Corinth station, North Mississippi Conference. This is the first money that I have received for this fund. May God bless those earnest workers, and raise up many more for this great work of building homes for our itinerant hosts. Our motto should be, "A parsonage in every pastoral charge." When this is accomplished it will mark a new era in our beloved Methodism. May God hasten the day!

MRS. A. R. BINGHAM,
Treas. W. D. Ch. Ex., N. M. Conf.

From the Work.

POPLARVILLE, Miss.

Mr. Editor: With this mail I forward to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE cash in full for two renewals and four new subscribers; also four other new subscribers, remittance for whom will be made in due time. Counting my own, I found thirteen ADVOCATES taken on my circuit, and by a faithful effort I have increased the number to twenty-five, thereby doubling the subscriptions in five months. I am more hopeful of my work this quarter than I have been at any other time during this year. We have organized another young men's prayer meeting (at Purvis) since my last report, which has already been a special means of grace to all concerned. We have five Sunday-schools against three last quarter, most of which are in a prosperous condition.

About six weeks ago the friends of temperance and prohibition met to organize a Woman's Christian Temperance Union in this place, which was very successfully accomplished, and is still increasing in interest (the membership now numbering 60), and is already accomplishing much good, religiously, socially and, I trust, civilly. The good ladies have already opened up a lemonade and ice-cream establishment, thus furnishing to the public at a reasonable price refreshments both pleasant to the taste and renovating to the body.

Up to the present date I have sold about forty dollars' worth of religious books and periodicals for our Publishing House, with a prospect of more to follow. I have about half our foreign mission assessment in hand to be forwarded in a few days to our Treasurer at Nashville, and feel assured that the balance will, with all the Conference collections, be collected in full by Conference. Pray for us.

J. N. TUCKER, P. C.

BOYCE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: The second quarterly meeting for the Alexandria charge was held in the new church in the town of Boyce, La., beginning on May 20. On Sunday the church was dedicated by Rev. J. M. Beard, the late pastor, who preached an admirable sermon on the occasion, and conducted the dedication service with solemnity and impressiveness. It was largely through the influence of Bro. Beard that the church was built and paid for. The people of Boyce have done themselves much credit by building, in their new and growing town, so beautiful and so commodious a church.

In this connection, it is but just to recognize the eminent services of Mrs. Boyce, to whom, more than to any other person, we are indebted for this house of God. Her zeal and energy and helpfulness are the more noticeable when we consider that she is a member of another church.

The church had been paid for and a small balance left in the treasury. To this balance a small collection was added on Sunday to buy a bell. The services were conducted four days, and were of an interesting character. Five persons were added to the church. We are expecting the church at Boyce to prosper.

I am glad to write that Bro. White has great encouragement at every point in his charge. His congregations are large, and much religious interest and spiritual fervor prevail. I think, Mr. Editor, I may safely write you that the Alexandria district is "looking up."

B. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., May 21, 1887.

HILLSBORO, MISS.

Mr. Editor: We are having a quiet, if not a prosperous, time on Hillsboro circuit. I think the Mormon missionaries have left us to stay away. A discourse showing up their doctrines and practices probably did some good to our citizens. They positively denied the practice of polygamy among them as a church.

The crop prospect is good, which is a great relief, especially in the flat woods, where they made such a bad failure last year.

Bro. Cammack and I exchanged pulpits the first of this month. I preached at Walnut Grove, and he for me at Hillsboro. While at Walnut Grove I spent a part of the time with Rev. Irvin Miller, who was just able to be about his room after a three months' spell of sickness. We think he will stand in his useful position again. I learned that a native Indian preacher (Baptist) was preaching to the Choctaws in Leake county, and elsewhere in East Mississippi, and with success. So the day of their salvation has probably come at last. There are some three thousand Choctaws among us who have been without church or religion and indifferent until now. My people at Hillsboro enjoyed Bro. Cammack's visit very much. He was almost to sick too preach at the morning service—guess he had too much sermon for the physical man—but was fully himself for the evening sermon.

I hope you will be with us at our District Conference at Brandon, Miss.

C. M'DONALD.

OKALONA, MISS.

Mr. Editor: Feeling inclined to send you a few lines from our town, I embrace this opportunity through your much esteemed paper. We have just passed through a glorious revival meeting, continuing three weeks. It was termed a union meeting. The Presbyterians held their service the first week, with Dr. West, the Presbyterian evangelist, laboring with them, in which we all took part. His ministry was close and connected, preaching the Word in power and the Spirit of God. The second and third week Bros. Inge and Beville were with us, it has been said, doing the work of the Master, which I can truly say they did. Bro. Inge administered to us in holy things. Bro. Beville was a power in singing. Glorious work has been accomplished here in saving souls. God has blessed us. There were 110 conversions, and 60 accessions—37 to Methodist Church. It has been said that Okalona was a hard place, but that language can be changed now, and say it is a good place. The good work is still going on. Pray for us.

Yours,

MRS. J. E. RITCHEY.

SOUTH BOSSIER, LA.

Mr. Editor: We have just closed a two weeks' meeting at Haughton, resulting in a fine revival and fourteen accessions to the church. Revs. Robert Parvin and John A. Miller were with us, and did most of the preaching. We are trying to work up a good subscription in that new town for the ADVOCATE. So far we have had success in every department of church work this year. We have some good Sunday-schools and prayer meetings. We sometimes hold a class meeting after preaching. Last Sunday week we held a love-feast at Haughton with good results. I am much pleased with our church Conferences this year—in fact, I think I am just now learning how to hold a church Conference.

Last Sunday we buried Sister V. E. Fort, of Bellevue, and on April 23 we buried Sister S. A. Lowry, of the same place. They were both excellent Christian women, and died in the faith.

Yours fraternally,

R. M. BLOCKER.

WEIR, MISS.

Mr. Editor: Our second quarterly meeting for McCool circuit just held at McCool. Congregations large, and preaching by our presiding elder, R. P. Mitchell, most excellent. Scores, no doubt, went away Sunday purposing to live better lives. A Building Committee was appointed for McCool, where we expect soon to have a new church. Church at Weir completed. Pray for us.

D. M. COGDELL.

We ought not to be too anxious to encourage untried innovation, in cases of doubtful improvement. For a quarter of a century Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy has been before the public and passed through the severest test and is pronounced the most reliable remedy for that disagreeable malady. Thousands of testimonials of its virtues. 50 cents per bottle. By druggists.

Work and Play.

Ours is a time when the young, at least, think too much of recreation, and devote too much of the real energies of their life to the strategy of amusement. To some extent the very disinterested beneficence of the day which has contrived so many palliatives for the misery of the toilworn classes, has lent countenance to the prevalent notion that those who do not enjoy their lives are defrauded of their absolute rights, and has encouraged the young people of a class which has more than its share of the pleasures of life, to regard those pleasures as their just inheritance. Yet nothing can be more certain than that the lives which are pervaded by the belief that the pursuit of happiness is the natural and legitimate aim of men, are neither the noblest nor the happiest. The lesson of renunciation, or the lesson of self-denial—what Matthew Arnold calls "the secret of Jesus"—is, indeed, the root of true cheerfulness, though not, in this world, of absolute happiness: and however good Sir John Lubbock's teaching may be as to the wisdom of embodying recreation in the scheme of life, the justification of it lies not in the fact that pleasure is one of the chief ends of man, but in the fact that for the most part those who play well work better than they play, and could not work so well as they do if they did not play also. It is not that the pleasurable occupation is the right one, because it is pleasurable, but that the pleasurable occupation gives zest to the more arduous occupation, and lends to the enthusiasm of labor something of the delightful glow of conscious enjoyment.

There can not be said to be any duty of happiness. It is a duty to make others happy so far as we can do so lawfully: it is a duty not to make them unhappy by whining over our troubles; it is a duty to put a cheerful face on life; it is a duty to enjoy the blessings we have, and to show that we are grateful for them; but it is not a duty to be happy, for if it were, we should be quite right in fleeing from unhappiness as from absolute evil, and in drowning in amusement all those anxieties and discontents with ourselves, which it is of the highest importance to us to confront. The only case in which it may be truly said that it is a duty to seek happiness, is where we are fully convinced that a certain measure of happiness will make us stronger for our duties, just as a certain measure of recreation makes us stronger for our professional tasks. The strong man can do with less happiness than the weaker man: but in either case alike, the happiness which it is a duty to aim at is only so much as is subservient to the higher work of life; and when all is said, the duty of happiness can never really compare, in its significance to human life, with the happiness of duty.—Churchman, N. Y.

It's Always the Way.

"Didn't I tell you so?" said a gentleman, to an acquaintance whom he chanced to meet on the street: "it's always the way." "What's always the way?" inquired a mutual friend of the two men who happened along just then. "Why, just this," replied the first speaker: "you see Smith, here, the last time I met him he had one of the worst coughs you ever heard. He complained of a loss of appetite, of night-sweats, of low spirits and other unmistakable preparatory symptoms of consumption. I told him to get a supply of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, at once. He did so, and look at him now! Did you ever see a healthier looking man? The 'Discovery' has snatched thousands from consumptives' graves. I knew it would cure Smith. It is always the way."

Intelligent Giving.

The householder who was preparing to celebrate the passover feast was directed to select and set apart the lamb on the tenth day of Abib. It was not to be killed, however, till the fourteenth of Abib. This forethought was necessary to avoid any possible failure to secure a proper animal of the first quality, to serve both as a sacrifice and a pledge of fellowship.

It is our impression that very few of those who make an offering of fellowship for Christ's kingdom plan for it even one day in advance. They go to church, and when the plate is passed they put in whatever piece of nickel or silver happens to be in their pockets. They have no serious idea of sacrifice or fellowship in the offering. It is all a hap-hazard act which gives them no concern.

In order to give intelligently only two things are necessary: intelligence and a desire to give. One would suppose that the latter might be assumed as possessed by every Christian soul, so that it would be only intelligence that needed to be considered. But this is hardly the case.

After all it is true that the chief reason for a lack of intelligence in giving, is the fact that people do not care to give: and, not caring to give, they have no care to give intelligently. Before one can give intelligently, he must have a converted pocket-book. He must have consecrated his property to the Lord. He must thus desire to give.

It is remarkable, when we think how clear the Bible is as to the essence of religion, how distinctly it defines the sum of all duty, and how supreme it enthrones love, that the ideas of so many people are so utterly misty as to what it is to be converted. They do not understand that to enter upon a religious life is to give up selfishness for benevolence; not simply to cease to do evil, but to begin to do good. Intelligence about giving might as well begin with intelligence about what religion is: that religion means giving; Christ gave himself intelligently. "For this cause came I unto this hour"—and that he bids us give all that we have and are, in an utter consecration, to the cause of God and for the welfare of the world. A man that does not have an earnest, intelligent desire, not simply to be miscellaneously good, nor to be somehow one of God's people, but to make all he is tell for the evangelization of the world, the removal of its sin and suffering, and the advancement of comfort, enlightenment and goodness, that man may be a Christian, but he is not an intelligent Christian. He may give, but he will give ignorantly because he does not intelligently want to give.

This we fully believe is the most important half of the subject which we have put at the head of this article. If this kind of intelligent consecration were made, we believe that intelligent giving would generally follow as a matter of course. Wishing to give, a man's heart and intelligence would be in it, and he would not fail to give with as much intelligence as he applies to his ordinary business.—Independent.

The Ozone in the Mountain Air.

Crowds of people journey to the Catskills, White Mountains and Alleghenies every summer to get cured of the hay fever. The ozone with which the mountain air is more or less charged unquestionably has a beneficial effect. But the proportion of cures is not large. Nobody is likely to take hay fever at an elevation of three or four thousand feet, but the people who carry it in their systems do not always secure relief. "Get well at home, then enjoy the mountains," is good advice. Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1520 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., with their Home Treatment of Compound Oxygen, have cured hay fever, bronchitis, asthma, and other throat and lung affections. Send to them for a pamphlet on the subject, which will be forwarded free.

Tutt's Pills

REGULATE THE BOWELS.

Habitual Costiveness

Causes a derangement of the entire system, and begets diseases that are hazardous to life. Persons of sedentary habits are subject to Headache, Dizziness, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Bilious Attacks, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Nervousness, Fevers, Piles, Irritable Temper and others of a gloomy, Gloomy Forebodings, Nervousness, Fevers, Piles, Irritable Temper and others of a gloomy, which many who suffer for laziness or ignorance, neglect. Regular habits of body alone can overcome these ills, and nothing succeeds so well in achieving the consummation as Tutt's Pills. By their use not only is the system renovated, but by causing the harmonious changes thus created, there prevails a feeling of satisfaction; the mental faculties perform their functions with vivacity, and there is not exhibited a state of mind, freedom of thought and buoyancy of heart's ease that bespeaks the real enjoyment of health.

SECRET OF BEAUTY

Is health. The secret of health is the power to digest in proper quantity of food. This can never be done when the liver does not act its part. It is the driving wheel in the organism of man, and when it is out of order, the whole system becomes deranged, and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Constipation, Jaundice, Bilious Colic, and General Debility ensue. To restore the functions of the Liver and impart that purity which always attends a healthy constitution, Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills are recommended. They are not a cure-all, but are designed solely for the disordered Liver and the diseases which it produces.

THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1887.

The Board of Missions appointed the week, beginning August 8, as a week of prayer and self-denial in the interest of our missions.

Briefs.

The Independent devotes a page to the statistics of the various denominations of Christians in the United States, and compares the figures of 1887 with those published in 1883.

From its tables we publish the following items for the information of the readers of the Advocate: The Methodists number 4,532,658, with 29,493 ministers; the Baptists number 3,727,007, with 27,889 ministers; the Presbyterians number 1,082,436, with 9,429 ministers; the Lutherans number 930,830, with 3,990 ministers; the Congregationalists number 436,379, with 4,090 ministers; the Episcopalians number 430,531, with 3,865 ministers; the Reformed number 259,974, with 1,342 ministers; the German Evangelical number 125,000, with 500 ministers; the Christian Union number 120,000, with 500 ministers; the Friends number 105,000, with 500 ministers; the Mennonites number 100,000, with 500 ministers; the Adventists number 97,711, with 821 ministers; the Moravians number 10,686, with sixty-four ministers; miscellaneous, 60,565 members, with 1,210 ministers; Roman Catholics number 7,000,000, with 7,658 ministers. These figures make a total of 19,018,777 members, with 91,911 ministers. The total four years ago was 17,267,178 members, with 81,717 ministers. There has been a gain in four years of 1,751,599 members and 10,194 ministers. That is the way Christianity is dying out in this country; and if it keeps on at the same rate for a few more decades, the infidels and atheists will be seeking the holes of the moles and bats!

The question of using instruments of music in church has been troubling the United Presbyterian brethren for some time. It has been settled by the last council in Philadelphia. The question came before the body on appeal; and, after much disputing on both sides, it was finally voted that "there is no law forbidding the use of instrumental music in the church of God." The vote stood 107 to fifty-four.

The International Sunday-school Convention, in session last week in Chicago, received an able report from its Executive Committee; and among other items this feature of the report elicited much favorable comment:

Our committee rejoices in the growing and deepening conviction in the church and in the Sunday-school that the united and persistent effort of all Christians must be made to oppose the power of the liquor traffic in this land, leaving the question of the special efforts of working to be decided as God shall give wisdom in each case.

Dr. Guthrie says: "Give me these links:

"First, sense of need; second, desire to get; third, belief that God has in store; fourth, belief that, though he withholds awhile, he loves to be asked; and fifth, belief that asking will obtain.

"Give me these links, and the chain will reach from earth to heaven, bringing heaven down to me, or bringing me up into heaven."

A Heart-Treasure.

Every heart has its treasures. "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be." In every soul there is a treasure-box hidden, and no profane eyes ever look upon it. In this box are treasures of regal beauty—treasures of hideous deformity. The heart only knoweth its own sweets as well as "its own bitterness." In this casket of treasures some are more beautiful and precious than others. Hardly two are of equal beauty or of equal value. There is one which outshines all others, and is more valuable than all. These treasures have been gathered by the soul as it journeys along the path of probation. Some have cost untold agonies. Some have been purchased by deeds of self-denial, of which the world has never heard. Some have been gifts of beneficence from loving hearts, and are prized above rubies. Words of loving encouragement in the midst of despondency have found their way into the heart through the medium of the hearing, and ever after remain as priceless mementos of conflict and victory. A look of approval in the heat of a great trial has shot through the eye into the heart-casket, and in the quick passage has been transformed into a jewel, upon which we look and remember that it helped us to triumph in the hour of temptation.

As beautiful and as precious as are these treasures of the heart, the Psalmist, in his journey through life, found one of rarer beauty and of more inestimable price, which he deposited in his heart. "Thy Word have I hid in my heart." What a precious deposit it was! What a possession for one soul! It was truth in its unadulterated simplicity. "Thy Word is truth." It was a great headlight in the soul, flashing its beams out upon the ways of life. "Thy Word is a light unto my path." It was a blessed possession of the Lord himself. "The Word was God." Compared with this treasure, how poor did the wealth of the world appear! This was "more to be desired than gold; yea, than much fine gold." The pleasures of the world were insipid after a taste of this pure Word. This was "sweeter than honey or the honeycomb." All other joys fell like shadows upon the spirit, because "his delight was in the law of the Lord;" and that law was "the rejoicing of his heart." Oh, how much there was stowed away in this "treasure hid in the heart!"

We have often observed that superstitious people hang charms upon their bosoms as a foil against evil spirits. Here we see the Psalmist in possession of the true talisman against all evil; and he hung it up in the heart—the birth-chamber of thought and feeling—that its pure presence might shame pollution away from those sacred precincts. "Thy Word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee."

The Enforcement of Law.

Law is that which regulates action. It was great in God to make man well. It is equally great to rule him wisely. Indeed, creation would be folly unless followed by the proper government of the thing created. The very construction of most organisms suggests, and, in a degree, necessitates the modes of their action; yet almost all movements, whether of machines, plants, or animals, are capable of modifications by the application of power from without. The more susceptible an organism is of such modification of its action, the higher its grade. A steam engine is for this reason vastly superior in its capacities for action to a watch or a clock. Man, endowed with free will and intelligence, furnishes the highest illustration of an organism susceptible of control by influences coming from without.

God has given man a law which ranks among his most wonderful works. "I have seen an end of all perfection," says a sacred writer; "but thy commandment is exceeding broad." As man was made in the image of God, he is an imitator of his Maker in fabricating machines, partly self-regulative, and partly governed by external agencies. Perhaps the highest function of man's being is the making and enforcement of wise laws for his own government. Life and property are protected, and society is held together and perpetuated by the operation of law. In the social state, all welfare depends upon the maintenance of the law.

America has undertaken to show herself and the world that man is capable of self-government. The experiment was regarded a doubtful one by many from the beginning. Nor is our success in this undertaking by any means yet assured. Perpetually liable to have the preponderance of votes, upon which everything depends, changed, at any place or in all places, by floods of foreign immigrants who can not appreciate our methods of government, we are forever exposed to confusion, anarchy, or the tyranny of the mob. Our only safety is to be found in the prudent restriction of foreign immigration, and in the enactment and enforcement of wise laws. The law is the deliberate expression of the will of the people, and represents the power of all wielded for the protection of each. A government which depends upon the whims of the populace can never be impartial or stable. Our greatest danger lies in the manner of executing our laws. The executors of law can give it as little or as great force as they may choose. The executive should always be in harmony with the legislative department, that law may effect its object. "Without fear, favor or delay," ought to be the motto of the executors of the law; yet many offenses are winked at by the officers of the law, through fear or favor, while, in criminal cases, so great is the usual delay and final uncertainty in the execution of the law that at times citizens feel called to take the administration of justice into their own hands, without regard to the forms of law. Deplorable indeed is the condition of that people who have no confidence in the faithful execution of the laws made for their protection.

Officers whose duty it is to enforce law sometimes have more regard for public sentiment than for the law; hence the importance of keeping the public opinion in strong approval of the law.

I was greatly impressed with the beauty and strength of our system of government while recently attending a mass meeting in Nashville, Tenn., which had for its object the enforcement of the Sunday law in that city. Some persons, who had tried in vain to get certain parts of the Sunday law repealed, determined to risk its open violation. A public meeting was called, in which the law-abiding element of the city was ably represented. Short, pointed and powerful speeches were made, asserting the righteousness and the majesty of the law, and declaring that it ought to be, and should be, enforced; while the audience re-echoed the sentiments with hearty applause. If I had previously been in doubt, the speeches that night would have revealed to me just where my patriotism finds its most emphatic form. As speaker after speaker arose—lawyers, merchants, editors, ministers, and others—I felt as if I saw one of the flowers of our civilization opening, petal by petal (was it a night-blooming cereus?), till I could have shouted in grateful exultation at the thought of being a citizen of such a country—a fellow-citizen of such men. The sound of that meeting went throughout Nashville; and the violation there condemned will not soon be repeated. Such meetings ought to be held in many places. It is criminal to be indifferent to the enforcement of law, or to voting, which determines both the law and its enforcement. Let us have a revival of Christian patriotism. The law is the handmaid of the gospel.

Letter from Chicago.

Mr. Editor: A travel of thirty-one hours over the Illinois Central railroad brought me from my home in South Mississippi to this great City of the Lakes. When we stop to consider the extent of country passed over in this short time, we are constrained to say, What hath man wrought! Whether the prophet of old had any thought of the railroad system of this day when he said the rough places should be made smooth, and the crooked made straight, we know not. This much we do know that, with his God-given intellect and the materials furnished, man has worked wonders in more respects than one. Just think of it, that a travel of less than a day and a half would bring one from a climate of ripe fruits and rich gardens to one where vegetation has just put on its spring garb—from where the roasting-ear hangs from the stock to where the young blade is just pushing its head up from the earth. I was interested in watching the changes in vegetation as they gradually appeared. A reversal, however, of the order as indicated by the Master. First, there appeared the full, ripe corn in the ear, even ready to harvest; next, was the ear still growing; and last, was the blade.

Nothing unusual among the people attracted our attention south of the Ohio; but when we got into Illinois we found large gatherings—grand processions, and crowded trains. It was Decoration Day, when all the people gather to do honor to their fallen braves. I am informed that this day is celebrated with more parade and enthusiasm than even the glorious Fourth. While we accept the issue, and pledge with all sincerity our loyalty to our common country, yet there steals over one who remembers aught of the past an irrepressible feeling of sadness, not of rebellion, but of deep, abiding sadness when we think of our many fallen heroes whose graves are unmarked and whose cause went down in defeat.

For rapidity of growth, Chicago is a marvel, having grown from a town of about 4,000 fifty years ago to a great city of more than half a million to-day, and increasing by tens of thousands annually. This is purely a business city, typical of Western life and push. "Men run to and fro"—as to knowledge, I can not say. We find very few places of general interest here. As the Kansas boy says, "Aint time to stop" for such yet. I believe, however, that all cities must wait for time to build up their libraries, galleries and parks. There are many massive buildings here, extending, some of them, seven, eight and even nine stories upward. The saloons number 3,000. Are you surprised at the Haymarket riot?

The place of greatest interest here to a man from Mississippi, and Louisiana, too, I suppose, is Armour's Packery, from which goes out thousands upon thousands of barrels of pork and other meats to feed a people who could raise it much cheaper at home and not miss the time. In this packery 4,500 men are employed. An average of 5,000 hogs and 1,200 beeves are slaughtered daily. Just think of one man cutting the throats of ten hogs per minute for ten hours every day in the year. Machinery is employed to do whatever is possible.

The object of our visit to this place was to attend the International Sunday-school Convention, which met here June 1, and adjourned last night, June 3. At least 1,300 delegates were in attendance; and from nearly every State and province in North America—from Canada to the Rio Grande, and from Alaska to Florida—every evangelical denomination was represented, and great enthusiasm prevailed throughout. Among the more prominent men present were Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, Revs. J. A. Broadus, D. D., of Louisville, Ky.; Moses D. Hoge, D. D., of Richmond, Va.; and Julius Grammar, D. D., of Baltimore, Md.

Having seen recently a communication in one of our papers questioning the advisability of our encouraging this institution, I came to this place ready to watch more carefully the workings and benefits, if any, to be derived from such an assembly. After three days' close attention to all the detail of business and the various lectures on Sunday-school work and methods, I am prepared to say that no man need fear, and that any man would receive new ideas on management and teaching that would be profitable in the greatest degree. Some fear that the result of such an institution will destroy all denominational lines, and weaken our theology. All such is without good reason. Nothing denominational is seen or felt here. Except you find out by inquiry, you can not learn what church the speaker represents. Again, this convention considers only those things that belong strictly to Sunday-school work and methods which any church may use to profit. It is largely a big experience meeting among Sunday-school workers—methods explained, and suggestions thrown out. With such men as Drs. Vincent, Hoge, Hall, Broadas and Cunningham to represent the various denominations on the Lesson Committee, we need fear no harm. Every separate denomination looks to its own publications and expositions of the lesson text. Indeed, Mr. Editor, so long as any denomination adopts the International series of lessons, is it not the duty of that denomination to say who shall represent them on the Lesson Committee? Then how can they secure this without visiting these conventions? Just as truly as a man can be a prohibitionist without being disturbed in his political views, or that two men may follow the same business, and yet be of different denominations; so may a man be profited by these institutions, and his theology remain unhurt.

Fraternally,

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

Notice.

Concerning reduced rates to the Annual Session of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference, to convene at Grenada, Miss., June 30, the undersigned is corresponding with the proper officer to secure reduced fare for delegates and those pastors who will come. In order to secure the reduced rates, it will be necessary for each one to have a blank form furnished by the railroad company, which form must be presented to the ticket agent where and when the purchaser gets his ticket. The blanks are required to be signed by the purchaser in the presence of the ticket agent, who gives the purchaser a certificate of full fare. On that certificate the holder gets return ticket for one-third fare. You will see the necessity of notifying the secretary, Mrs. E. G. Payne, Grenada, Miss., whether you are coming, so that the blank form may be sent you in time. Will you, therefore, give her this notice promptly, so that she may inform the railroad officer what number of forms to send. Take notice! Your ticket must be purchased at "a coupon ticket point." If your depot is not such a point, you will purchase fare to the first "coupon ticket" depot, and there use the blank. Further notice will be given as soon as correspondence is completed.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

GRENADA, MISS., June 1, 1887.

Notes.

The Chicago Advance, in a note on prohibition in the South, referring to the fact that Senator Reagan, of Texas, had come out squarely for that cause, says: "It is high time some of our aspiring Republican Senators of the North begin to evince a bit of the same sort of clear-sightedness and moral courage. Be sure of this, unless they do show it before long, they will find their ambitions in limbo. The tide is rising."

Mr. Edison is irrepressible. While in Florida, seeking health, he was also experimenting with his sea-telephone; and the experiments were quite successful. He transmitted sounds between two vessels three or four miles apart, and is confident that he will be able to increase the distance between stations as his apparatus becomes more perfect. He has not, however, been able to transmit articulate speech by his sea-telephone. But nobody knows what electricity can be made to do yet; and we shall not be surprised at anything that it may yet do.

The Texas Christian Advocate is in the very forefront of the prohibition fight, and the stalwart young editor, Briggs, is wielding a ponderous battle-ax with a precision and effectiveness that would have done credit to a Crusader of the olden times. The empire of the Southwest is trembling under the tread of her vast armies marching to the field of final arbitrament at the polls on August 4. Then it will be a hand-to-hand struggle; and that side which has been best trained will win the day. The question is, the perpetuity of peace, or the riot of lawlessness—the reign of God, or the despotism of the devil—the triumph of truth, or the victory of lying devices? May the Spirit of Power come upon our valiant brethren as he came upon the ten thousand that scattered the hosts of Sisera from the face of the earth!

The Methodist Advance, of Goldsboro, N. C., has an excellent article headed, "Divide and Grow." After showing that Methodism has done as much, or more, for the advancement of Christianity as any other denomination, both in the rural districts and the cities, the editor says: "There is no question that the membership in some of our city churches is too thick to thrive." In any church, the work to be done is necessarily confined to a few of the members, while the majority have nothing to do. Every member ought to be doing some special church work: hence the necessity of division that all may enter and do something. Some congregations have a larger membership than their houses will hold, which is an absurd thing. Says the Advance:

The true policy of Methodism is to "divide and grow." When Bees multiply until they become too numerous to work to advantage in the same gum, they have the good sense to swarm out and divide their forces, and send a portion to make honey in another place. So ought churches, when they can not utilize their large membership, to hive out and go where they can work to better advantage in extending the cause of Christ.

This is the way a layman in the Baptist Convention at Louisville, Ky., shot an arrow into the ranks of the ministry. They had been ventilating the subject of systematic giving; and Mr. Folk, of Tennessee, said:

Let the ministers who turn themselves loose in this convention on the subject of systematic giving be less tender-footed in their own pulpits, and teach their own people these truths about giving as a Christian duty and privilege, and there would be no need for all this eloquence here, nor for the appeals of the Boards, and the special collections.

Solid sense in that, and worthy of thought and prayer.

The Convention adopted a report on the subject, the main point of which is, that "special efforts be made to secure contributions from every member of every church, weekly." We have said before that when that end is attained, the problem of church finances is solved. But Conferences and Conventions and Presbyteries and pastors and stewards and deacons and ruling elders, and all who are now giving, will have to unite in one determined and persistent effort to accomplish it.

Personals.

The committee appointed to locate the next session of the General Conference will hold an adjourned meeting at Monteagle, Tenn., August 8.

Rev. J. W. Wolling, the new missionary to Brazil, has arrived upon his field and gone to work.

Dr. John Hannon has had a revival in his church, Lynchburg, Va., which has resulted so far in 400 conversions.

Mrs. Juliana Hayes, president of the Woman's Board of Missions, has appointed Wednesday, June 22, as a day of prayer and fasting for the prosperity of the Woman's Missionary Society.

The New York Herald calls Sam Jones "a kind of rhetorical mustard pot."

The Southern Presbyterian Assembly at St. Louis expressed itself as opposed to concerts, fairs, etc., as a means of raising money for church purposes.

Mrs. Cleveland has become associated with Mrs. Martha L. Lamb in the editorial work of the Magazine of American History.

The General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church has been invited by the Presbytery of Philadelphia to hold its meeting next year in that city.

The women of the Presbyterian Church in sixteen years have raised $2,150,000 for missions.

Mrs. Marcia Marvin, daughter of the late Bishop Marvin, goes to Brazil in July, to take the position of matron in the mission school at Pericicaba.

When Canon Liddon was offered the See of Edinburgh, he declined for the reason, that he "thought he could serve God and his church better by declining." He is not the first man that declined church preferment for the same reason.

"Thought and Work—a Semi-Monthly Record of Christian Effort," published by the Thought and Work Publishing Company, Chicago, if we can judge from No. 1, is destined to be an eminently useful periodical. The contents of the first number evince fine taste in the selections and good judgment in the original articles.

The New Yorkers have presented a testimonial to Mr. Gladstone. It is thus described:

The testimonial is of sterling silver, three feet in height and twenty-two inches wide. The centre is square, and is ornamented as follows: In the centre are the words "Home Rule" in the shape of a horseshoe resting upon a pair of scales. Around this is the inscription, "William Ewart Gladstone, testimonial presented by his American admirers." All this is on a background of Celtic ornament. On one side of the centre-piece is a female figure holding a harp, and offering a garland of shamrock to a bust of Gladstone, which is on the top. On the base is the lamp of learning. Over this is the coat-of-arms of Christ Church, Oxford, with "Double first" over it, alluding to Mr. Gladstone's degree. Shamrock and stars are to be seen everywhere, and the Gladstone coat-of-arms is displayed in front. The rest of the testimonial was $5,000.

The Wesleyan has had responses from five colleges in Georgia in respect to the religious status of their graduates. In these five colleges there are for this year 114 graduates, and ninety-four of these are church members. In regard to our statement that the majority of our church-school graduates were not Christians, the above showing says that we were incorrect, as far as Georgia is concerned. If this "random deliverance" of ours brings out a few more gratifying facts like those from Georgia, it will show that even a "random deliverance" may do good.

Seashore Camp Meeting.

The following brethren have agreed to be present (D. V.), and do the preaching at the Seashore Camp Meeting, beginning July 13, 1887, and lasting two weeks:

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of North Mississippi Conference; Rev. J. B. Culpepper, of South Georgia Conference; Rev. T. F. Mangum, D. D., of Alabama Conference; Rev. H. C. Morrison, D. D., of North Georgia Conference; Rev. W. M. Leftwich, D. D., of Tennessee Conference; Rev. James A. Parker, of Louisiana Conference; Rev. James S. Rencher, of Alabama Conference; and Rev. Charles F. Evans, D. D., of Louisiana Conference.

The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. John T. Sawyer, presiding elder of the New Orleans district.

Items of Interest.

President Cleveland refused to pardon a St. Louis man convicted of false registration, on the ground that "a crime against the election laws is the worst of all crimes." No doubt about the ballot-box being the safeguard of the Republic.

The opera-house at Northampton, Mass., is always crowded on Sundays at the Biblo readings of George W. Cable.

The honor of originating Arbor Day belongs to Ex-Gov. J. Sterling Morton, of Nebraska.

Mr. Abell, of the Baltimore Sun, is said to be the richest newspaper man in the world. He has the snug sum of $20,000,000.

One of the most interesting items in this paper is the short notice of the work being done at Poplarville, Miss. What is the matter with Bro. Tucker? How could he double the number of subscribers to this paper in five months? Could you not have done the same, if you had tried?

A statistician declares that while the increase in population is less than 2 per cent. per annum, the increase in physicians is 5½ per cent. per annum. Ominous!

According to the minutes of the Louisiana Conference, the presiding elders were allowed last year $1,049 apiece, and received $757, which was an advance of $58 apiece on the year before. The preachers in charge were allowed $603 apiece, and received $440, which was an advance on the year before of $21 apiece.

Over 100,000 copies of the new hymnal of the Primitive Methodist Church in England have been sold in four months! They are singing Methodists who use their own book.

There have been published in the United States in the last twelve months 4,000 new books. Solomon must have been a prophet as well as a wise man.

New York has legitimatized pool selling, and Illinois has passed a bill prohibiting the practice.

This is a good thing from an old writer: "Serving God so as not to offend the devil is policy."

The Baptists of the United States last year gave for home and foreign missions, $1,577,706; for education, $1,911,412; for church support, $4,921,553, making in all, $8,510,701 by about 2,700,000 members.

Mr. Edward Atkinson has produced the figures to show that at the present time the average rate of wages in the United States is higher than ever before.

The Board of Directors of the Gulf and Ship Island railroad have decided that the terminus of the road shall strike the Gulf two and a half miles west of the Mississippi City courthouse.

There are in the United States 132,135 churches. This is one church to every 453 persons, estimating the population at 60,000,000. According to the present membership of the churches, it is one church to every 113 members.

The University of the City of New York has established a chair in "comparative religion," especially as it "related to Christian missions." The missionary spirit is in that movement.

In this country 500,000 tons of paper are manufactured annually, which is said to be twice as much as is made in Europe.

Delicate Children, Nursing

Mothers, Overworked Men, and for all diseases where the tissues are wasting away from the inability to digest ordinary food, or from overwork of the brain or body, all such should take Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. Mississippi Notes.

A company has been organized at Memphis to work the ore fields at Duck Hill.

Bishop Galloway, chairman State Prohibition Convention, has called a meeting at Jackson on July 21.

Aberdeen voted to subscribe $60,000 to the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham railroad to aid in constructing a twelve-mile branch from Aberdeen to the main line.

The United States District Court building in that city is rapidly approaching completion.

A terrible rain and hail-storm passed through the State on the first, doing considerable damage to crops in the vicinities of Coffeeville, Fayette Beauregard and Wesson.

The first peaches shipped from Crystal Springs this season were shipped in one-sixth-bushel boxes, at $2 50 per box. Fifteen dollars per bushel is rather high.

The Board of Supervisors of Leflore county last year levied a tax on dogs. The amount collected on same was two thousand dollars.

The Mississippi River Commission, advertised to meet in Vicksburg, Wednesday, will meet in St. Louis, Saturday, June 11.

The Edwards Creamery will begin operations on the seventh instant.

The United States District Court met in Oxford on the sixth.

Four hundred penitentiary convicts are at work grading the Gulf and Ship Island railroad, near Handsboro.

The Meridian Reform Club has donated $500 for the prosecution of Hamilton and his confederates.

The President has appointed Judge Van Eaton as one of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Md.

The work on the Louisiana Soldiers' Monument at Vicksburg has begun. The statue will be unveiled on the eleventh instant.

The work is in progress on the addition to the Holly Springs Stoneware Company's works. When completed, it will double the capacity of the works.

City, Seashore and Suburbs. Boston and its environs. Send ten cents in stamps to United States Hotel, Boston, for complete maps and interesting historical matter. Beautifully illustrated.

Louisiana Notes.

A company, known as the South and Southwestern Petroleum and Mineral Developing Company, was organized at Shreveport on the second instant—capital stock, $100,000. The company proposes to develop the petroleum oil wells recently discovered in Nacogdoches county, Texas.

A company, known as the St. Mary Central Sugar Factory and Railroad Company, was organized at Franklin on the second instant—capital stock, $250,000.

The Louisiana Press Association meets at Lake Charles on the fourteenth instant.

The Louisiana Bar Association will meet in Monroe on the thirteenth.

The buildings at Baton Rouge, lately vacated by the State University, have been turned over to the Deaf and Dumb Institute, and the next session will open there.

The Southern Oil Company propose to locate a depot in Shreveport for the storage of cotton seed for shipment to their mills at Gretna.

The Jeanerette, Abbeville and Western railroad is progressing rapidly.

Jeffries' Foundry, opposite Thibodaux, was totally destroyed by fire last week. Loss $8,000; insurance, $2,000.

Monroe is endeavoring to erect a $5,000 grist mill.

Prof. T. S. Sligh, of Kingston, Texas, has been elected president of College, Ruston, vice W. C. Friley, resigned.

The Teachers' Institute is in session at Donaldsonville.

Centenary College Notes.

Rev. W. B. Murrah, of Brookhaven, Miss., was elected to preach the commencement sermon for 1888.

The prize for oratory in the Preparatory Department was awarded to the Rev. J. T. Leggett; and the gold medal, offered by Rev. Inman W. Cooper, was awarded to Frank R. Alexander, son of Rev. B. F. Alexander, presiding elder of Alexandria district, Louisiana Conference.

There were four graduates with degree of B. A., viz: Oscar Kearney Andrews, Charles Kidd Lewis, Milton Sanford Standifer and John Magruder Sullivan; and one graduate with degree of B. S., viz: Benjamin Nathaniel Smith.

One notable feature of the commencement was the delivery on Monday night of an extempore, but practical talk to the young gentlemen of the Preparatory Department by the Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy, of Baton Rouge.

The degree of M. A., in course, was conferred upon Rev. T. C. Bradford, of Mississippi Conference.

Gold medals were offered as follows: By Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, LL.D., a gold medal for best Greek scholar; by Hon. G. T. McGehee, a gold medal for oratory; by Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy, a gold medal for best scholar in the Preparatory Department.

Missions.

LARGE FIELDS.—We may roughly estimate the souls that in pagan, Moslem, papal and nominally Christian lands still need to be reached with a pure gospel at a thousand million; and the whole number of missionary laborers at thirty-five thousand. Could each of these carry on the work of evangelization independently, each worker would have to care for thirty thousand souls. As a matter of fact, more than twenty-five thousand of these laborers are unordained native assistants fit only to aid trained workmen; so that we have not more than ten thousand missionaries, native and foreign, competent to conduct this work. Each of these must, therefore, assume an average responsibility of 100,000 souls. Meanwhile the total sum annually spent on foreign missions is about ten millions of dollars—an allowance of one cent a year for each soul of this thousand millions.—A. T. Pearson, D. D.

The missionary spirit was displayed by the brother who, some years ago, preached on the subject and took a collection when the sheriff's flag was nailed to the door-post of his church. To-day that church is one of the strongest in that city, and a large giver towards evangelizing the world.

The Dark Continent is girdled with Christian missions. China is being dotted with chapels and hospitals. Japanese statesmen and editors are asking that Christianity be adopted by the state. A Hindoo scholar declares that "Christ, not Buddha, rules India." "The morning dawns."

The American Board has sent out 1,900 missionaries.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate says: "Let us quit talking about one dollar per member for missions. There is a nomenclature that is more scriptural and less misleading. Let us say two cents per dollar, two dollars per hundred of our income, for foreign missions. Is not that more scriptural?"

Mississippi Subscribers.

We offer our thanks for the prompt attention given to our notices lately sent throughout the State of Mississippi to parties whose subscriptions had expired. Some few have as yet failed to reply. To these the ADVOCATE will be discontinued after this issue, as we are unable to determine whether the renewal of the subscription is desired.

Members of the Winona District Conference who intend to bring their wives to the Conference will please inform me as soon as possible, so that I can make arrangements for them.

IMMENSE BARGAINS.—The great piano dealer, Philip Werlein, 125 Canal St., is now offering some of the greatest bargains in pianos and organs. This popular merchant means business, and he has put prices of pianos and organs down so low as to put them within the reach of all. You will be astonished to see what money can be saved by dealing at this popular house. Indeed, it is a source of pleasure to have dealings with such a house as that of Philip Werlein. Now, that the prices have been reduced, and terms offered are so convenient, every one will avail himself of the opportunity. Write to Mr. Werlein for catalogues and prices.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

Dyspepsia Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Rheumatism Is undoubtedly a blood disease caused by an excess of the lactic acid in the blood. Where there is perfect filtration of the blood there can be no rheumatism. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA will remove the poison, supply the acids and relieve the pains.

Scrofula Is caused directly by impurities in the blood, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, by purifying the blood, forces the impurities from the system.

Kidneys Through the Kidneys flow the waste fluid containing poisonous matter. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing pain in the small of the back and loins, flushes of heat, chills. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic, causing the kidneys to resume their natural functions.

The Liver By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood resolvent.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the surest and safest worm destroyer ever discovered. Worm Lozenges, made merely for the purpose of pleasing the palate (and of course rendering the dose, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is usually exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and parents are most frequently the result of these hidden suppressed ailments. When they are seizable with hearty appetite, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing altogether, fretful, losing restlessly in sleep, grinding and gnashing the teeth, when be yourself these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a heedless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy; therefore parents—especially mothers who are constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its unfailing success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be sure they get the genuine, as the counterfeit every bottle bears the fac-simile of Fahnestock & Co. reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

NEW FRANKLIN, Howard Co., Mo.

Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.

Yours, &c., J. V. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, Md.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. H. HANDY, M. D.

WATCH YOUR WORDS.

Keep a watch on your words, my children,
These swift messengers of the heart;
They are sweet, like the bees' fresh honey;
Like bees, they have terrible stings;
They can bless like the warm, glad sunshine,
And brighten the lonely life;
They can cut in the strife of anger
Like an open, two-edged knife.

Let them pass through your lips unchallenged,
If their errand be true and kind—
If they come to support the weary,
To comfort and help the blind;
If a bitter, revengeful spirit
Prompt the words, let them be unsaid;
They may flash through the brain like lightning,
Or fall on the heart like lead.

Keep them back if they're cold and cruel,
Under bar, and lock, and seal;
The wounds they make, my children,
Are always slow to heal.
May Christ guard your lips, and ever,
From the time of your early youth,
May the words that you daily utter
Be the words of the heautiful truth.

—Selected.

MR. EDITOR: I have never written a letter to your good paper, but see so many from the little people, I thought I would try my hand. My mother takes your valuable paper, and we enjoy reading it very much. I go to Sunday-school; my papa is the superintendent. We have preaching in our neighborhood three Sundays in the month—two Methodist and one Baptist; so if we are not good, we have no excuse but our own hard hearts in not believing the Word. I will close by asking a question: Where in the Bible is "chickens" found? I will close, wishing the ADVOCATE much success.

Your friend,

JULIA KING.

GALLOWAY, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As you were so kind as to publish my last letter, I thought I would write again. We have a very nice Sunday-school now. We reorganized the first Sunday in April with about fifty scholars, and have school every Sunday except the third; and preaching the second and fourth Sunday by Bro. M. L. Barton. The ladies have organized a Woman's Missionary Society. There are thirty-five members now, and we hope more will join. I will close by asking a question: By reading eighty-four verses each day, how how long would it take to read through the Bible?

JEMMIE TERRELL.

SUMMIT, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy, and want to join the young folks' column. My father takes your ADVOCATE, and I like to read the little folks' letters. I go to Sunday-school, and my teacher's name is Dr. W. Clanton. I wish to answer Master George W. Sistrunk's question: "Yoke of oxen" is found in St. Luke xiv, 19. I will ask two questions: What man climbed up a sycamore tree to see Jesus? Where is "grandmother" found in the Bible? I will answer Miss Pearl Stevens' question: Paul wrote the Epistles.

DAN C. HAMBLIN.

CAMDEN, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I would like very much to join the little cousins' band. I enjoy reading their letters very much, and, as I have never written before, I hope my letter will escape the waste-basket. I have seen several of my schoolmates' letters in the dear ADVOCATE. We have Bro. Lewis for our pastor, and we like him very much. I would like to ask a few questions: Who was the first to see Jesus after he rose from the dead? Who betrayed Jesus, and how? I will close, hoping that you will not find my letter too long.

BLANCHE LAMKIN.

SUMMIT, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years old. I have three sisters younger than myself. I go to school ten months in the year. At present I study reading, writing, spelling and arithmetic. Our school will close in one more month, and then all the students will be free from books and work and can have time to enjoy themselves finely. We have three good Sunday-schools here, at one of which I am a regular attendant. This is my first letter, and I hope it will not get into the waste-basket.

Your little friend,

MATTIE CALDWELL.

MONTROSE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I observe from your advertisement in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE that prizes are given to any person giving the longest verse in the Bible, and in answer I would say: The longest verse is found in Esther viii, 9, which contains ninety words.

Yours most respectfully,

LEONA CHESNEY.

DARRINGTON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: My papa takes the ADVOCATE, and I like to read the little folks letters. I thought I would join them. I am a little girl ten years old, and have two sisters and one brother. I go to Sunday-school, and like to go very much. I will answer Claudia L. Chaney's question: "Claudia" is found in II Timothy iv, 21. I will also ask a question: Where is the word "thrend" found in the Bible? As this is my first, I will close.

Yours truly,

CARRIE L. WARREN.

A BOY'S RELIGION.—If a boy is a lover of Jesus, he can't be a church officer, or a preacher, but he can be a godly boy, in a boy's way and in a boy's place. He ought not to be too solemn or too quiet for a boy. He need not cease to be a boy because he is a Christian. He ought to play like a real boy. But in all he ought to show the spirit of Christ, and be free from vulgarity and profanity. He ought to eschew tobacco and intoxicating drinks. He ought to be peaceable, gentle, merciful and generous. He ought to discourage fighting. He ought to refuse to be a party to mischief, to persecution, to deceit. He ought to show his colors. He need not always be interrupting a game to say he is a Christian; but he ought not to be ashamed to say that he refuses to do something because it is wrong and wicked, or because he fears God or is a Christian. He ought to take no part in the ridicule of sacred things, but meet the ridicule of others with a bold statement that for the things of God he feels the deepest reverence.—Royal Road.

A BOY'S COMPOSITION ON GIRLS.—Mark Twain gives the following as a sample of a boy's composition on "Girls:"

"Girls are very stuck up and dignified in their manner and behaveyour. They think more of dress than anything and like to play with dowls and rags. They cry if they see a cow in a fur distance and are afraid of guns. They stay at home all the time and go to church every Sunday. They are always sick. They are always funy and making fun of boys and then turn around and love them. I don't believe they ever killed a cat or anything. They look out every nite and say, 'Oh, a'nt the moon lovely!' Thir is one thing I have not told and that is they always now their lessons bettern boys."

Farm and Home.

FOR WIVES AND HUSBANDS.—A sunshiny husband makes a merry, beautiful home worth having, worth working in and for. If a man is breezy, cheery, considerate and sympathetic, his wife sings in her heart over her puddings and her mending-basket, and renews her youth in the security she feels of his approbation and admiration. You may think it weak and childish, if you please, but it is the admired wife, the wife who hears words of praise and who receives smiles of commendation, who is capable, discreet and effective. I have seen a timid, meek, self-distrusting little body fairly bloom into strong, reliant womanhood under the tonic and cordial of companionship of a husband who really went out of his way to find occasion for showing her how fully he trusted her judgment, and how fully he deferred to her opinion.

Now, if you will permit me, I will give some suggestions to the wives also. Because your husband is a lover of peace and quietness and does not always pay back in your own coin, you must not think that your continued scolding and fault-finding make no more impression upon him than the fall of water upon a duck's back. It sinks, and "still waters run deep," you know. These quiet men are perfect volcanoes sometimes when endurance ceases to be a virtue. There are times when "the last feather breaks the camel's back." If you were sweet and gentle to your lover, continue to be so to your husband, if you wish to retain his affection and loyalty. I am aware that some men are not very sunshiny, but I think more would be willing to reflect the golden beams if their wives would adopt the halo plan.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

GYMNASTICS AND BATHING.—George Haulon, one of the famous family of acrobats, is opposed to gymnasiums, and is of the opinion that gymnastics are overdone. He recommends the use of the old-fashioned rubber bands or tubes. Talking with a Chicago reporter recently, he expressed himself on this matter and also on the subject of bathing. The latter will be interesting to amateur athletes. He said: "I don't believe in plunge or shower baths. I strip in a comfortable room. Wet a towel, wring it out thoroughly and wipe the surface of the entire body. Wet it again, but leave a little moisture in it, and rub the body again. Once more, with still more water on the towel, and then rub off dry. Our family has found that by all odds the best method."

MILK AS A STIMULANT.—Milk heated to much above 100 degrees, Fahrenheit, loses for a time a degree of its sweetness and density. No one who, fatigued by over-exertion of body and mind, has ever experienced the reviving influence of a tumbler of this beverage, heated as hot as it can be sipped, will willingly forego a resort to it because of its being rendered somewhat less acceptable to the palate. The promptness with which its cordial influence is felt is indeed surprising. Some portion of it seems to be digested and appropriated almost immediately, and many who now fancy they need alcoholic stimulants when exhausted by fatigue will find in this simple draught an equivalent that will be abundantly satisfying and far more enduring in its effects.—Medical Recorder.

FREQUENTLY accidents occur in the household which cause burns, cuts, sprains and bruises; for use in such cases Dr. J. H. McLean's Volcanic Oil Liniment has for many years been the constant favorite family remedy.

An open mind, an open hand and an open heart will everywhere find an open door.

MISCELLANEOUS.

No Universal Remedy

has yet been discovered; but, as at least four-fifths of human diseases have their source in Impure Blood, a medicine which restores that fluid from a depraved to a healthy condition comes as near being a universal cure as any that can be produced. Ayer's Sarsaparilla effects the blood in each stage of its formation, and is, therefore, adapted to a greater variety of complaints than any other known medicine.

Boils and Carbuncles,

which defy ordinary treatment, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla after a comparatively brief trial.

Mr. C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., writes that for years he was afflicted with boils which caused him much suffering. These were succeeded by carbuncles, of which he had several at one time. He then began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after taking three bottles, the carbuncles disappeared, and for six years he has not had even a pimple.

That insidious disease, Scrofula, is the fruitful cause of innumerable complaints, Consumption being only one of many equally fatal. Eruptions, ulcers, sore eyes, glandular swellings, weak and wasted muscles, a capricious appetite, and the like, are pretty sure indications of a scrofulous taint in the system. Many otherwise beautiful faces are disfigured by pimples, eruptions, and unsightly blotches, which arise from impure blood, showing the need of Ayer's Sarsaparilla to remedy the evil.

All sufferers from blood disorders should give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial,—avoiding all powders, ointments, and washes, and especially cheap and worthless compounds, which not only fail to effect a cure, but more frequently aggravate and confirm the diseases they are fraudulently advertised to remedy.

DUBOSE—Died, May 13, 1887, at the residence of his step-son, T. J. Powell, in the town of Lake Providence, La., REV. and HON. MALACHI DUBOSE, aged seventy-six years.

The deceased filled during his life many honorable and important positions in society and in the church, and performed the duties appertaining to each with honor to himself and acceptability to the public. The greater portion of his life was devoted to the practice of the law, and at one time he was elected to the office of parish judge of this parish, which position he filled with marked ability. He came to this parish (East Carroll) to live about the year 1849, has resided here ever since up to the time of his death; and no citizen in it has ever been more uniformly and generally respected. In the various relations of husband, father, citizen and friend, he was, to all appearances, blameless. In every avocation he pursued he manifested constantly the character of an honorable high-toned Christian gentleman; and higher eulogy than this can not be pronounced. But his true character and sterling worth were exhibited more particularly as an earnest and devoted Christian worker.

The following extract is taken from a short sketch of his life written by himself, and left for the benefit of his family and friends:

"I was born in Jones county, State of Georgia, on April 5, 1811. My mother was a holy woman of the Baptist Church, and her prayers and teachings, under God, were the prime means of bringing me to the cross. After many years of unquiet life, with some levity of character, I heard Dr. William Winans preach in New Orleans, in the spring of 1839, from the text, Matthew x. 32 and 33—'Whosoever, therefore, shall confess me before men, him will I confess also,' etc., which sermon led to my conviction, and soon afterward I was happily converted to God, and received the witness within myself that I was born again. I then returned to Mobile, Ala., where I resided, and joined the Methodist Church, under Dr. Jefferson Hamilton, of precious memory. I am fully persuaded that a few years after my conversion I realized the supreme comfort and peace of full salvation; and am not conscious, before God, of ever having fallen away from it. At the end of the year 1843 I joined the Mississippi Conference at Woodville, Miss. I spent two years in that and two years in the Louisiana Conference; but declining health compelled me to locate, and to resume the practice of the law for a support; and here I wish to say and leave my testimony to the fact, that the four years I spent in the itinerancy were the happiest years of my life. Though a sufferer in the body for many years, and thereby disabled from an active business life, I thank my God that I am what I am, and doubt not that he will be with me and bless me to the end."

From the foregoing extract, it will be readily perceived that, with Judge DuBose to be a Christian, did not mean simply to be a member of the church; but his inner life was "hid with Christ in God," in a manner that but few professing Christians even fully comprehend. From his age, experience and prominent Christian character he was for many years regarded as the leading figure in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in this place; and he will be sadly and painfully missed from his accustomed seat near the pulpit in our church. For a long time he was president of the Board of Stewards and president of the Board of Trustees of this church; and in his Christian work he was eminently consistent, bold and fearless.

His health was very feeble for many weeks immediately preceding his death. A few hours before he died our pastor, Rev. T. J. Upton, approached his bedside, and, with some difficulty, arousing him from a lethargy in which he was lying, asked him: "Bro. DuBose, if in this hour you find the Savior whom you have followed for so many years, precious to your soul, raise your hand. He was too far gone to speak, but instantaneously the hand and arm of the veteran soldier went up in attestation of the truth of our holy religion and its consolation in that trying hour to his own soul.

God grant that his life and his death may leave a lasting impress for good upon this entire community, is the earnest prayer of one who was for many years his intimate FRIEND.

GERMANY—MRS. MARTHA ELIZABETH GERMANY, the subject of this obituary notice, was born in Pike county, Miss., February 3, 1836. Sister Germany was brought up, lived and died in this section of Mississippi. Her parents—Col. James Gatlin and wife—were good Methodist Christians, whose piety led their children into the church and to Christ. Sister Germany joined the church and was converted soundly when about ten years of age. Upon this true foundation was reared a beautiful superstructure of Christian character which was seen and felt in all the duties, obligations and amenities of her life. In early womanhood she was married to Dr. Willis H. Germany, a physician, and valuable local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. From this marriage came four children—two sons and two daughters. These have been brought into the church and to Christ and are in earnest pursuit of the "inheritance of the saints in light," whither the parents have gone. Sister Germany's piety was living, saintly and beautiful with holiness. She was thus made a blessing to her family, the church and all with whom she had intercourse. This writer has often seen her face glow with celestial fire, and felt the magnetic power of her speech in love-feasts and experience meetings, which thrilled and charmed all who heard, while she told of the "riches of grace and joys unutterable, full of glory."

About the close of January last she was attacked by pneumonia, which terminated her earthly career and transported her to the rest remaining for the people of God. She died as she had lived. She "had kept the faith, finished her course, and was ready to be offered up," and exhorted and encouraged her children to meet her in heaven, and not to weep for her. We laid her remains beside her recently departed husband, in the grave-yard at Johnston Station, Pike county, Miss., in the presence of a large and weeping congregation. The community and the church at Johnston Station have sustained a great and irreparable loss in the death of these two elevated Christians, but we trust the impress of these two characters will lead and lure many to heaven. This writer feels the sadness of broken ties from the circle of dear friends, but the assuring hope of renewal in the "bright forever."

W. B. HINES.

HALE—MRS. MATILDA C. HALE, (nee Williams) was born in Rankin county, Miss., May 21, 1861. She was married to Mr. E. J. Hale, of Rankin, November 13, 1878. They moved to Claiborne parish, La., 1886, where she died of malarial fever, February 18, 1887. She leaves her husband and three children—two of them twins—to mourn their irreparable loss. The best legacy a mother and wife could leave she left—a true life, and a happy death—"ready." She taught her children to pray, realizing the sweet responsibility of a mother, as well as her vows to the church. By the grace of God we'll meet you. "We mourn, but not as those who have no hope."

L. P. MEADER.

PRACTICAL HEROISM.—The brave conductor who lost his life at Wilkesbarre in an effort to save a woman and child belongs to the band of unknown heroes who remind the world, from time to time, that the spirit of generous self-sacrifice is still alive.

In our time many men of intellect preach to the world a gospel of despair. A certain school of dyspeptic poets tell us, with infinite weariness, that life is not worth living, and more generous spirits bewail what they conceive to be a decadence of moral heroism and manly impulse. But, after all, the world is better than it is painted. The undaunted martyr no longer avows his faith amidst the climbing flames, but the spirit of persecution which took his life is dead. The martyr yet lives, but he is lost in the common mass of humanity, because kindness rubs the world and the ordeal of fire no longer brings him into prominence.

The old knights have passed away, but the sorrows and distresses of unfirm humanity still keep busy the marshalled chivalry of the soul. It is an inspiration to know that men yet linger on earth who are ready to lay down their lives for others, and to feel that the Heroic Age abides forever. The World.

She Broke the Engagement

because she saw that he had ceased to love her. Her beauty had faded, her former high spirits had given place to a dull lassitude. What had caused this change? Functional derangement; she was suffering from those ailments peculiar to her sex. And so their two young lives drifted apart. How needless, how cruel! Had she taken Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription she might have been restored to health and happiness. If any lady reader of these lines is similarly afflicted, let her lose no time in procuring the "Favorite Prescription." It will give her a new lease of life. Sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers of perfect satisfaction in every case, or money refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper.

If we practice goodness, not for the sake of its own intrinsic excellence, but for the sake of gaining some advantage by it, we may be cunning, but we are not good.—Cicero.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

MANUFACTURED BY

J. H. ZEILIN & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

I was afflicted for several years with disordered liver, which resulted in a severe attack of jaundice. I had as good medical attendance as our section affords, who failed utterly to restore me to the enjoyment of my former good health. I then tried the favorite prescription of one of the most renowned physicians of Louisville, Ky., but to no purpose; whereupon I was induced to try Simmons Liver Regulator. I found immediate benefit from its use, and it ultimately restored me to the full enjoyment of health.

THE METHODIST CHURCH MEMBER'S MANUAL: A Hand-book for every Methodist. By J. E. Godbey, D. D. Southwestern Methodist, publishers, No. 9 North Eight street, St. Louis.

The wonder is that such a book has not been written and published long ago. This supplies a very great want. Our people, as a rule, know so little about our polity and doctrines and tenets that this book will surely do them great good. Dr. Godbey has done a great service to the church in this little volume; and we would be glad to know that a copy was in every Methodist family in the land.

CERES' TABLET. Edited by Richard Parsons, Greek professor in Ohio Wesleyan University. Published by Ginn & Co., Boston.

This is a new edition of a very curious old Greek fragment, which contains some very curious things. We turn it over to the college boy at our house that he may unravel it.

BIBLE-NIGHTS—MCKENDREE CLASS MEETING TALKS. By D. P. Fitzgerald, leader. Published by our House in Nashville.

Here are thirty-six talks in the leader's best vein on very practical topics. This little book is calculated to do good in several directions, as the author hopes in his preface. The one great trouble with our class meetings is the want of proper leaders. Those who are now in that office will find this book helpful in making them better leaders; and better leaders means better class meetings. The book is also good to be read and pondered over in our private devotions, where there is always a need for just such a book. We commend these class-meeting talks most heartily to our readers.

RESPONSIVE READINGS FOR RELIGIOUS SERVICES. Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, thirty cents.

THE BUCHHOLZ FAMILY. Part Second. Sketches of Berlin life. By Julius Stinde. For sale by Wharton & Bro., 5 Carondelet. Price, $1 25. Scribner's Sons New York.

The first part has been well spoken of by the critics; and we presume this is as good.

CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE. By a New York Sunday-school superintendent; with an introduction by Dr. J. H. Vincent. Published by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York.

The introduction is enough to recommend this book.

BEAUTIFUL SONGS. By S. W. Straub, 213 State street, Chicago. Price, thirty-five cents.

This is the name of a new Sunday-school singing-book. The publisher offers to send a sample copy to any preacher for twenty cents.

PERIODICALS.

—The Southern Methodist Record. This periodical is growing in favor with many. The May number has a very fine table of contents. The subjects cover a large area in the field of thought. The writers show themselves to be men who think and express themselves clearly. The Editor's Table and Notes and Queries are a tilting round-up to a most interesting number. Published by Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $2. Six numbers a year.

—Through Eyrich, 130 Canal street, we have received from D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Stories of Remarkable Women, and Stories of Great Men. These are readable books for all classes, but especially for the young, and are gotten out in attractive style. For sale by Eyrich, 130 Canal street. Price, sixty cents each.

"Christ Before Pilate."

Munkacsy's great picture of "Christ Before Pilate"—a perfect copy on steel of the original picture, which has just been sold for one hundred thousand dollars. For sale by subscription only.

A Very Rare Offer.

Anyone who will read carefully an advertisement in another part of this paper, headed "Perfume by Mail," will be attracted at once by the liberal offer therein made by Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa., who are a thoroughly reliable firm and will do all they promise in the advertisement.

Our City Mission.

WHAT IT IS AND WHAT IT IS DOING.

This association was organized during the early part of the year, but has only recently gotten into working order. It has a membership of about two hundred, which is on the increase. The officers are: Rev. J. T. Sawyer, president; F. S. Parker, secretary; J. W. Fee, treasurer. The object of the association is to engage in general mission work in all its branches. The annual dues are but one dollar—a small sum for such an important work, and every Christian in this city should belong to the association and assist in its good work. There are committees for the various branches of the work, such as mission schools, home visiting, literature, special services, open air services, finance, singing and praying bands, etc.—all of which are busy. The Mission School Committee has established schools at the following places, under direction of our various churches: Gretna, Gouldsboro, Carrollton, and corner of Eighth and St. Denis streets. There is also a mission at the corner of Annunciation and Poeyfarre streets, under direction of Felicity Street Church, and others are to be established soon. The Home Visiting Committee are at work also. Cards of invitation have been printed for the various churches, which are to be distributed to the people in their homes, inviting them out to hear the gospel preached. The Literature Committee has a full supply of literature on hand, such as tracts, etc. This committee also furnishes the various mission schools with literature and solicits subscriptions to our church papers. The Committee on Special Services have in contemplation a gospel meeting on Locust and Clio streets—a much neglected field. The Finance Committee has raised funds for the building of a church at Gouldsboro, and the Committee on Singing and Praying Bands has been in attendance at our meetings in the open air, doing their duty willingly. The Committee on Open Air Meetings has been having successful meetings both at Gretna and Gouldsboro, preaching to hundreds of people who would hear the gospel no other way. The meetings have also been the means of awakening an interest at the two points, and an effort will be made to establish a church at Gretna at once. Thus we see that much has been done already, and there is yet much to do. A city missionary is expected from the Conference next year, to devote his entire time to this work. The city mission should be a regular organized institution in each of the large cities in our connection. Why can it not be?

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1887 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (thirteenth), July, 1887.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds. Several distinguished preachers invited, from a distance will be in attendance and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. A very general expression having been made to continue the meeting for a longer session than usual, it has been determined to extend the time of the services of the camp meeting to two weeks.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.; W. Otis, W. A. Hearin, R. E. Jones, Mobile, Ala.; J. J. Flowers, Bolling, Ala.; Dr. E. F. Griffin, Moss Point; J. P. Carter, Hattiesburg, Miss.; W. H. Foster, E. P. Mackie, J. H. Campman, B. O. L. Rayne, T. J. Carver, H. Jamieson, Jr., P. Werlein, H. Haag, New Orleans, La.; or H. E. Price, the keeper of the camp ground, near Biloxi, Miss.

The public are invited to attend.

W. H. FOSTER, Pres.

HUGH JAMIESON, JR., Sec.
NEW ORLEANS, May 16, 1887.

The second annual camp meeting for 1887 on Sam Jones Camp Ground will commence on the last Friday, August 26, 1887. The camp ground is beautifully situated, surrounded by mountainous scenery, and as fine ice cold springs as ever sought its level. The ground is situated on the L., N. O. & T. R. R.—commonly called Valley Route—146 miles from New Orleans, and ninety miles from Vicksburg; and the hotel and tabernacle are within a stone's throw of the railroad. Several distinguished preachers who have been invited will be in attendance, and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. The meeting will be continued ten or twelve days. The accommodations are large, and large additions will be made, and the accommodations will be sufficient for all who may come. Reduced rates of fare will be published later.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. F. Cassels, Dr. J. H. Whittington, A. J. Roberts, W. B. Longmen or J. K. Cobb, Gloster, Miss.

The public are invited to attend.

A. J. ROBERTS, Pres.
J. F. CASSELS, Sec.

The sixteenth annual camp meeting for 1887 of Heidelberg Camp Ground, near Crystal Springs, Copiah county, Miss., will begin on Thursday night, July 28, 1887, and continue eight days. This camp ground is situated on the Illinois Central railroad, 158 miles from New Orleans, and twenty-six miles from Jackson, Miss.

Ample accommodations will be made on reasonable terms for all visitors.

The ticket system will be preserved.

Reduced rates on the railroads are being secured.

All ministers friendly to camp meetings, with the public, are invited to attend.

The Board of Missions appointed the week, beginning August 8, as a week of prayer and self-denial in the interest of our missions.

"AS HAVING NOTHING, YET POSSESSING ALL THINGS."

BY RACHEL HEYNEAIR.

The earth is ours. Above us bends
God's infinite arch of stainless blue,
The costliest sapphire from the mines
Can never rival that in hue.

The earth is ours. Beneath us spreads
Grass greener than the emerald green.
The opal ne'er showed lovelier tints
Than in the commonest flowers are seen.

Have we no gold? The warm sunshine,
Tell me, what could more golden be?
Not all art's mysteries can make
Music like that bird in yon tree.

Hast thou lost love? It is not lost,
But on some distant, mist-veiled shore,
Beyond life's changing, restless sea,
It shall be thine forever more.

Hast thou lost youth? Beyond the skies
A glorious youth is waiting thee;
Strong as the eagle in his flight
Thy soul shall soar, from fetters free.

Hast thou shed tears? Not useless they.
God's angel counted every one.
They water plants of love and joy
In those far gardens of the sun.

Then do not mourn, though thou mayst be Poor, old, bereft of all, alone—
God only waits a little while
To give thee back threefold thine own.

How to Enjoy Preaching.

BY W. H. ANDERSON, D. D.

"As dull as a sermon" ought to be considered an adage both false and superannuated, alike disrespectful to the gospel of Christ and to the intelligence of its hearers. Preaching is God's appointed method for the circulation of inspired truth and for the salvation of men. It reveals God in the most precious relations, offers eternal life on the easiest of terms, presents Christ as both Savior and model, and the Holy Spirit as guide, comforter and sanctifier. The gospel should always be "the joyful sound," more glad in each century of the church of Christ than advent song from angels' lips to shepherds on Bethlehem's plain.

Before listening to the varied and grand truths of the gospel there must be suitable preparation of mind and heart, if we would commune with divine love and know that Jesus has power on earth to forgive sins. The quiet of the home circle, the holy hush of the Sabbath, the blessing secured from thoughtful, prayerful self-examination in the mirror of the Scriptures, and at the family altar, are necessary requirements. A storm-tossed lake is no more fitted to reflect the color and shape of the passing clouds, or the beauty of the villas on its banks, than a mind disturbed by care or ruffled by anger is prepared for the Word of the Lord from the preacher's lips. Suitable affectionate regard for God's minister, not merely as a man or a friend, and an earnest desire for spiritual profit, must chasten thought and hallow the soul. A spiritual appetite for the knowledge of "the truth as it is in Jesus," and for the experience of its saving power, must give fixed attention and a willing, teachable spirit. Real and deep sympathy with the preacher must be felt. The theme and the object of the sermon should be seen and appreciated. The mind of the hearer should travel side by side with the speaker, catch his glow and react to kindle his thought and emotion by the profound interest shining from the eyes and speaking from the upturned faces of the audience. It should be felt, "God is speaking to us in mercy through our brother, man."

This sympathy with the preacher, in view of his responsibilities, difficulties and trials, and the arduous work of his hands and heart, and the effort he makes for our personal salvation, should engage our affectionate co-operation, our ardent prayers for him at the mercy-seat. The secret of all effective preaching is "the demonstration of the Spirit and of power." The presence of the unction from on high gives light and beauty, life and glory to the gospel. Nothing can supply the place of the attending Spirit of God opening the minds and hearts of the hearers and applying the truth to the conviction of the reason, the rousing of the conscience, the decision of the will—each and all for God. Wandering thoughts are the birds that gather and consume the scattered seed. Worldly interests and business affairs and family cares must be left behind us when we "go up to the house of the Lord."

Gratitude to God should place its thank-offerings on his altars, for the blessings of our holy Christianity generally, and especially for individual experience of the saving power of the blood of Christ and of the regenerating Holy Spirit. The mind should be fixed on the Word preached with the same eager interest with which the astronomer sweeps the heavens with his telescope to find some new beautiful world of light. It is a poor compliment either to ourselves or to our God to let the mind remain dormant amid the splendors of redeeming love, and make our only benefit received from the gospel a mere momentary emotion without the attendance of noble reason, holy desire, and solemn purpose.

That is the best preaching which leads to penitence for sin and to entire life consecration to God through the Holy Spirit. Admiration for the intellect of the preacher, or rapture over fine passages of the sermon, is of little benefit unless it leads to more practical, devoted piety. God sends the manna from heaven; we must gather and prepare it ourselves before it can be food. We must crack the nut, whatever may be its exterior appearance, before we can enjoy the concealed kernel. Mere formal attendance on the ministry of "the Word," with no other design than to comply with custom, occupy an idle hour, gratify our curiosity, find an intellectual treat, or the subject of criticism, instead of religious benefit to the soul, is a source of real injury. The mind finds no food; habits of indifference and neglect become strengthened. The truth fails of its personal practical influence, and is no more than a topic of speculation or of dislike. Cherishing a sense of personal unworthiness, mingled with filial gratitude and holy wonder at "the riches of grace in Christ Jesus," the soul says: "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." "Hungry for the bread of life and thirsty for the water of salvation," the true "hearer of the Word" opens his ear to receive the truth, and his soul to make room for Christ and the Holy Spirit, there to make the sublime revelations of the wealth and glory of the grace of God. It is in the sanctuary that clouds disappear, doubts depart, mysteries are explained, sorrows are buried. Jesus reveals the hidden manna and educates faith in higher, walks, greater power, sweeter communion with God. Foretastes of heaven pour their richer strength and sweeter joy upon those that truly "wait on the Lord."

With the veil removed, God shines his light and truth and love from "the holy place." The humblest eye of faith may look and live and rejoice. The great mistake is the idea that it is the human adornment of the inspired Word by the intellect, learning, or genius of the preacher, that renders the gospel attractive and successful. These have their true value and proper place, and should be utilized; but it is the truth of God, attended by the Holy Spirit, that alone can save whatever may be the vehicle or mode of its presentation. It is the water of life that quenches the soul's thirst, whether the vessel that bears it is either earthen or golden. The intensely hungry man desires food itself more than the elegant equipment of the table or the refined ceremonies of refined life in taking the repast. Hungry Esau could dine on a mess of red lentils.

One great barrier to the enjoyment of preaching is that we set in judgment on the manner of the presentation of the truth rather than in waiting to receive the truth itself with humble, trustful hearts. We dictate to "Our Father" the manner in which truth shall influence us. We exercise what is not either right or duty—the claim to reject all that is distasteful to self and pride. We throw out all which reproves or rebukes us. We select promise when we ought to heed warning. Our pet sins must not be interfered with by the preacher; our heart-idols must not be dethroned even to give place to the Lord of glory. He enjoys preaching who gets new and nobler views of truth and duty, more humbling conceptions of the weakness and ruin of our fallen nature, and plainer, dearer, more practical knowledge and experience of the "grace, mercy and peace" of the gospel. The tears shed over our sins are benedictions; the father's kind reception of the returning prodigal is a foretaste of heaven. The deepest heart-regrets on account of our unfaithfulness, and the blessed consciousness of restored divine favor, the witness of the Spirit with our spirit, are priceless mercies. The close, personal, rigid self-examination, the utter negation of self, and the entire consecration of heart and life to Christ and his cause, are the responsive proofs of the power of the gospel and evidence of our personal interest in the world's Redeemer.

The gospel ennobles man in that it makes him a co-worker with God, addresses his reason and self-love, recognizes his power of choice, and appeals to his immortal interests and destinies. It reveals God in most precious relations, offers eternal life on the easiest of terms, presents Christ as Savior and model, and the Holy Spirit as guide, sanctifier and comforter. What a stoop of infinite condescension of divine love that God, enthroned in his own eternity amid the praises and glory of his own heaven, should ask man for his imperfect service and love! Incalculable blessing associates with love and obedience of Christ. Human reason reaches its highest dignity and happiness in true piety; human folly and sin culminate in the rejection of Jesus, and, through him, of an offered heaven with God, angels and redeemed ones.

The thought, "This is the house of God, the place of his teaching and of his worship," should hallow the place, the hour and the congregation. Nothing should engage the attention but the securing such spiritual mercies as shall the better prepare for life's duties and labors, and the service and glory of God. With the temple of the soul swept and garnished for the presence of God and the experience of his grace, the worshiper grows rich in the reception of truth, the humiliation of self, the elevation of affection, desire and purpose, and the untold satisfaction of communion with God through the gospel and the Spirit applying it.

God's temple is no place for the exhibitions of human pride and parade. Dust and ashes are no less such, though robed in costliest fabrics and ornamented with gold and gems. Sin loses none of its fearful hideousness and ruin, though effort may be made for concealment under a splendid liturgy or pompous ritual service. We should loose the soul from the trammels of toil and the tireless cares of earth, on the holy Sabbath, to listen to the music of divine promise, charm eye and being with the lovely flowers and rich fruits in the garden of the gospel. It should be allowed to gather some precious manna and get a large rich draught of water from the smitten rock. The Sabbaths measure and mark our rapid passage through earth. They are making up the history we must meet on high.

The preacher is a man like ourselves, yet God hath sent him with messages of mercy. His business is to show us the way of salvation. He is an ambassador of God. His office and mission should command our respect and awake recognition of divine love, and call out our powers to receive and study, accept and obey, and rejoice in the truth warm from the lips of Christ, and crimsoned and perfumed by his atoning blood. The philosophy of saving men by the efforts of men in preaching the inspired gospel blends grandest sublimity and simplest, yet divinest love. "Take heed how ye hear." "Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound." "It is a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death." "By the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

From Japan.

MR. EDITOR: I send a letter which I am sure will interest many of your readers, especially as it is copied for me by a boy of fourteen years only, who has himself been thrust out of doors by a heathen father and mother because of his faith in Christ. That faith remains unshaken. He is genuinely converted, and is the most powerful factor in our Kobe Church. We number six Japanese members here now, and fourteen in Hiroshima. Twelve of these last my father received last Sunday. Counting our one Chinese member and ourselves, we have twenty-seven souls in the Southern Methodist Church in Japan. There never has been such a mission field in the history of evangelical effort. This nation might be born to God in a day if the great Christian Church would put forth one mighty effort during the few remaining years of this century. Why not crown the nineteenth century with Japan for Christ? Pray for us. Help us.

Your brother,
WALTER R. LAMBUTH.

KOBE, JAPAN, May 12, 1887.

TRIED IN THE FURNACE.

The author of the following letter is a young boy who became a Christian while attending the mission school in Tokio. When he wrote to his mother of the change in his heart and life, she commanded him to return to his home, and then began to persecute him and try in every way to make him give up his faith. How he has been sorely tried, and the Lord has kept him, is thus told in a letter to Miss Youngman:

"CHIKUGO, Jan. 1, 1881."

"MY DEAR MADAM: Now, taking my pen in order to answer your kind exhortation, my heart is filled with gratitude and sorrow. I have to recompense to your kind exertions and prayers for Yanagawa by informing you that your incessant prayer has already reached to the windows of heaven, and our most gracious Father has stretched out his hand of salvation over the city of Yanagawa.

"Since you departed the mission work made no progress, and the number of attendants had been decreasing night by night; but the ardent prayers of the Christians, both of Tokio and Yanagawa, were heard by our Father, and every Christian here was impressed by the spirit that a Christian has a great responsibility of propagating the gospel. Thus some spoke to friends, and some to relations, and eleven men and women and four children repented their sins and were baptized by the Rev. Mr. Aoyama, who came here last December. There remain about ten persons who are going to be baptized next month.

"Christians at Yanagawa celebrated a merry Christmas; but, as my mother permitted me not, I could not attend there. As I heard of the Christmas a little, I will relate it here. The attendance was about thirty; and they sang hymns, prayed, and one of the boys spoke on the subject, "See the Lamb of God," in which he declared that whosoever sees, comes and believes in the Lamb of God, has the assurance of inheriting the eternal kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. After that they ate cakes, and thus ended the celebration of our Lord's birthday, which was utterly out of our expectation in such a place as Yanagawa.

"In order to explain the attractive prospect of Christianizing Yanagawa, I will quote the words of Rev. Mr. Aoyama. He said when he visited here last December that he should like to preach of Jesus more in Yanagawa than at Toyoura. Hitherto Yanagawa was the accursed place by the servants of our Lord; but, as it attracts the attention of all preachers now, can we not call her the blessed of our Lord?

"The men of reputation at Yanagawa now all acknowledge the truth of Christ's religion, and some of them dare to believe in Jesus, and say as they believed they will endeavor with all their might, and soon Christianize the town. Mr. Takehisa endeavors greatly to turn them to Christ. Messrs. Mori and Tsurawara work mainly for the salvation of souls. I often notice that the father of my dear friend, Ito-san, visits the preaching station and asks of the doctrine of Christianity.

"Many young ladies come to Miss Ariya to be taught the sewing, and at present she is going to tell them of the love of God.

"Oh, how blessed the city of Yanagawa is! Once she fixed her doom with that of Capernaum, but now far above in heaven.

"Now, to turn to my sorrows. As I informed my friends, I yielded to temptation and was almost going to become an intellectual Christian; but the grace of God let me out from that dangerous path to hell. When I was writing this letter to you to-night, my beloved mother came by me, telling and expressing all the yearnings of a mother to deny Christ. She burst into tears, and rather entreated me to bow before the idol. She sometimes begged me, and sometimes, pressing my arm, seemed to stroke me. Now my heart was filled with unspeakable sorrow. Bitter agony overshadowed the clearness of my heart. Both eyes were filled with tears, and flowed out incessantly, both on my clothes and this very paper. I trust in the almighty of our God-Father; yet my weak faith can not make my mother convict (convince my mother of.—H. L.) the goodness, or rather importance, of the religion of Jesus Christ. The stubbornness of my mother's heart increased day by day, month by month.

"Reflecting on the love of a mother, I sometimes resolve to yield to her persuasion; but a moment's thought changes my mind. But to-night I saw the mother's resolution, and if I still refuse, I can not say that she will not become a lunatic woman. But, alas! if I obey I shall be conveyed amidst the fires of hell; and truly one step backward or forward may settle my doom.

"I do care neither for money nor inheritance. When I meditate on the matter deeply, I become like an insensible man. If other persons persecute me, I shall stand firmly in the name of our Lord; but, as it is mother, it is very difficult for me to deal with. As I look on the tranquil and calm winter's evening, when I am alone, I always break into tears for the difficulty of this worldly path, the uncertainty of this human life, and the eternal love of our Father. If this be my situation for awhile more, I will become a sick person."

"I think I will see Mr. Takehisa (the preacher), and will settle my fortune. If I become an impotent (I suppose he means by this the loss of family estate and influence.—H. L.) man for my loving mother's sake, I will be glad. Please pray for me that I may not deny Christ. Inform this to my dear brothers, and pray that our Father will carry away the difficulty for me, pouring (his love into) all my soul and spirit for our Redeemer's name's sake. Amen.

"Yours affectionately,
"I. TOMIZASU."

Such is the evidence of God's presence and his power to save, coming from every part of the land. Is this not a reason for rejoicing, and renewed effort and prayer for the salvation of all this people? H. LOOMIS.

Life of Dr. McFerrin.

A Life of Dr. McFerrin is called for by the church and the general public. At the request of his family and in accordance with his own expressed wishes, the preparation of the book devolves on me. I propose to begin it at once, and take time enough to do it as well as I can.

My brethren can aid me in this undertaking by furnishing facts, incidents, and correspondence concerning Dr. McFerrin. The old men still living, who were his fellow-laborers in his early life, can render special service in this line.

I shall try to make a faithful portrayal of the man and his times while the facts are accessible, and the strong and unique personality of Dr. McFerrin is yet vivid in the minds of our people.

All help of the kind herein mentioned will be appreciated.

AN HEIR OF GOD.

BY REV. JOHN PARKER.

An heir of God, unmeasured my estate,
And evermore joint-heir with Christ, my Lord,
A heritage so vast, without a bound,
Made sure by His unchanging Word.

Unknown to fame, uncared for by the world,
A home on earth to-day, a king to-morrow;
My lowly lot on earth provokes my thought
Of heaven, my home—without a tear of sorrow.

I may be robed, perchance, in rags to-day,
For earth's allotments are no certain sign
Of my divine relation and estate,
My poverty—what then?—for heaven is mine.

A pilgrim pressing o'er a scorched path,
With weary feet and eager, hungry look
Toward the sure radiant sunset of my days:
For this I know—my name is in life's book.

To save and cleanse me fully, Jesus came;
To take me to His mansions, Jesus went;
The flesh he bore, and nail-prints are my pledge,
His broken side by cruel spear-gash rent.

His promises, like staves, on which I lean,
His Word like manna to my hungry heart,
His Holy Spirit's witness, bright and clear,
As tokens of my heritage in part.

I look, with pity on the earthlings of a day,
I scorn the offer of my portion here;
Mine is a heritage that kings might covet,
Not here, amid these griefs and graves—but there!

Up there—too high for stars to look upon,
Beyond the circling sun's gaze or his heat;
Beyond decay or measurement of cycles,
Beyond all weariness, shall rest my weary feet.

The Sunday-School Lesson for June 26, 1887.

BY C. G. ANDREWS, D. D.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

Leviticus x, 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."—Proverbs xx, 1.

CONNECTIVE AND EXPLANATORY.

About one year had intervened between the occurrences of the last Sunday-school lesson and those of this one. The date of the present one is thought to be April, B. C. 1490. Eighteen chapters, according to the division of our Bible, separate the lessons and contain many items of interest relative to the civil and religious government of the children of Israel. One of the most important events narrated is the setting apart of the priests for the sacred offices of the sanctuary. From the beginning God provided for the spiritual wants of his people. First, it was priests at the altar to offer the sacrifices and to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. Then when Christ, "the Lamb, slain from the foundation of the world," was born, the priest was succeeded by the preacher; and now pastors are appointed to feed the flock of God over which the Holy Ghost has made them overseers. Sad to relate that among preachers, as well as priests, there have been unworthy specimens. Among the four sons (Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, Ithamar) born to Aaron and succeeding to the priesthood by birthright, two of them, Nadab and Abihu, transcended their authority, brought reproach upon their holy calling and ruin to themselves. Moses solemnly, and according to the minute direction of the ritual, set them apart for the sanctuary service, investing them with the holy garments and consecrating them with blood. It may be that they were unduly elated by the honors put upon them and presumed to transcend the authority conferred upon them as ministers at the altar of incense. This was called also the golden altar, to distinguish it from the altar of burnt offering. It was of square shape, a cubit in length and breadth, and two cubits in height, ornately finished with golden rings for the insertion of the staves to bear the ark, which were made of acacia wood and overlaid with gold.

STRANGE FIRE.

Verse 1. "Nadab and Abihu took either of them his censer." Censer was a small portable vessel fitted to bear coals from the altar. Solomon prepared censers of pure gold for the service of the sanctuary. Uzziah (II Chronicles xxvi, 16-19), when intending to burn incense, took "a censer in his hand." In Revelation viii, 3, an angel is said to take a golden censer to offer up incense with the prayers of all the saints. "And put incense therein." Incense was made of stacte, onycha, galbanum and pure frankincense of equal proportions. Any other incense than thus compounded was forbidden to be offered. It was highly aromatic, "an odor of a sweet smell." "Offered strange fire." Neglected to take the fire from the altar, but took common fire, which, instead of sanctifying and making acceptable their gift, caused it to be turned into a destructive element.

CONSUMING FIRE.

Verse 2. "Fire from the Lord devoured them." Like a flash of lightning [illegible]-aming flame leaped from the altar and laid low the presumptuous interpreddlers with the sacred service. There are divine prescriptions for the worship of God, and woe be to him who either from rashness or inconsiderateness violates them. Uzziah did it to his own destruction. The sacred canon, containing all things great and small, is guarded by this flaming sword: "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life." Modern ministers at the sanctuary, who would avoid the sin of Nadab and Abihu, would do well to pattern after Paul's instruction to Timothy: "The servant of God must not strive; but be gentle to all men, apt to teach, patient in meekness, instructing those that oppose themselves."

MORAL OF THE INCIDENT.

Verse 3. "The Lord spake." Something more than the punishment of the offenders was intended. The beholders and men of succeeding ages were to be taught that sacrilege was a deadly sin, and that whosoever would approach the divine presence must do so "reverently, acceptably, and with godly fear." "Aaron held his peace." Deep sorrow for the death of his sons must have stirred his heart; but a solemn awe at the terrible vindications of the violated law stayed him in silence.

4, 5. The dead bodies were carried out of the sanctuary by Levites, second cousins of the deceased men.

6, 7. The priests and Levites were to use no signs of mourning, neither to rend their clothes nor to uncover their heads, because everyone who ministered about the sanctuary were forbidden to engage in anything that would unfit them for this work, and because the crime of their relatives was so provoking to God and so deserving of punishment that mourning over their fate might be construed as reflecting upon the divine administration.

STRONG DRINK FORBIDDEN.

Verse 9. Some commentators think, because an injunction against the use of wine and strong drink is thrown in here so abruptly, that the cause of the sin of Nadab and Abihu was drunkenness. One coming to minister in holy things, in a maudlin state of intoxication, would certainly be deserving of divine wrath. Indeed, one under the demoralizing influence of wine or strong drink is not in a fit condition to perform any of the responsibilities or obligations of life. It is disrespectful to man, as well as God, to come in his presence with senses disguised in liquor. A cloudy brain and a shaky hand unfit their possessor for any service to God or man, and for the performance of any work, secular or spiritual. The sanction for forbidding men to drink is of divine origin, and existed from the remotest antiquity.

10. "That ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and between clean and unclean." This is a strong reason why no one should drink intoxicating liquor. Drink blunts the sensibilities and degrades sacred things, and brings everything down to a brutish level.

11. "That ye may teach the children of Israel." This lesson was taught with a fearful emphasis. The remembrance of the ungodly priests scathed by the lightning of divine wrath would always make them to tremble at the consequences of sacrilege.

Treatment for "Charbon."

MR. EDITOR: I see in your last ADVOCATE an account of great mortality, from "charbon," in Onachita parish. As I have had successful experience in treating that dreadful disease, I may be allowed to give my treatment through your columns for the benefit of those suffering from it.

I consider "charbon" (so called) to be analogous to, if not identical, with what medical students know as "dissecting wounds." If the finger be cut in dissecting a subject, the fluids of whose body chance to be poisonous, the student becomes infected, and, if not promptly and properly treated, dies speedily. The same thing occurs sometimes to people skinning a dead animal. And I think, in "charbon," the inoculation is effected by insects, that have been sucking the fluids of dead animals, inserting their infected bills into other live animals. The poison in either case is very virulent and active. It seems to be strongly acid, and deadly sedative. And in treating it I give, internally, alkaline stimulants.

For a horse or a cow I give from a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful of liquor ammonia (it must be fresh and of best strength), and from two to four times the quantity of best alcohol, diluted in from one pint to a quart of water, poured down the animal's throat (let nobody ever drench an animal through the nose); and repeat the dose every two, four or six hours, as may be needed. The indications will be distress of the animal, and difficulty of breathing. And if there be any local manifestations, such as hardness or swelling, make crucial incision, proportionably long and deep, in the center. Scour out the cavity with a rag-mop; then fill it with fluid carbolic acid, and rotate forcibly in the bottom of the cavity a sharpened flat stick until a soft mass of the debris be formed; then remove that, and wash out the cavity with carbolized water by means of a Davidson's elastic syringe; then dry the cavity with a rag-mop, and fill it again with pure carbolic acid, and bore it in again. And continue to do this until the cavity becomes black and ceases to form the soft mass of fluid tissues. Then cleanse out the cavity with the syringe; dry it with the mop, and then fill it again with pure fluid carbolic acid, and puncture, from within to without, the surrounding parts until the sound, "quick" flesh be reached, to let the carbolic acid penetrate the affected parts, and wash out to the line of unpoisoned tissues. And six or eight hours afterwards do the same thing, only more so if the local symptoms seem to call for it. And when the local manifestations have been sufficiently subdued, fill the cavity with pure spirits of turpentine, and apply a compression over it. And afterwards dress the wound with equal parts of the turpentine and castor oil mixed.

For a human being I adopt the same treatment. For an adult give every two, three or four hours twenty to thirty drops of the strongest water of ammonia, with a teaspoonful of best alcohol, in a glassful of hot water, sweetened, as long as there is any pain. And test the local affected parts as described for the inferior animals.

Having been very successful with this treatment, hope it may prove equally so in the hands of others whenever needed. But it must be instituted in time; delay is fatal—often speedily so.

Old Maids Another Time.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of June 2, in an article entitled "Old Maids Again," "J. W. M." draws some conclusions that appear to me to be ill founded.

The writer referred to objects to celibacy because it "dwarfs, more or less, those vast humanistic qualifications mentioned above." I have read the article in question, and looked "above" in vain for a demonstration that marriage is necessary to "those vast humanistic qualifications"—whatever they may be. I presume the word "above" refers to these sentences: "Marriage is the fulfillment of one of the highest callings of our nature;" and, "his (Adam's) social, intellectual and moral well-being demanded it (marriage)." I do not know exactly what the writer means by "humanistic qualifications." If he means the philanthropy and human sympathy that Jesus of Nazareth illustrated and taught, that St. Paul and the Seer of Patmos exemplified and expounded, I can not see that marriage has anything to do with them. If the words mean conjugal and parental affections and offices, I admit that marriage is indispensable to "humanistic qualifications;" but to only these, not to the round and grand development of mind and soul in the image of God.

How would Frances E. Willard do for an example of "humanistic qualifications?" or Hannah Moore, Caroline Herschel, Miss Mitford, Maria Edgworth, Frances R. Havergal, Frances Power Cobbe, or a host of others? These women seem to have developed the "humanistic qualifications" necessary to the service of God and the good of man to as great a degree as Mrs. Cross (George Eliot), or others among women who have attained eminence.

"J. W. M." concludes from the opinions set forth in his article that "a poor husband is a thousand times better than none." He further urges, as a reason why a "poor husband" (I understand "poor" in a broad, general sense) is such an excellent and necessary complement of a good woman, that "a boy, bursting into the sweetfulness of manhood," is an inestimable treasure, which it is worth a lifetime of suffering to possess. Excellent reasons! Then women are to marry that they may become mothers of boys "bursting into the sweetfulness of manhood." I protest. Manhood is incidental to the married state, and not the end and object of every woman's life.

What recollections of "J. W. M." may have given rise to the idea of "a boy bursting into the sweetfulness of manhood," I can not imagine. This writer does not remember ever having "burst into the sweetfulness" of anything, unless it was a jar of jam; but, on the contrary, he frequently burst out of his trousers and jacket, and permitted his mother to "burst into the sweetfulness" of furnishing him with such garments.

It appears that a woman must put an end to the culture of her mind, cut off great opportunities of usefulness "for God and home and native land," in her God-ordained sphere—which is not circumscribed by four walls—and must immolate herself upon the hymeneal altar to be the drudge of some idle, slovenly man—to live in intimate relations with such a beast, as only man can become—all this in order to develop "humanistic qualifications." Every observer has seen the woe and ruin wrought by marriage to men of idle and dissolute habits—woe that descends to the third and fourth generations through the "boy bursting into the sweetfulness (?) of manhood," and through the neglected and maltreated girl who has never seen, and, therefore, knows nothing about the "sweetfulness" of womanhood.

A curse on society is the notion that we put into our daughters' too receptive minds that they must marry somebody—if they can not marry a man altogether suitable, they are to marry whom they can. "Good Lord!—anything, so it is a man." I have known a young woman of fortune, refinement and culture, to use this reason as a vindication of her intention to marry a man utterly unfit for the society of any pure woman, much less to be her husband.

I am no advocate of celibacy, except under certain conditions. If celibacy be an evil, it is less an evil than improper marriage. If all women stood on the same platform as the eminent physician, who says "she will have the best or none," I should regard it a millenial sign. Then homes would reproduce the Psalmist's picture; and, with each chiming of the golden bells, we might say with truth: "Happy shalt thou be; it shall be well with thee." F. S. P.

Colportage Work in the North Mississippi Conference.

I respectfully submit the following report for the second quarter of the Conference year, ending May 31, 1887:

Miles traveled, 964. Books and tracts sold, $298 20, as follows: Koscinsko, $22 60; Sallis, $16 20; Durant, $3 40; Vaiden, $3 75; Goodman and Richland, $8 75; Greenwood, $32 55; Sidon and Tchula, $14 10; Egypt, $20 60; Buena Vista, $8 25; Booneville and Rienzi, $12 45; Okolona, $60 20; Tupelo (District Conference) $46 80; Edwards, Mississippi Conference (District Conference), $29 25; Brookhaven, Mississippi Conference (District Conference), $19 30. Collected for church papers, on new and renewed subscriptions, $69.

These figures are not commensurate with my desire; but, considering the general financial pressure throughout the country, I feel that pretty fair success has been attained. We can not estimate the full amount of good accomplished in any department of religious work by numerals. I am satisfied that seed is now being sown that will produce much good fruit, and that bread is being cast upon the waters that will be found after many days.

By distributing good books, tracts and papers we displace and prevent the introduction of those that are evil, and deposit seeds of truth and righteousness that will ripen into a full harvest of purified and saved souls. From these considerations I thank God for what he has enabled me to do in the past, and take courage for the future.

May the Lord bless all who have helped us by prayers, hospitalities and means in this good work!

G. W. BACHMAN,
Colporteur and Book Agent.

Unfermented Wine.

MR. EDITOR: The Mississippi Annual Conference, at its last session, by a unanimous vote, passed a resolution recommending the use of unfermented wine for communion purposes whenever it can be had. I write this note to inform the brethren that it can be had from Mr. W. H. White, Meridian, Miss., either in pint or quart bottles. Small churches should get pint bottles, as it will not keep after being opened. It is the pure juice of the grape, containing no alcohol.

From the Work.

RINGGOLD CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Saturday morning before the fifth Sabbath in May, Bro. T. J. Martin and I started for the regions beyond to fill an appointment made by the writer some time ago. We arrived at the place appointed for worship, and found a large brush arbor well seated with pine poles and new plank. The congregation had assembled, and Bro. Martin took his stand behind a small table and read and commented on Acts x, and followed the comment with a soul-stirring exhortation. We then had a reconsecration of the few workers, and dismissed to meet again at one and a half hours by sun, to engage in a prayer meeting. At dark a throng had assembled to hear the words of eternal life. The little preacher had extraordinary liberty in trying to preach from Titus ii, 11, 12. The little altar was crowded with penitents—some hard-shells, one Catholic, and backslidden church members. After a faithful prayer by Bro. Martin, the doors of the church were opened, and two very promising young men joined. One of them was raised a Catholic, and educated in Spain for a priest. The preacher went home with him and spent the night; had a long talk with him; gave him a Discipline; received him into the church on Sunday, and sent his name as a subscriber. The prayer meeting on Sunday morning, conducted by our German class leader, Bro. Pritzen, was a glorious meeting. We had a camp-meeting congregation at eleven o'clock. Quite a number of Bro. Parvin's people were present.

In the afternoon Bro. Roberson and I had the pleasure of going to see Grandma Alden, the oldest Methodist the writer ever saw. She will be eighty-five years old before this reaches you. She asked us to sing, which we did with great pleasure. She then read her own Bible that she has read through time and again. We then had a glorious season of prayer, and then she related her experience, which is rich and glorious. The hour had then arrived to start back to the brush arbor. We then bid her good-bye, feeling that it was good that we had been there.

On our return we stopped with a hard-shell family. We invited the old man to come out to meeting. He accepted the invitation, and came and brought his family. One of his nieces was converted and joined the church. We closed on Sunday night, feeling that we had well spent the two days. The number of conversions is not known to us. Accessions to the church, 5. The prayer meetings on the circuit are very well attended. Class meetings are growing. Our worst trouble is the whisky devil. There are five drinking-places on this little circuit. We have been firing into the whisky men. Some of them are rearing. When they retreat and hoist the white flag, then the firing will stop, and not till then, God being our helper. Brethren, pray that we may be delivered from this soul-destroying stuff, whose place is in the bottomless pit of hell. We send the names of three new subscribers.

Yours in Christ,

H. W. MAY.

HOUSTON AND WESLEY CHARGE.

MR. EDITOR: The Lord has done great things for us, wherefore we are glad, and praise his matchless name. Bros. George S. Inge and J. W. Beville began a protracted meeting here May 18, which continued nine days. Bro. Inge did the preaching, and Bro. Beville lead the singing. Never have I witnessed such divine power accompanying both the preaching of the Word and the songs of Zion. Seventy-nine persons professed faith in Christ during the meeting; twenty-five joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and there are more to follow. The Baptist, Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches will also receive some of the new converts. More than once, while Bro. Inge was preaching, sinners accepted Christ and rejoiced with their friends. During one service the Holy Ghost came with such power upon the people that there arose spontaneously a volume of praise from over one hundred voices at once. God's saving grace was felt everywhere. The editor of the Free South, Bro. George Foster, professed religion in his office. Misunderstandings and old feuds, which for years had rankled as moral cancers in the breast of church members, eating out the very heart of all spiritual enjoyment and sweet communion with Christ, were washed away by the purifying blood of the Lamb. Now brethren meet each other as brethren who had not spoken for years. A large number in the church, both old and young, who say they never had any religion before, will pray in public, and talk in experience meetings. We call upon all that is within us to bless the holy name of God for sending these consecrated men to labor with us, and for using them while here to the advancement of his kingdom upon earth. Our prayers will go with them.

The many friends of Bro. M. C. Shell will be grieved to learn of his sad misfortune in the loss of his residence by fire. The fire was discovered about twelve o'clock at night, May 31. The house was so near consumed then by the flames that some of the family barely escaped with their lives. Very little was saved from this merciless destroyer. He and family are bearing their loss with Christian fortitude.

EUGENE JOHNSON, P. C.

Vastly more can be done for religion by making manifest the real loveliness of religion, than in any other way. It is the winning power of godliness that gains the greatest conquests in this world. Those who would draw others to their religious faith and practice will be successful in proportion to the attractive forces which they employ; and unsuccessful as such influences are wanting in the presence of repulsiveness or compulsiveness. If the representatives of religion were more careful to make themselves more agreeable in their manners and measures, they would undoubtedly do vastly more for that which they would commend, than can possibly be done by but a partial exemplification of the "beauties of holiness." To be more amiable and companionable would be a great improvement of the religious character and conduct of too many by whom Christianity is judged.

More Conscience.

We want more conscience in all our trades of the day; then our carpentry, our plumbing, our cabinet-making and our tailoring will not be what they are, but what they claim to be. The looms that weave our fabrics and the establishments that sell them to the people; the lawyers who propose to take care of our wills when we are dead, and to cut now the silver bond of marriage when it has rusted, and concerning which God has said, "Let no man put it asunder;" the legislators who so tenderly claim only to be "the servants of the people;" the dairyman who sells us milk; the groom who cares for our horses; the clerk who keeps our accounts—the need of all these to-day and of every other right work is more conscience.

There is a vast amount of slovenly, dishonest work done, and it has done much to degrade men and to put them at a very serious disadvantage. A man who does not put truth into work does not tell the truth, and he is doubly guilty when he makes the word or the fabric or the opportunity lie for him. Wherever you are employed, young men, and by whomsoever, put your conscience into your work, and, though your employer wrong you, never wrong yourself by slighting your task. Be very careful that circumstances, the removal of restraints, are not allowed to rob your conscience of its sublime liberty. Better maintain your conscience in doing your duty than to escape the reproach of men, and be careful to carry your conscience into the smallest duty. Nothing is indifferent the faithful doing of which responds to moral obligation in a man.

Some men can not be trusted with details. A thing of duty with them is determined by its massiveness, its quantity, or the capacity it may have for promotion or self-glorification. In all the universe very little things are important. It would seem that God was very careful in making a spear of grass, and there is more of wonder in the throat of a canary than in the shaggy head of a lion. The faithfulness of a man is not determined by the size of his work, and duty is never done when its force is expended on the great things at the expense of smaller obligations. When one confers the dignity of conscientious duty upon the smallest part of his work, he has not only served well, but he has laid the stairway of his own promotion. It is nobler to be faithful than to be famous, and I assure you, young men, if you would give greatness to your duty, if you would ever climb to the ideal yet a dream in your mind, it will be by faithfulness in the smallest matters.—M. Rhodes, D. D.

Avoid False Guides.

Nothing could be more misleading than the theory that every man or woman can be his or her own doctor. Books are published which contain long catalogues of symptoms, and lay down inflexible rules for treatment. Many lives are sacrificed annually to such amateur medical treatment. The danger of taking any remedy without having a proper diagnosis of one's case, needs only to be intimated to be admitted. Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., found, when they introduced their Compound Oxygen to the public, that wisdom, as well as honesty, demanded the frankest statements to their patients. A correspondence soon brings out all the important facts regarding the sufferer's condition. If the physicians discover that Compound Oxygen and its associated remedies will not cure the disease under consideration, they make it an unvarying rule to say so. This precept of frank and manly dealing has not been departed from throughout seventeen years of active and remarkably successful practice. During that long period their Home Treatment by Compound Oxygen for consumption, bronchitis, rheumatism, paralysis, asthma, and associated diseases has been introduced into forty thousand families, and its remarkable success warrants every recommendation that has been uttered in its behalf. It is not a cure-all remedy, but where prescribed after careful investigation of the patient's case, it rarely fails to effect a cure. Drs. Starkey & Palen send a very interesting book, free, to anybody who will write for it.

Christ's Words.

Christ's words are endless and boundless. No human mind has gone beyond them, nor climbed to their loftiest height, nor penetrated to their lowest depth. Within them, as within the bounds of newly-discovered worlds, men have for ages dwelt and wrought and thought, making new discoveries, but never exhausting them, never passing beyond them.

"You never get to the end of Christ's words," says Dean Stanley. "There is something in them always behind. They pass into proverbs, they pass into laws; they pass into doctrines, they pass into consolations; but they never pass away, and after all the use that is made of them they are still not exhausted."

Christ himself says of his own words: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." These words are immortal. They shall pass on, into the eternities. They shall come up, as witnesses, as judges, at the end of time, for "the same shall judge you in the last day." They shall not fail in all the tests and duration of time, and when "heaven and earth shall pass away," the words of Christ "shall not pass away."

These words of Christ are ours "for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness;" for a lamp of life, for a chart of earthly pilgrimage, for an everlasting possession; ever fresh, ever new, ever unfolding; ever enriching, exalting and glorifying the new man made after the image of Christ. "Beautiful words! Wonderful words of life!"

How poor the world would be, and how dark, without the precious words of Christ! How the beauty and the music, the inspiration and the glory, would pass out of life, if these words of Christ should take unto themselves wings and fly away! Surely, then our earthly house would be left unto us desolate, with wintry chill and midnight gloom upon it. But, thank God, the words of Christ are here, for us and our children, to abide forever.—Evangelical Messenger.

MONEY, OR MAN.—If money-getting for its own sake, or for the power it confers, is to continue to be the master passion, we may confidently expect that the conflict between labor and capital will intensify, until it rends the social fabric. But if a genuine interest in man and his destiny, and in wiser modes of living, takes possession, we may reasonably hope that the upward struggle of the masses will take the form of a quiet, gratifying progress. Happily there are signs on every hand that the higher ideals are winning allegiance. Even the teachers of political economy are beginning to admit that man, rather than wealth merely, is the subject of their science. As this idea gains general acceptance it must effect great changes not only in ways of looking at things, but in conduct and policy. Business methods and political action will take on a new complexion, and produce very different results, when public opinion is thoroughly converted to the truth that the chief object of private endeavor and public institutions is not the accumulation of riches, but the perfection of man.—Work and Wages.

What to see and how to see it. Go to Boston. Visitors to the East should enclose ten cents in stamps to the United States Hotel for their interesting book, containing complete maps and valuable historical matter and illustrations.

THE ART OF THINKING.—One of the best modes of improving the art of thinking is to think over some subject before you read upon it, and then observe after what manner it has occurred to the mind of some great master; you will then observe whether you have been too rash or too timid; what you have omitted and what you have exceeded; and by this process, you will insensibly catch the manner in which a great mind views a great question. It is right to study; not only to think when any extraordinary incident provokes you to think, but from time to time to review what has passed, to dwell upon it, and to see what trains of thought voluntarily present themselves to your mind. It is a most superior habit in some minds to refer all the particular truths which strike them to other truths more general; so their knowledge is beautifully methodized, and a particular truth at once leads to general truth. This kind of understanding has an immense and decided superiority over those confused heads, in which one fact is piled upon another without any attempt at classification or arrangement. Some men read with a pen in their hand, and commit to paper any new thought which strikes them; others trust to chance for its appearance. Which of these is the best method in the conduct of the understanding, must, I suppose, depend a good deal upon the understanding in question. Some men can do nothing without preparation—others, little with; some are fountains, others, reservoirs.—Sidney Smith.

THE SUNDAY NEWSPAPER.—A seventh part of every man's existence is to be given to the consideration of his relations to God and eternity. No other view than this can come up to the meaning of the words, "Remember the Sabbath day"—"to keep it holy." Now, the whole tendency of the Sunday newspaper is to break down and obliterate this important truth. It says, in effect, that there is no difference between Sundays and other days as to what one is to read and think about. The fact that most men have more leisure then is only a reason why they should read more of the same kind of matter which they read during the secular week. And the paper, coming to them in the morning, can not but give their thoughts and feelings a direction wholly inconsistent with the design of the day. And this is true, whatever be the character of the journal. It may be pure and elevated in tone, and its contents both interesting and instructive, yet, being thoroughly secular, "of the earth earthy," it must needs lead the reader's mind away from the things which the rest-day was intended to keep before him. Indeed, it is hardly a paradox to say that the better the Sunday paper is in a literary point of view the worse is its influence, because it is the better adapted to catch the unwary and lead them away from the proper use of holy time. No man can habitually read such a paper without insensibly losing the feeling that there is any sacredness in the first day of the week.

Take away the religious sanction of Sunday, and its hold upon the public mind is gone. This religious sanction is what the Sunday issue of secular journals habitually undermines. Hence the deliberate assertion that such issue is evil, and only evil, and that continually. Editors and publishers may not, doubtless, do not, think so; such is the fact.—Dr. T. W. Chambers, in the Homiletic Review.

FASCINATING WOMEN.—Sydney Smith declared, that not only was feminine beauty of value, but that a girl's whole prospects and happiness in life depended upon a new gown or becoming bonnet. "But," he added, "the great thing is to teach her their just value, and that there must be something better under the bonnet than a pretty face for real happiness." The most beautiful women are not always the most fascinating. It may be added, we fear, that they are seldom so. The reason is obvious. They are apt to rely too much on their beauty, or to give themselves too many airs. Mere beauty ever was, and ever will be, but a secondary thing, except with fools. And fools admire it for as little time as anybody else; perhaps not so long. They have no fancies to adorn it with. If this secondary thing fall into disagreeable ways, it becomes but a fifth or sixth-rate thing, or nothing at all, or even worse than nothing. We resent the unnatural mixture. We shrink from it, as we should from a serpent with a beauty's head. The most fascinating women are those that can most enrich the every-day moments of existence. In a particular and attaching sense, they are those that can partake of our pleasures and our pains in the liveliest and most devoted manner. Beauty is little without this.

Indifference to another's comfort, or in reference to the least sin, betrays our hardened state of mind.

Bradfield's Female Regulator!

ATLANTA, GA., Feb. 20, 1881.

DR. J. BRADFIELD: Dear Sir—Some fifteen years ago I expanded the recipe of Female Regulator, and carefully studied all localities in regard to its components, and then, as well as now, pronounced it to be the most scientific and skillful combination of the really reliable remedial vegetable agents known to science, to act directly on the womb and uterine organs, and the organs and parts sympathizing directly with these, and, therefore, providing a specific remedy for all diseases of the womb and of the adjacent organs and parts. Yours Truly,

JESSE BORING, M. D., P. D.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctor's bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Tutt's Pills

REGULATE THE BOWELS.

Habitual Costiveness

Causes derangement of the entire system, and begets diseases that are hazardous to life. Persons of sedentary habits are subject to Headache, Defective Memory, Gloomy Forebodings, Nervousness, Fevers, Drowsiness, Irritable Temper and other symptoms, which unfits the sufferer for business or agreeable associations. Regular habit of body alone can correct these evils, and nothing succeeds so well in achieving this condition as Tutt's Pills. By their use not only is the system renovated, but in consequence of the harmonious changes thus created, there pervades a feeling of satisfaction; the mental faculties perform their functions with vivacity, and there is an exhilaration of mind, freedom of thought, and perfect heart's ease that bespeaks the full enjoyment of health.

SECRET OF BEAUTY

Is health. The secret of health is the power to digest a proper quantity of food. This can never be done when the liver does not act its part. It is the driving wheel in the mechanism of man, and when it is out of order, the whole system becomes deranged, and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Constipation, Jaundice, Bilious Colic and General Debility ensue. To restore the functions of the Liver and impart that purity which always attends a healthy constitution, Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills are recommended. They are not a cure-all but are designed solely for the disordered Liver and the diseases which it produces.

The Board of Missions appointed the week, beginning August 8, as a week of prayer and self-denial in the interest of our missions.

Briefs.

The influx of foreigners to our country, at the average of 2,000 a day, is attracting the serious attention of thoughtful people. When our labor-market is already overstocked; when our own American boys are already shut out of the shops and trades by foreigners; when the public lands are being taken up by them in such a way that in a few years there will be no public lands, it is time for the statesmen of the country to look after the patrimony of the children of this nation! In regard to this matter the Christian Intelligencer, of New York, says:

The public lands will be taken up in ten years—in less than ten years if the immigration continues to flow in as it does this year. They are the patrimony of our sons, the sons of the men who fought the War of the Revolution, of 1812, and the Civil War. Foreigners who have not the least claim upon these lands, who have not expended a cent of money or a stroke of work or a thought for their acquisition, are taking them up. It is an outrageous injustice to the sons of American farmers to allow this seizure of land to go on.

What is to be done? "Put a tariff on Castle Garden," as the workingman exclaimed at a political meeting. Charge not less than $50 a head for every immigrant. It would look unkind! Not at all. Let these immigrants go to temperate South America and carve out a republic as we and our fathers have done. It has not hurt us to do it, it will not injure them.

The director of the Mint estimates that the production of the precious metals in the United States, last year, were: Gold, $35,000,000, and silver, $51,000,000. Colorado is the largest producer, with Montana second, and California third. The annual supply of silver has doubled since 1872. The total stock of coin on hand, January 1, was: Gold, $560,000,000, and silver, $324,000,000. The amount of gold and silver bullion on hand at the same time was $88,400,000.

At the anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in London, there was presented an eloquent statistical comparison between the condition of the society fifty years ago and now, showing that then its total receipts were £100,000, while now they approach £250,000; that then the year's issue of Bibles was 600,000, while now it is 4,000,000; that then the cheapest Bible cost 2s., and the cheapest New Testament, 6d., while now the former can be had for 10d., and the latter (in the form of the "Shaftesbury" edition) for 1d.; and that then the Bible was circulated in only 136, while now it is circulated in 280 languages, and by midsummer the whole of it will be translated into Japanese, the only great language in which, at the present time, the Scriptures do not appear in a complete form.

THE HAMILTON-GAMBRELL CASE.—Chancellor Peyton, after hearing all the evidence on both sides and the arguments of the attorneys for the State and defense, has decided that Hamilton and Eubanks are not entitled to bail. Albrecht is to be released on a $5,000 bond. Hardy and Figures are discharged. In accordance with this judgment, Hamilton and Eubanks have been confined to the county jail. Albrecht has given the required bond, and the others are free.

Heirs of God.

The greatest thoughts are those inspired by the Word of God. The greatest facts are those connected with the redemption of man. The wonder of revelation is the simplicity of the language that is used to embody these great thoughts and set forth these tremendous facts. The charm of Scripture is that its words are very simple. A child of ten years can read the New Testament as readily and with as much ease as a person of thirty years. The Bible abounds in little words; but these little words are used in a way nowhere else to be found. They convey ideas too great to be apprehended by the largest minds. They are freighted with thoughts, whose meaning transcends the limit of all intellectual endeavor. They contain realities, whose richness will ravish souls through endless futurity.

How little are the words at the head of this column; and, yet, whose mind has ever grasped and comprehended the fact which they reveal? St. John had, perhaps, as wide range of vision here as any other person. He apprehended clearly the great thought of the Christian's heirship; but the tremendous meaning of the fact, set forth by the thought, eluded even his all-comprehensive intellectual power. "Beloved, now are we the sons (heirs) of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." Paul's superb intellect found itself embarrassed in the same direction—an embarrassment which manifested its expectancy of a grander revelation, "in groaning for the redemption of the body." Peter's great and impulsive mind could go no further than the fact that he was a "partaker of the glory that shall be revealed."

"Heirs of God!" Paul's reasoning to show that this is the Christian's relation to God is comprised in one brief sentence: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." The testimony of the divine Spirit is clear and convincing; and the apostle's reasoning upon that testimony is conclusive. The witness of the Spirit establishes the genuineness of the sweetest fact known in human experience. The apostle's logic, built upon that witnessing, establishes, upon an immovable basis, the reality of the grandest fact of human existence. The direct revelation of the Spirit of God to the human spirit, of its true relation to God, and the conclusive reasoning of the human mind from that premise, correlate the subjective experience of sonship with the objective fact of heirship in such a way as to create the greatest wonder known to intelligence. There can be no greater wonder than a "sinner saved by grace," and by that salvation constituted an "heir of God and a joint-heir with Christ."

"Heirs of God!" The apostle thanked God who "hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." That sentence throws a halo of glory upon the heirship of the Christian. It is not an empty heirship. There is something tangible to which the Christian is heir. It is "an inheritance in the kingdom of Christ, and of God." It is "an inheritance among them that are sanctified." It is "an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven." It is a most delightful thought of the apostle that the possession of the Spirit, who witnesses to our adoption as children of God, is "the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession." He who has the Spirit, has the pledge of the inheritance. He who has the Spirit, has the testimony of his present sonship; and that is the surety of his future possessions.

Commencement Week in Jackson, La.

BY REV. T. K. FAUNT LEROY.

Upon the night of May 25, by agreement with the Rev. J. T. Sawyer, presiding elder of the New Orleans district, I boarded the Mississippi Valley train at Baton Rouge with tickets secured for Ethel, at which place we were met by Bro. Dudley with a hack and a span of fast horses, who, in one hour, landed us safe in Jackson, La.

Though it was eleven o'clock P. M. when we reached the town of churches, schools and college, the little city of learning was all astir; men and women, lads and lassies filled the sidewalks; buggies, carriages, carts and wagons blocked the streets, putting to the test the eye and rein of our experienced whip. A scene so novel called forth the query, "What means this?" "Millwood gave a concert tonight." It was enough; the riddle solved; the commencement week of Jackson had commenced. And he who has never passed through that week has much to learn, and, I may add, much to do.

The exercises at Centenary commenced on Monday night with a contest in the preparatory department for the medal for declamation, unless the sermon on Sunday, at eleven o'clock A. M., may be termed the opening exercise. Whether that be so or not, it was, Mr. Editor, a good sermon, full of common sense and practical, every-day religion. The Rev. J. T. Sawyer was fully equal to himself; and you know what that means—earnest, honest, plain and pointed—the gospel straight. Tuesday night the annual exhibition of the joint societies took place. A contest for the medal for oratory was engaged in by seven young men. The contest was spirited; the race even; the speeches good, and the prize awarded to F. R. Alexander, son of our worthy presiding elder of the Alexandria district. Then followed the address of the Rev. S. H. Werlein before these societies, which was one of research, finish and oratory. His subject was well handled, fully abreast with the spirit of the age, and was a treat to those who listened. Wednesday was commencement day, when the graduating class, five in number, received their diplomas; and these young gentlemen, thus equipped as scholars, men and citizens, took their places in the ranks of those who are to be the conservators of this great republic. And, if we are to judge from the speeches made, these young men will certainly be found on one side or the other of those vital questions which divide a nation's good, and will enact their part like men, with the pluck to maintain their side, whatever it may be.

The president, T. A. S. Adams, D. D., was in his best strain, and for one hour feelingly and wisely addressed the class, giving those admonitions which, if followed, would secure, or rather assure, success. But, alas! Mr. Editor, men are mortal, and those young men, like all others before them, must learn for themselves. No amount of admonition can keep one off the breakers. Each must sound his own channel, navigate the stream of life, and locate for himself the hidden rocks. There were many other speeches of varied kind and merit, but none more pertinent, more instructive, than that which was delivered by W. H. Goodale. It would be well for him to deliver that address in every college and school in the State. W. H. N. Mugruder, one of the oldest educators of the South, took the floor, and in appropriate terms thanked Mr. Goodale for the able defense he had made of the ancient languages as the most approved manner for training the minds of the young.

Centenary, upon the whole, is upon the up-grade, and, when all things are considered, has done well during the past year. The great want seems to be the lubricating substance of the age—money. Though the patronizing Conferences have largely increased their educational fund for this institution, yet there is urgent, present and pressing need to which these Conferences must be alive, and inaugurate some method by which to meet the necessities of this college. The buildings are sadly out of repair; and I know no place at which some rich Methodist could better place $25,000 than in the repairing of this college, for with this done—and it must be done—there is no reason why Centenary should not take a place in the front rank of Southern institutions of learning. Shall she do it? It remains for the patronizing Conferences to answer. Bishop Keener was in the chair of the Board of Trust, and with heart and brain planned for the good of the college for which he has so long and faithfully worked.

This report would be incomplete should I fail to acknowledge the hospitality extended by the citizens of Jackson. It was boundless; hearts, doors and pantries all thrown wide open—a princely hospitality that must be received to be appreciated.

Our home was at Millwood, the beautiful seminary of learning for young ladies, presided over by Miss M. R. McCalmont, assisted by Miss Cora Fishburn and Miss Redding—the former the instructor in mathematics, the latter in music and literature. If we are to judge from the commencement exercises of that institution, the pupils are well taught; and it is the place to send our daughters. If one week's stay gives any insight into the home-workings of Millwood, parents can rest satisfied that their daughters are safe, will be carefully watched and reared, trained in those home duties which make up the crown of womanhood. Five young ladies graduated from this school this year, whose essays displayed thorough instruction.

We left Millwood with regret, and will long remember our pleasant stay with the teachers and pupils of this institution.

BATON ROUGE, LA., June 7, 1887.

From St. Louis.

MR. EDITOR: This city is a study. East St. Louis is across the big bridge spanning the Mississippi river. West St. Louis lies west of Grand avenue, or 36th street, counting from the river. Market street is situated about midway the city, running east and west. North of this street is North St. Louis, and south of it is South St. Louis. I suppose there are many persons visiting the city who do not know any more about it than I did; and I thank anybody for information.

The thirtieth instant being Dedication Day, when the graves of the dead were to be visited and decorated, we were reminded that, according to a divine decree, in less than eight months we shall reach the terminus of our earthly pilgrimage; so we resolved to spend the day among the tombs that we might in some degree familiarize ourselves with the place for which human nature has such an aversion.

The Jefferson Barracks, where the National Cemetery for the United States soldiers is located, is nine miles below the city, on the Mississippi river. Trains left the city every fifteen or twenty minutes, giving excursion rates for the accommodation of the masses. We left the city at nine A. M., and remained at the Barracks till three P. M. The Barracks is situated on a bluff overlooking the Mississippi river, beautiful for situation. The cemetery is a mile in the rear, comprising twenty acres of elevated, undulating land, inclosed by a stone wall. The grounds are set with blue grass, beautifully shaded with maple and oak trees. The graves are marked and numbered with granite head-stones. According to a published programme, for the day, there are fourteen thousand soldiers interred in these grounds. The cemetery was located here in 1863. By three P. M. it was estimated that there were fifteen thousand persons on the grounds. This, doubtless, was guessed at, for no man could number them. I have not witnessed such a vast multitude of people and so much military parade since Gen. Zachary Taylor returned to New Orleans from the Mexican War with his brawny soldiers in 1847, where I heard Jeff Davis and that inimitable speaker, S. S. Prentis, deliver addresses of welcome to these soldiers. The Grand Army of the Republic here were out in full force, with a profusion of floral offerings made in honor of the dead. But not the tramp of the army, nor the martial music, nor the thundering cannon could move a single dead soldier from his slumbers. How sublime the Christian's faith that the voice of the Son of God in the great day of eternity shall call forth the nations of the dead, numbering ten hundred million human beings, continued through two hundred successive generations! To have a part in the first resurrection is what should concern us most.

We attended the Convention of the Southern branch of the Presbyterian Church, which has been in session in this city. They had some heated discussions on the question of organic union with their Northern brethren; but the prospects for such a union was not at all flattering. It was refreshing for us to meet with our friends—Bros. Harring, Linsey and Dr. Palmer—from Louisiana. On Sabbath we heard Dr. Palmer preach a grand gospel sermon, such as we only have the privilege of hearing once in a long while. At this church we looked in on a Chinese Sunday-school; strange sight to us! The pupils were grown copper-colored men, with features, hair and dress, in part at least, of a woman. Each pupil had a teacher. They seem mostly to be learning to read and spell. It is said they are very anxious to learn; that they are hungry for knowledge. The double motive they have for attending the Sunday-school is to get a knowledge of the Christian religion and learn the English language.

Last Sabbath I preached for a brother who was absent. When the time came, the superintendent of the Sunday-school said: "We will use the 'Gospel Hymns' to-day; we have more of them." I said, "Excuse me; I am too much of a Methodist not to use the standard hook in the pulpit." I hope to give no offense, but somebody must see to it that those frivolous songs are not to take the place of our substantial and far superior hymns. I was very much impressed with the request of Dr. McFerrin to have substantial Methodist hymns sung at his funeral. Is not that prophetic?

It may not be amiss to let you know how near I came getting into the church since I came here. My wife desired to put in her church letter, and, being a little timid, I went with her to the altar to give it to Dr. Matthews, the pastor. His clerk very naturally supposed that I wished also to join, and persisted in taking my name, but I insisted it was not me. Bishop Granbery said I might get into a worse place; but I can't afford to quit the Louisiana Conference to join anything below the skies.

Notes.

A writer in the Christian at Work uses these strong words: "There are very few comparatively powerful Christ-preaching ministers in the pulpit. But there are sermons enough delivered every Sunday, brim-full of harmless abstractions and decked in dainty rhetoric, to fill the world's bookcases. When shall we change all this? When we have an earthquake of some sort or a new Sinai is set on fire by the touch of God's finger." We do not believe that these words are applicable to preachers in the South. We are sure they do not apply to Southern Methodist preachers. Here is a straw that shows the difference in regard to the results of preaching in the Southern and Northern Methodist Churches last year: In the Southern Methodist Church, with 4,400 preachers, the net gain in membership was 75,000. In the Northern Methodist Church, with 14,000 preachers, the net gain in membership was a little over 100,000. The average of seven members to each preacher in the one church, and of seventeen to each preacher in the other church, shows some difference in the preaching. We believe the Southern preachers, as a body, preach a true gospel and are loyal to Christ.

The Methodist Times, of London, shares in the general opinion of the church press of this country as to a general awakening and revival of religion among us. In regard to the Wesleyans, the Times says: "A few years ago there was a great deal of coldness in English Methodism. Of late there have been emphatic signs that our hearts are growing warm again. The old Methodist fire is beginning to glow once more. The spiritual life of our churches is being deepened. We are certain that the tide has turned and is flowing freely. We shall soon be in the midst of a widespread revival of Christ-like Christianity; and then we shall hear no more loud laments from the mission fields; then the treasury will be filled to overflowing; then men and women will go forth in unprecedented multitudes to proclaim in every land the evangel of the love of God." May such a spirit more and more dominate every church on the earth? When will the Christian people learn that God meant what he said, when he said: "Go up and possess the land"?

Dr. John S. Martin, of the Baltimore Conference, in a communication to the Episcopal Methodist, concerning the "assessments" made upon the Conferences by the Board of Missions, has made some good remarks about the "inequality of that assessment." The "inequality" does not work alone against the Baltimore Conference. The assessment upon that Conference this year, according to Dr. Martin, is thirty-six cents per member. The assessment upon the Louisiana Conference this year is forty-six cents per member! This is not too much for us; but it is about ten cents more per member than is assessed to Baltimore, and twenty-three cents more than is assessed to North Carolina, and eighteen cents more than is assessed to North Georgia. Our people are abundantly able to meet this assessment. Indeed, we are able to treble that amount, and we would do it, if we had the right sort of training. We have "rung the changes" on a free gospel so long and energetically that many of our people are trying to make the trip to heaven on a free ticket. There is not a pastor in the church who can not count scores of deadheads in his ship.

The Southern Christian Advocate has a timely editorial on "Pulpit Profanity." There is nothing so offensive to correct taste and good manners and sincere piety as this sort of profanity. The "gentle, loving spirit of the gospel" is not in it. When a man's "power lies in the coarseness of his remarks and his indecent abuse of the sinner," it is time for that man to look up the sources of that power. As a warning to our young brethren, Editor Kirkland says:

Under the lead of certain evangelists, this is fast getting to be the popular style among some of our young preachers. It is for their sakes chiefly that we write so plainly and yet so earnestly. The first qualification for a successful ministry, aside from personal piety, is good breeding. A gospel minister should always be the gentleman. Whenever he forgets this, he dishonors God and disgraces his high and holy calling.

The Holston Methodist, in an article on "Prohibition and Politics," has these wise words on the origin of prohibition:

It did not originate with political leaders of either or both parties. In fact, as a rule, the political leaders of both parties are standing aloof from it, just as they do from every new issue, not manifestly of a partisan political character, until they see which way the majority is going. This is lucky for the cause of prohibition, and it is hoped that these distinguished gentlemen, whom we have been accustomed to follow with so much enthusiasm, will remain quiet and let the people, with whom this movement originated, settle the question according to their sense of right and propriety, and without any appeal to their political prejudices or passions. We want a dispassionate appeal to the reason and moral sense of the people.

Personals.

Prof. Max Muller, of Liepsic University, has forty-two titles and honorary suffixes to his name.

Rev. Cory W. Trawick, a recent graduate of the Southwestern Presbyterian University, has been called to the pastorate of the Canal Street Presbyterian Church, in this city. His father was at one time pastor of the same church.

The Christian Observer states that Dr. Ted. Witherspoon, of Louisville, Ky., declines to accept the Perkins Professorship in Columbia Seminary.

Rev. S. F. Smith, author of "My country, 'tis of thee," has lately celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday, and is in vigorous health.

Dr. Daniel Dorchester is about to publish a book called, "The Why of Methodism."

We see it stated that a son of Rev. A. W. Burke, of the South Georgia Conference, has been appointed a missionary to China. The Lord of the harvest is still sending forth laborers.

A writer in the Churchman, New York, suggests that some gifted lady or gentleman write a missionary hymn, based on Luke x, 1, and having for its refrain, "Whither he himself would come."

John Wanamaker's autobiography has been given to the public. It is printed in golden letters, and here it is: "Thinking, trying, toiling, trusting in God—that is all of my biography."

Rev. W. F. Adams, of Vicksburg, formerly Bishop of New Mexico, has been elected to the bishopric of Easton, Md. This is the seventh election to fill that vacancy.

Rev. Thomas B. Newby, who was transferred from this city to Missouri by Bishop Parker, several years ago, died May 14, in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dr. Fitzgerald, at the request of the family of Dr. McFerrin, has consented to prepare a "Life of Dr. McFerrin."

"The Life of Dr. Wm. Morley Punshon," prepared by Rev. N. Macdonald, has been published by Hodder and Stoughton, London.

Rev. William Arthur, the Wesleyan author, has delivered a lecture in London, on "Space and Time," as proofs of an intelligent Creator, which lecture is regarded by some critics as a distinct epoch in the history of Christian philosophy.

Bro. B. F. Jones, of Woodville, Miss., reports his charge in good condition and growing spiritually. He has received twenty new members to date.

The reader is respectfully requested to send to this office a list of what he considers the ten best hymns in the English language.

Bro. T. Y. Armstrong reports good rains, the crops and excellent health among his people in Jasper county, Miss.

Rev. W. W. Bennett, D. D., of the Virginia Conference, died at his home, in Louisa county, Va., on the ninth instant. Dr. Bennett was sixty-six years old, and had been in the ministry forty-five years. He was at one time editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, and for several years president of Randolph-Macon College, and author of a "History of Methodism in Virginia." He has been in low health for several years. He occupied a high place in the church, and was ever devoted to her interests. One by one the fathers pass away.

The Baltimore Conference, at its last session, passed this resolution:

Resolved, That on the last Sabbath in May special prayer be made in all our churches that the "Lord of the harvest send forth more laborers into his vineyard;" and, further, that we use every proper effort to encourage young men of promise and piety who may be called of the Lord to enter the ministry of our church.

This is a good move. Our Savior's injunction is: "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth more laborers into his harvest." It may be there is too little praying for this object. The church needs more laborers. The world needs more laborers for its good. In our church last year, according to the General Minutes, there was an increase of only 107 traveling preachers, and forty-six local preachers. One hundred and fifty-three preachers, out of a church of over one million members, shows that we need to obey the Savior's injunction, and pray for an increase of preachers to cultivate the Lord's vineyard. We trust that the Baltimore Conference will see a large increase to their ministry as the result of their services and prayers on the last Sabbath in May.

A Generous Offer.

A company of gentlemen in Atlanta, Ga., authorize the president of Hiwassee College, Tenn., to draw on their treasurer quarterly for the tuition fees of twenty-two students, provided they are the sons of soldiers (Union or Confederate), and also that they are dependent on their own exertions to obtain an education. Persons knowing such young men or boys will confer favor by putting them in communication with the college. See advertisement in another column.

Gleanings.

The Christian at Work: "It is to be feared that a good many unpaid promises on church building and other benevolent work will confront the promisors at the judgment day, when all promises mature and have to be redeemed some way."

After reading this, we began to wonder if the unpaid promises of stewards to their pastors will be called up for settlement at that time also, and how the settlement will be effected to the advantage of the stewards!

Rev. Dr. H. D. Jenkins: "I venture to say that my children have, in spite of my vigilance, read more slang and veiled profanity in their Sunday-school books than they have ever heard in real life in all their days."

What a terrible arraignment of Sunday-school authorities that is! Whether overstated or not, our pastors and Sunday-school superintendents need to keep a never-ceasing vigilance upon the contents of their libraries.

The Examiner: "A Christian man could have no nobler aim than to become the author of a hymn which would so felicitously express some deep Christian feeling or some profound Christian truth, that the world, once having heard it, would not willingly let it die."

We have heard one of our Bishops say that he would give $1,000 to be able to write a genuine hymn.

The Jewish Messenger: "We realize keenly that the best men are, to a large degree, powerless in politics—the cultured, the benevolent, the scholarly, the honest tradesman or mechanic, are outvoted or outgeneralled, partly through their own timidity, it is true, but they are outvoted for all that."

Politics will hardly be purified while the classes named in the foregoing sentence suffer their "timidity" to dominate their course at the ballot-box.

The Congregationalist: "What a rebuke to this nation, receiving millions of dollars annually from its revenue on liquors, is conveyed by the Queen of Madagascar when she says, in a late proclamation, 'I can not consent, as your Queen, to take a single penny of revenue from that which destroys the souls and bodies of my subjects.'"

Revenue on destroyed souls is pretty strong from one so lately emerged from barbarism. It shows that there is one government on earth which has a conscience about the matter of revenue.

On the subject of "Gossip," Bishop F. D. Huntington, of Western New York, in a lecture to some school-girls in Syracuse, is said to have put forth this:

I say to you, weighing my own words, that you would be less depraved, less savage, would less disgrace your womanhood, would be less a curse to your kind, and, if God is rightly revealed to us in his Word and his Son, would less offend him, by going to see dogs tight in their kennels at the Five Points, or bulls gore horses in Spain, than by putting on your bonnet and gloves and going from house to house in your neighborhood, assailing absent acquaintances, dribbling calumny, sowing suspicion, planting and watering wretchedness, stabbing character, alienating friends by repeating to one the detraction that you "heard" another has spoken. I believe that before the judgment-seat of Christ, the prize-fighting man will stand no worse than the slanderously gossiping woman.

Temperance Notes.

The Legislature of Pennsylvania has passed a high license bill, fixing the licenses in cities of 80,000 population and over at $500; in smaller towns at $100; in boroughs at $200, and in townships at $100. Under the law four-fifths of the revenue goes to the local treasury and one-fifth to the State.

The following from J. D. Davis, D. D., of Japan, proves that the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union is needed in all missionary lands:

Mrs. Leavitt, who was here in the interest of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union during last summer and fall, did a grand work in interesting the women and many of the leading men of Japan in the cause, not only of temperance, but of purity and of the elevation of women generally. One of our leading Japanese workers said to me the other day that Mrs. Leavitt was a second Commodore Perry to the women of Japan.

There is no abatement in the efforts of the police to prevent the sale of liquor in New York City on Sunday. The Tribune, of May 16, says: "The enforcement of the law here was even stricter than last Sunday. In the Nineteenth Precinct, where the large hotels are and in which there are many daring grog-shop proprietors, only a single arrest was made. Capt. Williams said that he did not believe a drink was sold in his jurisdiction, and those who attempted to get one will probably agree with him. At the hotels the proprietors were as determined as ever to abide by the opinion furnished by Corporation Counsel Lacombe, and under no circumstances would they serve wine or liquors to their guests. To avoid the least chance of suspicion many of them refused to allow even mineral waters to be taken from the storeroom."

Cornelius Vanderbilt is an uncompromising total abstinence man. A row of stores is to be built this summer opposite the Grand Central depot, and Vanderbilt has provided in the deeds for perpetual prohibition of the liquor traffic as far as those 200 feet of store front are concerned. He says that he would like to have the sale of intoxicants within an eighth of a mile of the railroad station prohibited by law.

Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, the well-known leader of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in the South, writes to Miss Willard as follows:

I sat behind two ruminies who were discussing prohibition on the train yesterday, and one informed the other that the most they had to fear was the weakening of the right wing of their army, the high license Christian men; for, he said, the Christians hold the balance of power, and if they withdraw their support, the traffic is gone. Is it not a dreadful thought that this traffic in souls is unwittingly kept up by professing Christians?"

The convention of the United States Brewers' Association have appropriated $5,000 for the assistance of the brewers of Michigan; $5,000 for the brewers of Texas, and $3,000 for the brewers of Tennessee, the money to be used in defeating the efforts of the prohibitionists in those States. The sum of $9,000 was also appropriated to the use of the Publication Committee. On motion of Henry Clausen, Jr., of New York, an extra assessment equal to one year's dues was agreed upon to enable the Board of Trustees to fight the temperance fanatics in various sections of the country.

Money and dynamite and pistols are the weapons; but the growing sentiment of the country will defeat them at the ballot-box.

ROOMS STATE PROHIBITION EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Brookhaven, Miss., June 1, 1887.

A State Convention of the prohibitionists of Mississippi is hereby called to meet in the city of Jackson, on Thursday, July 21, 1887. Each county of the State will be entitled to twice the number of delegates in the convention that it has Representatives in the lower branch of the Legislature. It is hoped and urged that every county in the State will be represented, and the heads of all county organizations are requested to call meetings for this purpose. Wonderful progress has crowned our effort since our last annual gathering, and the success of our cause hitherto is an inspiration for still grander achievements. The watchword must still be, "Forward." Effort will be made to secure reduced rates over all State railroads, and the result will be published in due season.

CHAS. D. GALLOWAY, Chairman.
H. T. HOBBS, Secretary.

Seashore Camp Meeting Excursion.

The arrangements for an excursion on the Illinois Central, and Louisville and Nashville railroads, from Yazoo City to the Seashore Camp Meeting, under the auspices and for the benefit of the Hazlehurst Lodge No. 25, F. A. M., of Hazlehurst, Miss., are now complete. Persons wishing to enjoy a religious feast, together with a rest and recreation for a few weeks, on this delightful sea coast, should avail themselves of this advantageous opportunity.

For further particulars see advertisement in another column of this paper.

The crop reports from all parts of Mississippi and Louisiana show that the prospect for a large harvest of the various products is very good indeed. Let the Christian farmers show their gratitude to the Lord of the harvest by planning larger schemes and giving larger sums for the spread of his religion among men.

Louisiana Notes.

The Secretary of State has commissioned the municipal officers recently elected in the towns of Bastrop, Clinton, Lake Charles, and New Iberia.

Keachi College graduated twelve pupils last week.

Persons living upon lands belonging to the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific Railroad Company are said to be in danger of losing their homes if they do not close contracts with the railroad company before July 1, next.

A destructive hail-storm swept over the bayou section of Avoyelles parish, last week. In the vicinity of Bunkie and Evergreen the storm was particularly severe, and the damage to the crops very serious.

West Melville, on the Texas and Pacific railroad, cleans and ships daily, on ice, to various parts of Texas, from 1,200 to 1,500 pounds of fresh fish.

A stock company, headed by Dr. J. F. Morris, has been formed at Rayne to erect a rice mill at that place.

Alfalfa grass is being introduced into Grant parish.

The Lake Charles Echo says: "It is a settled fact that the people of Lake Charles can now secure the location of a school of high grade."

New Iberia is to have a high school. The crops in that section of the country are good, and the promise of a rich harvest has not been better since the war.

The directors of the Shreveport Charity Hospital have closed a contract with Mr. L. A. Parisher for the construction of a new hospital, the site situated on Texas avenue, not far from the street car depot. The building will cost from $12,000 to 15,000, and have accommodations for 100 patients. It is to be two stories in height and have four towers, and is to be provided with all the modern conveniences.

Messrs. Hannon and Voss, of Baton Rouge, were awarded the contract to build the court-house at Crowley, to cost $11,000; work to begin immediately.

Mississippi Notes.

Jackson, Meridian and Vicksburg will have the free delivery mail system after July 1.

The Natchez Cotton Mills will resume work about the first of August.

The election in Yazoo City for and against lighting the city with electric lights resulted in a majority of twenty in favor of the lights. The stock for the warehouse has all been subscribed. The building will cost $10,000, and will have a storage capacity for 10,000 bales of cotton.

The State Prohibition Committee meets in Jackson, July 21.

Commencement week at Whitworth College, Brookhaven, begins June 19.

Aberdeen will issue her ten-year six per cent. bonds to aid in constructing a branch road connection with the K. C., M. and M. R. R.

The Methodist Church, at Kosciusko, belonging to the colored people, was burned last week.

The University of Mississippi will inaugurate its commencement, Sunday, June 26, with a sermon by Rev. A. G. Haygood, D. D.

The last beer license in Meridian expired Wednesday last. The sales of the saloon in beer and ale since January 1 amounted to 35,000 gallons, yielding gross revenue of $27,300.—Clarion.

The compress at Holly Springs will soon be completed.

The Crystal Springs Camp Meeting will begin July 15, and continue one week.

Bids will be opened, July 1, by State Treasurer Hemingway, for the purchase of one hundred thousand Mississippi six per cent. bonds.

We call attention to the program of exercises for the approaching commencement at Whitworth Female College. The exercises open on Sunday, June 19, with a sermon by Mississippi's great preacher, Dr. J. J. Wheat, of Oxford. In the evening of same day an address to the Young Ladies' Christian Association by Bishop Galloway. On Monday the graduating essays will be delivered. On Tuesday the annual address will be given by Gov. Taylor, of Tennessee; and the address to the Alumnæ Association by Hon. E. Burksdale, of Mississippi. This program is a promise of a brilliant entertainment to all who attend the exercises.

"Life and Labors of William H. Watkins, D. D.," will be sent to any address as a premium for two new subscribers accompanied by the cash, or for four renewals with cash.

A tussle with a boarding-house steak is now called a "bull fight."

IMMENSE BARGAINS.—The great piano dealer, Philip Werlein, 135 Canal St., is now offering some of the greatest bargains in pianos and organs. This popular merchant means business, and he has put prices of pianos and organs down so low as to put them within the reach of all. You will be astonished to see what money can be saved by dealing at this popular house. Indeed, it is a source of pleasure to have dealings with such a house as that of Philip Werlein. Now, that the prices have been reduced, and terms offered are so convenient, every one will avail himself of the opportunity. Write to Mr. Werlein for catalogues and prices.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE—THIRTY-THIRD ANNUAL SESSION.

The fall term will begin on Wednesday, September 15, 1886, with a full corps of excellent teachers and increased facilities for instruction. Rates of board and tuition without music, one hundred and seventy-five dollars; with music, two hundred and thirty-five dollars. Payments, one-half in advance, balance at the end of session; or in similar proportion. If the entire bills for the year be paid in advance, ten per cent. will be deducted. Two or more pupils from one family will receive a discount of ten per cent.

Four pupils occupying a room together by the year will be allowed a discount of fifteen per cent.

Members of the Louisiana Conference shall receive board at the regular rates, and tuition in both literary and music department free of charge.

Special vocal training is not included in the regular lessons for music, but will be charged as an additional course in music.

In making engagements for the year, a club of four young ladies who wish to pay all in advance will receive board, tuition and one course in music for $156 25—a discount of twenty-five per cent. from the catalogue price; or by paying one-half in advance, they will be entitled to the same for $200.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

Dyspepsia Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Rheumatism Is undoubtedly a blood disease caused by an excess of the lactic acid in the blood. Where there is perfect filtration of the blood there can be no rheumatism. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA will remove the poison, supply the acids and relieve the pains.

Scrofula Is caused directly by impurities in the blood, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, by purifying the blood, forces the impurities from the system.

Kidneys Through the Kidneys flow the waste fluid containing poisonous matter. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing pain in the small of the back and loins, flushes of heat, chills. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic, causing the kidneys to resume their natural functions.

The Liver Irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions. The bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood resolvent.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country, but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and grown persons are most frequently the result of these hidden sanguinary influences. When they are restless and feverish, sometimes having food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been erroneously considered, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children—cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Every mother should be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in the sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.

Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.

Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAREDIGE, MD.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. H. HANDY, M. D.

Our Young People.

LOST—A BOY.

BY EBEN E. REXFORD.

He went from the old home hearthstone,
Only two years ago,
A laughing and rollicking fellow
"Twould have done you good to know:
Since then we have never seen him,
And we say with a nameless pain,
"The boy we knew and loved so,
We never shall see again."

One bearing the name we gave him,
Came home to us to-day;
But he can not keep us from missing
The lad who went away.
Tell us the man he calls father,
With a man's look in his face,
Is he who takes by the hearthstone
The lost boy's name and place.

We miss the laugh that made music
Wherever the lost boy went;
This man has a smile that is winsome,
And his eyes a grave intent.
We know he is thinking and planning
His way in the world of men;
And we can not help but love him,
Though we long for our boy again.

Yes, we're proud of this manly fellow
Who comes to take his place,
With hints of the vanished boy-hood
In his earnest, thoughtful face;
And yet comes back the longing
For the boy we shall always miss,
Whom we sent away from the hearthstone
Forever, with a kiss.

—Golden Days.

The editor wonders if the little cousins are engaged in mission work. This is a good way to prepare our hearts to receive the blessings of religion. If we give to help the Lord's cause, the Lord will give us happy hearts. The following letter, copied from a paper which comes every week to our office, will show our little cousins in the country how they can raise money for the missions. Who of the little cousins will try this plan? We must do something for the Lord or he will not own us as his disciples.

A few days ago, two little children came to me from four miles away with $1 25 each, which they had earned themselves, and which they wanted to give for missions. Their consecrated mother has taught them in early life to love the missionary cause. They know more to-day about our foreign work than many adult Christians do. I enclose the identical letters which came to me with their contributions. These letters are printed by the children themselves, and we publish them just as they are printed:

My mission money I want it to go to China.
$1 25. ZETNIE L. BOWER. I am six.

My missionary chicken-money I want it to go to Japan.
$1 25. MILDRED BOWEN. Five years old.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old, and have never written in any paper; so I will write in your paper first. I have commenced to read the Bible through, and have succeeded as far as Exodus. Our preacher for this year is Bro. D. F. Guice, and we like him very much. The preacher last year for our church was Bro. M. L. Burton. My Sunday-school teacher is Mrs. Betty Beacham, and she is very strict on us about getting our Sunday-school lessons. I have been going to school this winter to my cousin, Mr. Edgar Green. I have a little cousin by the name of Allie Ainsworth. She is two years old. She is very sweet. She can count six, and say to "E" in the alphabet. I am on a visit to my uncle, Galveston Ainsworth, who lives nine miles west of Beauregard. He has a large pond out in front of the house, and it is very pretty. I will answer your question in last issue: Which is the shortest verse in the Bible? It is "Jesus wept." And I want to ask a question: Who was the beloved disciple?

LOUISE AINSWORTH.

AINSWORTH, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As it has been some time since I wrote to the ADVOCATE, I will write again. I am always glad to read the letters from the little cousins. I am going to school every day. I board ten miles from home, and go home every Friday. We have a nice time when I go home on Saturdays, fishing. My papa is a farmer, and he says we are needing rain badly. He says if we we do not get it, the crops—corn especially—will be a failure. One man in our neighborhood has been having meetings to pray for rain. He notified all the people around him to come, and some of them went. I think he got rain yesterday from the looks of the clouds in the direction of his house. To-day is the anniversary of the cyclone of '83, in Beauregard. I live near there, and I always think of it. Claudia L. Chaney, "Claudia" is found in II Timothy iv, 21. Nina Reames, the sin of Judah was written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond. With best wishes for the little cousins, I am,

JNO. R. MATTHEWS.

WESSON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl thirteen years of age. I have never written a letter to your good paper before; but, seeing so many letters from the little folks, I thought I would write one also. Mamma takes the dear ADVOCATE, and I look forward to it every Thursday. I am going to public school; my teacher's name is Mr. Ellis, and I like him very much because he is so good and kind to us. I joined the church when ten years of age. I regret to say that we have no minister this year, and no prospect of one. As this is my first letter to the ADVOCATE, I hope to see it in print. Wishing your dear paper much success, I remain,

Your friend,

NANNIE MOODY.

THERVILLE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl twelve years old. I am not going to school now. But my grown sister teaches me and my younger sister at home. I also have three little brothers. We expect our Sunday-school will begin next Sunday. Father takes the good old ADVOCATE, and I enjoy reading the little folks' letters so much. Bro. R. A. Burroughs is our pastor. He preaches once a month at our church. We like him very much. I will answer Marvin P. Rodgers' question: What king was a shoulder taller than all the other people? It was Saul. It is found in I Samuel x, 23. I will ask a question: Where in the Bible is the word "fox" found? I remain,

Your little friend,

SALLIE A. TURNER.

CARROLLTON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am just eleven years old. I am not a member of Sunday-school, as it is too far for me to walk. I belong to a temperance meeting called the "Band of Hope," which meets only once a month. I will answer Cornelius Allen's question: "Looking-glass" is found in Exodus xxxviii, 8. I want to ask the little cousins of what material the looking-glasses were made. With many kind wishes for the ADVOCATE, I am,

Your little friend,

F. PELHAM HAYNES.

JACKSON, Louisiana.

The Old Silver Spoon.

How fresh in my mind are the days of my sickness,
When I tossed me in pain, all fevered and sore;
The hunting, the nausea, the sinking, the weakness,
And even the old spoon that my medicine bore.
The old silver spoon, the family spoon,
The sick-chamber spoon that my medicine bore.

How both were my fever-parched lips to receive it,
How nauseous the stuff that it bore to my tongue,
And the pain at my inwards, oh! naught could relieve it,
Though tears of disgust from my eyeballs it wrung.
The cold silver spoon, the medicine spoon,
How awful the stuff that it left on my tongue.

Such is the effect of nauseous, griping medicines which make the sick-room a memory of horror. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, on the contrary, are small, sugar-coated, easy to take, purely vegetable and perfectly effective. 25 cents a vial.

BOY'S LEISURE HOURS.—A boy was employed in a lawyer's office, and he had the daily paper to amuse himself with. He began to study French, and at the little desk became a fluent reader and writer of the French language. He accomplished this by laying aside the newspaper and taking something not so amusing, but far more profitable.

A coachman was often obliged to wait long hours while his mistress made calls. He determined to improve the time. He found a small volume containing the Eclogues of Virgil, but could not read, so he purchased a Latin grammar. Day by day he studied this, and finally mastered its intricacies. His mistress came behind him one day as he stood by the horses waiting for her, and asked him what he "was" so "intently" reading. "Only a bit of 'Virgil,' my lady." She mentioned this to her husband, who insisted that David should have a teacher to instruct him. In a few years David became a learned man, and was for many years a useful and beloved minister of Scotland.

A boy was told to open and shut the gates to let the teams out of an iron mine. He sat on a log all day by the side of the gate. Sometimes an hour would pass before the teams came, and this he employed so well that there was scarcely any fact in history that escaped his attention. He began with a little book on English history that he found on the road. Having learned that thoroughly, he borrowed of a minister "Goldsmith's History of Greece." This good man became greatly interested in him, and lent him books, and was often seen sitting by him on the log, conversing with him about the people of ancient times. Boys, it will pay to use your leisure hours well.

Farm and Home.

SLEEP.—I do not think a person should be waked at morning—and for this reason; when a man falls asleep, he is in the shop for repairs, as the railroad men say. His frame and all its intricate machinery are being overhauled and made ready for the next day's work. The wear of the previous day is being repaired. Nature is doing that herself. She knows what the tired frame needs, just as she knows how to make the heart throb and send the blood coursing through the veins. Then she takes the tired frame, lays it down on a bed, surrounds it with the refreshing air of night, covers it with the soft darkness and lets the man rest. "Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," visits him, and as the hours wear by, his energies are renewed, his strength comes back, and finally, when morning breaks and the sunlight steals through the lattice, he opens his eyes, and is himself again. Or if he is early to bed, he awakes with the cock's crowing. Now, who shall go to that man's side, an hour before he opens his eyes, and say to nature, "Stand aside and let him get up. He has had enough of rest." Well, nature will say, "You can take him if you will, but I will charge him with an hour's loss of sleep and I'll collect out of his bones and nerves and his hairs and eyesight. You can't cheat me; I'll find property to levy on."

KEEPING ACCOUNTS.—If, madam, you keep household accounts, be honest with them; put down everything you spend. If you find you are spending more than you can afford, face the thing boldly, and at once try to discover where the fault is. Do not trust to next week or next month; begin immediately to retrench. In this, as in most other work, it is towards the middle one begins to get weary and disheartened. Accounts for the first month or two of the year are sure to be well kept, and so very probably will be the last three. See that the middle months are treated in the same way, and that your account book for that period does not present a painfully new appearance, with only a solitary entry here and there. Neglected accounts lose at once their interest and value. Make account-keeping a daily duty, honestly performed; it will soon turn into pleasure.

WASHING FLANNELS.—Wash flannels, especially if white, in clean soap-suds, using plenty of the soap. Then put them in a suitable vessel, cover well with almost boiling water, and let them stand until they are only cool enough to be wrung out with the hands. Do not let them get cool, as cold water shrinks flannels quicker than anything else. Some make a weak soap-suds to rinse in; but I think the lye in the soap helps to shrink the goods, and, therefore, merely use plenty of clear hot water for rinsing.—Cor. Prairie Farmer.

Let the bill of fare be varied from day to day. When you get hold of a good recipe put it in a scrap book, which should be kept in every kitchen. In a short time you will have a large number of recipes which you can rely on, and reference to this will suggest variations in the food. Never admit anything but a tested and reliable recipe. Every kitchen should have a set of measures and scales for use in making cakes and other articles which must be compounded carefully and accurately as regards proportions.

Luxuriant Hair

Can only be preserved by keeping the scalp clean, cool, and free from dandruff, and the body in a healthful condition. The great popularity of Ayer's Hair Vigor is due to the fact that it cleanses the scalp, promotes the growth of the hair, prevents it from falling out, and gives it that soft and silky gloss so essential to perfect beauty.

Frederick Hardy, of Roxbury, Mass., a gentleman fifty years of age, was fast losing his hair, and what remained was growing gray. After trying various dressings with no effect, he commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "It stopped the falling out," he writes; "and, to my great surprise, restored my white hair (without staining the scalp) to the same shade of brown it had when I was 25 years of age."

Ten Years Younger.

Mrs. Mary Montgomery, of Boston, writes: "For years, I was compelled to wear a dress cap to conceal a bald spot on the crown of my head; but now I gladly lay the cap aside, for your Hair Vigor is bringing out a new growth. I could hardly trust my senses when I first found my hair growing; but there it is, and I am delighted. I look ten years younger."

A similar result attended the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor by Mrs. O. O. Prescott, of Charlestown, Mass., Miss Bessie H. Bedlor, of Burlington, Vt., Mrs. J. J. Burton, of Bangor, Me., and numerous others.

The loss of hair may be owing to impurity of the blood or derangement of the stomach and liver, in which case, a course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla or of Ayer's Pills, in connection with the Vigor, may be necessary to give health and tone to all the functions of the body. At the same time, it cannot be too strongly urged that none of these remedies can do much good without a persevering trial and strict attention to cleanly and temperate habits.

GRIFFING—MAMIE GRIFFING, a fair and sweet girl of fourteen years, was taken from all who loved her and from all she loved on earth, after a brief illness, terminating on the morning of May 24, 1887. Gentle, amiable, studious, intelligent, affectionate, obedient and pious, she was such a daughter as a mother would be apt to idolize. The fatal nature of her disease was from the first apparent to all but those whose love for her would, had it been possible, have conquered death itself and made her live forever here. Her mind was clear and her faith in Christ unswerving to the last. She was entirely willing to die, regretting only her mother's lonely sorrow when she should be gone.

A widowed mother's only child, a favorite with her schoolmates and teachers, and greatly beloved by a large circle of relations and friends—our grief at her departure is only mitigated by the thought that heaven is enriched by her entrance there. Fort Gibson Female College must count some jewels in heaven as well as many on earth. At such a time the pall of despair would overshadow all our hearts, were it not for the light that Jesus sheds upon the dying-beds of all who die in his love. These things the angels desire to look into, and they, being sent forth to minister unto those who shall be heirs of salvation, will surely not desert them in death, but must bear them company on their departure hence and convey them safely to a better home above!

HARPER—Died, in Simpson county, Miss., May 3, 1887, MRS. LYDIA E. HARPER, who was the daughter of Paul and Mary Jones, and was born in Gates county, N. C., March 13, 1833. She came to Mississippi in 1838 or 1839; was happily married to Mr. George P. Harper, 1851. They raised several promising and interesting children—all of whom are church members, except two or three of the smaller ones. Her pious, motherly influence left its impress, and we expect the children to follow on in the heavenly road.

She joined the church and professed religion in her girlhood. For a great many years the family's membership has been at Gum Springs Church, where they were among the most prominent and useful. Sister Harper always seemed to me to be deeply interested in the welfare of the church, and manifested it by her presence at preaching, in her preparations to help sustain the meetings and in her delight in having the preachers visit their home. But she has gone to the home of the good in heaven to enjoy the eternal reward of the dually faithful. May God bless the bereaved ones in this sad and trying hour!

C. M'DONALD.

SISSON—MRS. AMANDA ATKINS SISSON, wife of James E. Sisson, of Prairie Mer Rouge, Morehouse parish, La., was born May 10, 1836, and died at her home, May 12, 1887. Sister Sisson was a member of the Baptist Church; but, being separated from the church of her choice by a distance too great for her to attend, she worshiped with the Methodists of which church her husband was a member. I first knew Sister Sisson in the year 1881. I have never found a more consistent and conscientious Christian. She was true to her profession, and by her life preached righteousness. No one doubted her religion. She leaves a holy influence behind, which will live on to work good in the world. She was sick but a few days, suffering greatly from bronchitis and pneumonia. Being of a weak constitution, she soon passed away; but, oh! the passing away was but the passing out into the enjoyment of endless days, of eternal life, for she was perfectly resigned to depart and be with Jesus. Her only regret at leaving was that so many of her children were out of the church, and unsaved.

COONS—Death has invaded the family of the Rev. Rufus W. Coons, of the North Alabama Conference, and taken away his bright, promising son, BOLANIO, who was born in Bristow's Cove, Etawah county, Ala., September 13, 1871. His affectionate step-mother writes us that he had a violent attack of measles from which he came very near dying, but got up and was out of bed two weeks, when he took dysentery which carried him off in five days. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Liberty Church in 1883, while his father was on the Pinkneyville circuit. Boland was a good boy—a great comfort to his parents, and a consistent church member. He died May 16, 1887; was buried on the seventeenth by the parishioners of Bro. Coons; he himself at home sick, and also the youngest child. The wife and mother had to stay at home with the sick. Only three of the children and the brethren attended, and gave him Christian burial. May God bless such laymen! My heart is in responsive sadness to those of Bro. and Sister Coons.

JNO. H. STEVENSON.

ARBURTHNOT—Died at his residence in St. Helena parish, La., Mr. A. W. ARBURTHNOT, after a short illness of less than a week of that fearful disease, pneumonia. Years ago he gave himself to God, confessing his need of Christ, by baptism, and before his death was successful, as we trust, in asking pardon, and obtaining the same, for all offenses to God, and thus died in hope of a glorious resurrection.

He leaves a helpless family, together with an aged widowed mother and dependent sisters, who not only are strongly in need of the prayers and sympathies of God's people, but their substantial help. May God open up a way for the bereaved ones and bring them all together as an unbroken family around the throne above!

J. W. ELLISON, Pastor.

NEWSOM—MRS. CORNELIA NEWSOM, wife of Henry M. Newsom, of St. Helena parish, La., died May 14, 1887, after a painful illness. She gave herself to God a short time before her death, and at the same time dedicated her children to God in covenant relation by baptism. After mother and children were given to God, she, with tearful eyes, looked inquiringly at her husband, as if to say, "Will you join in with us?" when he fell upon his knees at her bedside, bathed in tears, and answered, "Yes."

Sister Newsom was a great sufferer. But God has taken her from these sufferings "to mansions above the sky." May the Father's mercy bring the whole family together on the other shore, when tears and partings will be no more!

J. W. ELLISON, Pastor.

DR. THOLUCK'S PREACHING.—A brief outline of a sermon will explain his method. The first sentence of the sermon we select contains the thought considered in the introduction, and is as follows: "Brethren in Christ, what a beautiful characteristic is it of our faith, that it is so simple in itself, and begets in us a like simplicity." After briefly considering this thought he announces his text: "Verily, I say unto you, except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of Heaven." This is followed immediately by the subject, which is thus announced: "The Christian life is a glorified childhood: such is the truth that these words teach us." After explaining the subject the divisions are announced and discussed. The Christian life is viewed as a glorified childhood in faith, in love, in hope. At the close he appeals to the impenitent, and then adds these words: "Who will wonder then if Christians are a joyous people as children are? How much rather ought we to be astonished at ourselves, if we are still sad! The Christian life is a transfigured childhood: like children, we believe without suspicion: like children, we love without distinction: like children, we hope without limitation; and together with this has the Spirit of grace given to our faith, light; to our love, wisdom; and to our hope, an everlasting foundation. Honor—and praise—and worship be unto him who hath done such great things for us. Amen."

—Luth. Evan.

"Don't Marry Him!"

"He is such a fickle, inconstant fellow, you will never be happy with him," said Esther's friends when they learned of her engagement to a young man who bore the reputation of being a sad flirt. Esther, however, knew that her lover had some good qualities, and she was willing to take the risk. In nine cases out of ten it would have proved a mistake; but Esther was an uncommon girl, and to every one's surprise Fred made a model husband. How was it? Well, Esther had a cheerful, sunny temper and a great deal of tact. Then she enjoyed perfect health and was always so sweet, neat and wholesome that Fred found his own home most pleasant, and his own wife more agreeable than any other being. As the years passed and he saw other women of Esther's age grow sickly, faded and querulous, he realized more and more that he had "a jewel of a wife." Good health was half the secret of Esther's success. She retained her vitality and good looks, because she warded off feminine weaknesses and ailments by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Spectres rule where there is no God.—Novalis.

Physicians who know the value of Shallenberger's Pills prescribe them as their own remedy. This is hardly fair, but is strong testimony in favor of the medicine. In one year a wholesale druggist in Baltimore sent to the proprietors of the medicine three gross of empty bottles. The pills had all been used by one physician in that city. Nearly as many more by a doctor in Richmond, Va.

News Summary.

JUNE 7.

The debate on coercion was resumed in the House of Commons.——Mr. John Morley will become the editor of London Daily News, and will contribute the leading articles to that paper.——The losses by fire for the month of May are placed at $10,636,500. The losses do not include forest fires.——The trial of the murderers of R. H. Gaultrell was resumed at Jackson, Miss.——Mr. Corcoran is reported to be much better.——Editor O'Brien sailed for home this evening on the Adriatic.——The boiler of a locomotive on the Philadelphia and Baltimore (B. and O.) railroad exploded in front of the station at Chester, Pa., killing one man and seriously wounding several others, one fatally.

JUNE 8.

Dr. McKenzie performed another operation on Crown Prince's throat, and guarantees a cure.——The Vatican authorities have received $800,000 with which to celebrate the Pope's jubilee.——The constitutional prohibitory amendment was defeated in the Massachusetts House by a vote of 139 to 72, not the necessary two-thirds.——Commodore Bancroft Gherardi, of Louisiana, has passed an examination to be rear admiral. Admiral Franklin will retire August 4, and be succeeded by Gherardi.——Two new cases of fever and two deaths at Key West.

JUNE 9.

The annual meeting of the Suez Canal Company shows that the year's receipts are $1,060,000 less than those of 1885.——The French government now proposes to postpone the Paris Exhibition to have been held in 1890.——The news from Congo is that Stanley's expedition is making slow, but successful progress, owing to the fact that the vessels are heavily laden.——Austria has proposed a new treaty of commerce to Germany.——The disastrous floods in Hungary are the result of a stormy winter and heavy snowfalls.——John Bright says he is sorry to see so great a man as Gladstone descend to an artifice to deceive the people. This was in reference to Gladstone's speeches in Wales.

JUNE 10.

Severe shocks of earthquake have occurred at Vernome, in Turkestan. The town was almost entirely destroyed, and 120 people killed and 125 wounded.——Herr Lalance, a member of the Reichstag from the Mulhausen circle, has been ordered to leave Alsace within twenty-four hours. Herr Lalance is an active protestor, and is charged with having supported the French patriotic league.——Only one new case of fever in the last forty-eight hours reported at Key West.——The steamer Acacia, with 2,000 tons of rails, bound for New Orleans, is ashore between Schooner Pond and Big Glace Bay. She will probably be condemned, as she is in a bad place, and there is no chance of saving her.

JUNE 11.

Further earthquake shocks have occurred in Turkestan. The Kaskelensk settlement, twenty-five versts west of Vernome, was visited by a severe shock and destroyed. The shocks have been felt continuously since the ninth.——Evictions at Bodyke continue.——William E. Sheridan, the actor, died in Sidney, May 18, of epilepsy.——A large military force has left Chester for the purpose of quelling the tithe riots in North Wales.——Twelve hundred union and non-union carpenters are on a strike for an advance in wages in Toronto.——One new case of fever at Key West since yesterday.

JUNE 12.

In spite of the government's efforts, Michael Davitt addressed 5,000 persons at Tenrle.——The Porte has asked that the Egyptian Convention be modified so as to give Turkey the exclusive right to send troops to Egypt in the event of disturbance. England refused the request.——The condition of the Emperor William is improved.——The total number of cases of fever at Key West to date is twenty-four. No deaths since last Wednesday.——A wreck on the Houston, East and West railroad, this morning, caused the fatal injury of two men, and entailing a heavy loss to the road.——The Havemeyer Sugar Refining Company building, in New York, was burnt Saturday. Loss, $2,000,000.

JUNE 13.

The condition of Emperor William is very much improved. Crown Prince Frederick William's condition excites the gloomiest feelings among those who are in a position to know the facts in the case. Prince Bismarck considers his life doomed.——Serious rioting in Athlone, Ireland, between soldiers and civilians.——A land-slide in Concordia, Panama, caused the death of sixteen persons.——The unusually high prices prevailing in coffee in New York broke yesterday, and several firms, who had been speculating heavily, also. Prices fell 6½ cents per pound.

One copy of this superb work will be given for three new subscribers when accompanied by the cash in full.

HUGH JAMIESON, JR.,
Publisher.

A new era in therapeutics, especially in the treatment of pulmonary diseases, was ushered in by the discovery of Winchester's Hypophosphite of Lime and Soda. It has been lauded in the most glowing terms of recommendation by some of the most renowned pathologists of Europe, and is unconditionally endorsed by the prominent physicians of the country. Prevention is infinitely better than cure, and all those who are subject to bronchitis, asthma, pleurisy and kindred ailments, should resort without delay to the use of Winchester's infallible remedy. All good druggists have it.

Books and Periodicals.

BOOKS.

THE THRONE OF GRACE; OR, A CALL TO PRAYER. By M. Rhodes, D. D. Lutheran Publication Society, Philadelphia.

The author has done good service by this capital little book. It is an intelligent and instructive essay, as well as "call." We give one sentence from the chapter on "Habits of Prayer" as illustrative of the author's style: "Who forgets to pray—to pray with the precision of habit—is like an unarmed man in an enemy's country; like an unattended child in the night; like a ship in the wild tempest without commander or compass." The book is "good to the use of edifying" in private devotions.

THE BEST 100 BOOKS. Published by E. L. Kellogg & Co., New York City.

This little pamphlet contains Sir John Lubbock's list of the best 100 books, and criticisms of that list by some of the foremost literary men of the day. In some instances, these criticisms are very breezy. We have enjoyed this little book exceedingly.

HINTS ON EARLY EDUCATION. 12mo, cloth, sixty cents. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York City.

This work was first published sixty years ago in London, anonymously. Its authorship has been attributed to a sister of Elizabeth Fry, the eminent philanthropist; but although it passed through eighteen editions in England, the name of the author never appeared on the title-page. The practical good sense, the clear insight, intelligent discrimination, and high moral standard of the "Hints," make the book very helpful.

DICTIONARY OF LIVING DIVINES AND CHRISTIAN WORKERS. By Dr. Philip Schaff and Rev. Samuel M. Jackson. Funk & Wagnalls, publishers.

This book is a complete and authentic cyclopædia, with biographical sketches of all the prominent living preachers, theologient professors, church dignitaries, religious authors and editors, and other Christian workers, of all churches and all countries.

It is intended as a supplement to the Schaff-Herzog Religious Encyclopædia, published in 1884, in three volumes; that work excluded men now living, as did also the German Encyclopædia of Herzog.

Besides living celebrities, the volume includes sketches of divines who have died since the completion of the Religions Encyclopædia (1884), and a few others who were inadvertently omitted.

The editors have aimed at the greatest possible accuracy and completeness, as well as strict impartiality, in the desire to make a useful and reliable book of reference for readers of all denominations.

THE LIFE OF REV. GEORGE C. HADDOCK. By his son, Frank C. Haddock. Published by Funk & Wagnalls.

This is a beautiful book. It is the tribute of a loving son to the memory of a father martyred in the cause of temperance.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS—ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE. By Prof. J. P. Mahaffy. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. For sale here by Eyrich, Canal street. Price, $1 50.

This is a most entertaining story of one of the most interesting periods of history.

INFANT PRAISES. By J. R. Sweeney and William Kirkpatrick. Published by J. J. Hood, Philadelphia. Price, twenty-five cents. Per dozen, $2 40.

Human Nature Library. No. 1. SELF-RELIANCE; OR, SELF-ESTEEM. By Nelson Sizer. Fowler & Wells, 775 Broadway, New York.

PERIODICALS.

—The June magazines are unusually bright and interesting. We have received: The Quiver, The American Magazine, The Magazine of Art, St. Nicholas, Cassell's Family Magazine, Popular Science, The Eclectic, The Homiletic Magazine, The Studio, Wide Awake, Scribner's Magazine, The Forum, Littell's Living Age, Christian Thought, The Pulpit Treasury, The Century.

For Rickets, Marasmus, and Wasting Disorders of Children,

Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is unequaled. The rapidity with which children gain flesh and strength upon it is very wonderful. Read the following: "I have used Scott's Emulsion in cases of Rickets and Marasmus of long standing, and have been more than pleased with the results, as in every case the improvement was marked."—J. M. MAIN, M. D., New York.

Gracious Revival at Homer.

We are in the midst of a gracious revival of religion here. Homer is on fire; thirty or forty penitents last night; perhaps twenty conversions, and ten or twelve already applied for church membership—the best citizens of Homer. The church is wonderfully awakened and stirred. The end is not yet. It has been a fierce and hotly contested battle; but victory flushes along Israel's conquering ranks. Glory to God! Bro. Blocker has been with me ten days. Our meeting has continued nearly four weeks. Courage! "God is not slack concerning his promises."

Yours in Christ,

T. B. WHITE.

JUNE 9, 1887.

Almost everyone is troubled with nervousness in some form, and nine-tenths of the prevailing illness comes from nervous exhaustion, brought on by overwork, mental strain or dissipation. No wonder people are asking for a reliable nerve remedy like Moxie Nerve Food; it builds you up, and strengthens your whole nervous system.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

Working People

are often too ill to labor, but they haven't time to take medicine and lay off. Simmons Liver Regulator can be taken without causing any loss of time, and the system will be built up and invigorated by it. It has no equal as a preparatory medicine, and can be safely used when a doctor can not be called in. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1887 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (thirteenth), July, 1887.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds. Several distinguished preachers invited from a distance will be in attendance and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. A very general expression having been made to continue the meeting for a longer session than usual, it has been determined to extend the time of the services of the camp meeting to two weeks.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.; W. Otis, W. J. Hearin, R. E. Jones, Mobile, Ala.; J. J. Flowers, Bolling, Ala.; Dr. E. F. Griffin, Moss Point; J. P. Carter, Hattiesburg, Miss.; W. H. Foster, E. P. Mackie, J. H. Campman, B. G. L. Rayne, T. J. Carver, H. Jamiesun, jr., P. Werleb, H. Haag, New Orleans, La.; or R. E. Price, the keeper of the camp ground, near Biloxi, Miss.

The public are invited to attend.

W. H. FOSTER, Pres.
HUGH JAMIESON, JR., Sec.
NEW ORLEANS, May 16, 1887.

The second annual camp meeting for 1887 on Sam Jones Camp Ground will commence on the last Friday, August 26, 1887. The camp ground is beautifully situated, surrounded by mountainous scenery, and as fine ice cold springs as ever sought its level. The ground is situated on the L., N. O. & T. R. R.—commonly called Valley Route—146 miles from New Orleans, and ninety miles from Vicksburg; and the hotel and tabernacle are within a stone's throw of the railroad. Several distinguished preachers who have been invited will be in attendance, and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. The meeting will be continued ten or twelve days. The accommodations are large, and large additions will be made, and the accommodations will be sufficient for all who may come. Reduced rates of fare will be published later.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. F. Cassels, Dr. J. R. Whittington, A. J. Roberts, W. G. Langmien or J. K. Cobb, Gloster, Miss.

The public are invited to attend.

A. J. ROBERTS, Pres.
J. F. CASSELS, Sec.

The sixteenth annual camp meeting for 1887 of Hennington Camp Ground, near Crystal Springs, Copiah county, Miss., will begin on Thursday night, July 28, 1887, and continue eight days. This camp ground is situated on the Illinois Central railroad, 178 miles from New Orleans, and twenty-six miles from Jackson, Miss.

Ample accommodations will be made on reasonable terms for all visitors.

The ticket system will be preserved.

Reduced rates on the railroads are being secured.

All ministers friendly to camp meetings, with the public, are invited to attend.

THE LEGEND OF THE WELL.

BY IDA A. AHLBORN.

llage of Germany boasts of a spring,
e that a master might worthily sing;
name of the wonder, The Well of the Bell.
this is the legend the villagers tell:

custom it was in the pious old times,
bell to baptize ere it rang the church chimes;
symbol of water, the priest would apply,
ring out the tidings, O bell, to the sky.

nehow or other—the reason unknown—hung unbaptized in the tower of stone, bell that should ring for the village below music of gladness, of peace, and of woe.

night, runs the legend, away flew the bell, sank in the earth deep—and there is the well;
allowed it flew in the darkness to hide, struck the rock's waters the people to chide.

tell to their children the story to-day, bash of bell-shape to prove what they say;
drink of the waters that murmur, "Beware!
hat must be hallowed who truth would declare."

LOWIS, Kansas.

Entire Sanctification.

Mr. EDITOR: Early in my ristian experience my attenn was called to the writings of sley, Fletcher, and Dr. Adam rk, on the doctrine and expeee of what we technically "entire sanctification," or "experience of perfect love." result of my prayerful reh was that I adopted for all ing time this doctrine as ht and explained by our dard writers, because I beed their views, in the main, orded with the doctrine of iness as plainly taught in the le. I have felt an abiding rest in this doctrine ever e; have often preached it, have read almost every sible article, pamphlet or k that has come under my rvation written on the sub-. I have been greatly edified strengthened in my faith by h I have read; but some ters on sanctification have so h chaff mixed up with a lit*wheat* that they remind me of wordy talks of Job's three nds, concluded by the self-rcited exhortation from the ng Elihu, who was "full of ter," the result of which , that God inquired of Job, ho is this that darkeneth sel by words without knowle?" Some writers who have er had a personal experience this great additional blessing comes after justification and neration, in attempting to e about it only make "con-on worse confounded." But ve not commenced this artifor the purpose either of exning or defending our stand-doctrine of experimental rfect love." I only wish to the attention of the readers he ADVOCATE to one importfact which is everywhere apent in our church history where our people have been properly instructed in regard to this important Bible doctrine, and that fact is, that hundreds and thousands of the best men and women that ever adorned the church have been professors of this advanced state of grace; many of them noted for their undoubted truthfulness, refinement and religious intelligence. These godly men and women tell us that while they were living and walking in the enjoyment of their "first love," they were led to feel the need of a great additional blessing which was provided for, and offered to them in the Holy Scriptures, and after seeking, praying and "groaning for it" by a simple act of faith in the all-cleansing blood of Jesus Christ, they obtained what they had so earnestly and persistently sought after. Among those professors of entire sanctification we number many of our most highly cultivated ministers and laymen in all parts of the world where Methodism is fully taught. I am not now writing about fanatics and extremists. I have only to do now with those who live as well as profess Bible holiness. Now, the question comes up: "How are we to account for the experience of these godly ministers and laymen?" They tell us of the travail of soul they went through in seeking the blessing of "a heart in every thought renewed and full of love divine," and then they tell us of the time and place where they were enabled to believe and enter into the enjoyment of this great salvation. Their lives and works of faith and labors of love afterwards corresponded with their profession. I reiterate the question: "How are we to account for this phase of experience in our church history?" After Mr. Wesley and his colaborers had faithfully and fully preached the doctrine of whole sanctification in England and Ireland, he says: "Not trusting to the testimony of others, I examined in London six hundred and fifty-two myself, who were exceedingly clear in their experience. As all who believe they are sanctified declare with one voice that the change was wrought in a moment, I can not but believe that sanctification is commonly, if not always, instantaneous." This is about the substance of what Mr. Wesley says in his sermon on "Patience." One of our pamphleteers, whose object seemed to be to disparage our standard doctrine of sensible and instantaneous sanctification, more than insinuates that Mr. Wesley's "six hundred and fifty-two members in London" were probably never converted before, and when they got converted called it entire sanctification. Wonderful! How could any well-instructed Methodist minister make such an insinuation? The early Methodists were noted sticklers for a sound conversion as the starting-point of a religious life. As a primary question the class leaders asked every one, "Do you know God in the pardon of your sins?" But I have said all I wish to say at present. I earnestly wish all your readers to look at the work of sanctification as it is now increasing in our church, and, instead of criticising others, give all diligence to securing the great salvation themselves.

Letter from Georgia.

Mr. EDITOR: Though you have one correspondent from Atlanta, in this State, who, from time to time, gives you many important items of information, yet, as I was for many years a member of the Louisiana Conference, there is no reason why I may not also correspond for your most excellent paper.

The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, over which you exercise a watchful and discriminating supervision, in its new dress is one of the best papers published by our church. The new heading, the clear print, and variety of matter, make its visits welcome and entertaining to me. The enterprising publisher deserves the approbation of the entire church, and especially of the patronizing Conferences.

The North Georgia Conference has 229 members, twenty-three of whom are superannuated, five supernumerary, four in foreign missions, one to the Hebrews, four in colleges and high schools, one editor and one assistant editor, reducing the active pastorate in the bounds of the Conference to 191. In addition to the claims of the twenty-three superannuated preachers, there are forty widows and orphans, making in all sixty-three claimants on the Conference fund. There are 77,090 white members; there are 726 Sunday-schools, with 45,192 scholars and over 5,000 teachers. Paid for foreign missions, $14,620 64, and $5,328 55 for home missions. It will be seen that the Louisiana Conference, with her 15,000 members, pays per capita more than the North Georgia Conference.

As yet, I have seen but five members of the Conference, all of whom have given me a hearty welcome. W. D. Shea, for several years a member of the Louisiana Conference, is one of my near neighbors. The work being done throughout the Conference shows that the preachers are earnest and devoted to their Master's cause. The ingathering of souls into the church last year is proof of their zeal and success.

Prohibition will prohibit in this (Whitfield) county. We have no saloons. In Franklin parish, La., with very few exceptions, whisky was not only sold in saloons, but in mercantile stores. What a change to me! I have not seen a drunken man since coming to the county. The people voted it out, and they intend for it to stay out. Some parties, growing eager for the pelf which the sale of it brings, and others no longer desiring to drink water, circulated a petition for another vote; but so few signed it that they abandoned the project. More than half the counties in the State are now enjoying the blessing of local option. There is every reason to believe that the State can be carried by a handsome majority for prohibition, and the effort should be made to banish this formidable enemy from the midst of the people. This evil has dominated our country long enough, and our people, aware of this fact, should rise up in their majesty and crush it. They can do no better deed, either for themselves or the saloon keepers. We await this grand event with some impatience.

Booms are not confined to Mississippi, Alabama or Texas; they are of frequent occurrence in this State. Iron mines, talc mines, slate mines, and several other kinds, excite the people beyond measure. The immediate acquisition of wealth without toil, and a steady and healthy growth from judicious investments, seem to absorb the minds of multitudes, and under such an impulse they neglect the ordinary methods of attaining wealth. Wealth in any form will excite the people, and under the power of covetousness they lose much spirituality. The boom we need most is a religious boom; one that will move the whole country and save souls. Sam Jones has recently closed a series of services at Rome; with what results I am not informed. He has gone to Tennessee to aid in the prohibition movement, and opened the campaign at Chattanooga, one of the enemy's strongest holds, with his 130-pound gun. He will make the prohibition movement over there a grand boom for the Tennesseeans. We are expecting grand results from his sermons and speeches.

North Georgia, so far as I have seen, is a broken country. We have mountains, hills and vales, rich and poor soil, and plenty of cool water, clear as crystal, either drawn from wells or gushing forth from the hills, to supply all the demands of both man and beast. A broken country and good water seem to dwell together. The mountains in the distance, with their tall crests, and the hills and vales seen everywhere over the area of country I am traveling, present many pleasing contrasts, and entrance the mind with many striking and beautiful landscapes. While along your rivers and bayous there is great fear of being overflowed, the people here are afraid that heavy rains will wash the soil of their fields from the hill-sides, sweep down their fences, and, in other respects, do them much damage. The country has not yet recovered from the effects of the war, and is not likely to in this generation. The wonder is that so many can content themselves to cultivate such poor soil, when in Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, there is so much good land lying vacant. Perhaps ignorance of this fact is bliss to them.

It gratifies me to know that the Sabbath law in your State is sustained by your courts. Such a law has been needed for the last fifty years; but saloons, and the Catholic influence prevailing in your chief city, and in the southern part of your State, have stood in the way of its passage. About six years ago I offered a resolution in the Louisiana Conference petitioning the General Assembly of the State to pass such an act; but through the influence of one of its leading members it was voted down. With it there will be great suppression of vice, and greater temporal prosperity. With the saloon doors closed there will be a tendency to attend church, which has not hitherto prevailed. Stronger inducements are now offered to emigrants to settle in that State than ever before.

Letter from Nashville.

BY W. M. LEFTWICH, D. D.

PRICE'S COLLEGE FOR YOUNG LADIES.

It is conceded that no city in the South affords better facilities for education, especially higher education, than Nashville. Its fame has gone abroad throughout the whole land with the thousands of young men and women who bear diplomas from the universities, colleges and seminaries of learning that have justly won for this beautiful city the proud pre-eminence. The marvelous growth of the Nashville College for Young Ladies shows the high appreciation of the great educating public, as well as the distinguished ability of the management of that institution. In 1880 Dr. G. W. F. Price came to this city from Huntsville, Ala., and opened this school, renting for that purpose a large private residence. The first year he enrolled 101 pupils, 17 of whom were boarders. In 1882, 147, with 31 boarders. In 1883, 203, with 56 boarders. In 1884, 209, with 76 boarders. In 1885, 243, with 101 boarders. In 1886, 250, with 102 boarders. In 1887, 280, with 120 boarders. Elegant and commodious buildings were erected in the best part of the city. Twice have they been enlarged to accommodate the increased patronage, and for the third time the Board of Trust are called upon to provide greater facilities and ampler accommodations. The ability and experience of the large faculty of instruction, together with the facilities for teaching all the higher branches of a liberal education, and the culture of the many ornamental accomplishments that now enter into woman's complete education, make this college the complement of Vanderbilt University, and worthy of its official connection with that great seat of learning. The Nashville College for Young Ladies is doing for the young ladies of the country what Vanderbilt University is doing for the young men of the country. The classes in the Nashville College for Young Ladies have access to the lecture-rooms, libraries and laboratories of the Vanderbilt University without additional charge. This connection gives to the institution advantages for higher education possessed by no other college in the South. Dr. Price is a teacher of long experience, ripe scholarship, cultured and accomplished by his life-work with young ladies to the highest degree. His literary, musical and art departments are officered by very accomplished teachers, without regard to cost, and give eminent satisfaction to the patrons. If I could only publish upon the housetop what is now being whispered in the ear in closets of the purposes of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University respecting the Nashville College for Young Ladies, and a university education for the young ladies of the South, it would make the ear tingle. If you will not publish it, I will hint that a magnificent building, as a part of the Nashville College for Young Ladies, to be an "annex" of the Vanderbilt University for young ladies who desire a full university education, may be more than a dream. If young ladies could be graduated from any of the colleges of the South into this "annex," so that they could pursue a university education at the Vanderbilt University, it would be a consummation devoutly to be wished.

The Vanderbilt University has now closed up the most successful year of its history. The books show that 625 students have matriculated in all departments, and the reports show that the average grade of scholarship reached is higher than any previous year. The work of this university will not only compare favorably with other universities, but will soon place Vanderbilt in the front rank. The outlook is hopeful.

The Week of Prayer and Self-Denial.

Our Missionary Board is carrying a debt of $100,000. The extension of our missionary operations some time ago, in some degree, caused this debt. The Board responded to the earnest, beseeching wail of the heathen who thirsted for the gospel. Japan said: "Help us ten years, and we can then help ourselves"—yes, and others. The Board was justified in making the appropriations that made the debt. The call for the week of prayer and self-denial is to raise the means to liquidate the debt; the time set, August 8 to 14. Much ought to be accomplished in this week besides paying the debt. A million of Methodists ought to move a week nearer to the Savior by a week's accumulation of the missionary spirit—another name for the Christian spirit. The Spirit of the Master is, help to all the world: the command is, Go teach all nations. Just at this point the church is sharply segregated from the world and all mere worldly institutions. The world only looks after its own. Its thoughts are upon its own "kith and kin;" its vows of protection and assistance reach only the brotherhood, while the church recognizes the brotherhood of humanity, and, in the spirit of the Son of Man, offers to assist every son of man. The debt was created by the spirit of the Master in the heart of the Missionary Board, and will be paid by the same spirit in the heart of the church. There are in our church 1,000 men that could together pay the debt without the least self-denial. There are 100 that could pay it by very small self-denial. But there are many thousands that can not help much, even with much self-denial. But let us that are financially weak put in our mite. I insist that we, of Seashore district, help in this matter. We can manage to deny ourselves of something. I suppose as prayers for missions is not to be confined to this week alone, so the self-denial, if begun a little earlier and should run a little over the designated week, no one would object. In the country it is not very easy for people to make much self-denial in any given week, and turn the proceeds into money, especially if they are of the class that live daily on the smallest allowance. But there are very few that can not in the course of a week or two save something by self-denial to give to so good a cause. We, that hope to be joint-heirs with Christ in the inheritance of the universe, ought willingly to enter into copartnership with him in the salvation of the world. Yes, at a sacrifice.

T. S. WEST.

A Good Suggestion.

DEAR DR. JOHN: Would it not be well for you to suggest to the whole church to keep the proceeds of the "self-denial week" separate, and report and remit to the Conference treasurers. It would be a stimulus to see what it comes to as a guide for the future. W. H. POTTER.

MACON, GA., June 2, 1887.

Dr. Potter's suggestion is a good one, and we commend it cordially to both preachers and people. In some of the Conferences the custom has been to remit direct to the general treasurer. In such cases let the preacher state to the general treasurer that the remittance is for "self-denial week," so that the whole amount of this offering may be secured. Self-denial is a test of love. Our Savior bore the test. He was rich, but "for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich." How rich he has made us! Can we estimate in gold the value of our salvation? Will our love for Christ and the souls for whom he died bear this test? In his name, for his sake, let this offering be made. Will each pastor keep the week of prayer and self-denial before the people?

I. G. JOHN, Sec.

Notice.

Delegates and preachers coming to the annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, of the North Mississippi Conference, will observe the following directions: You will pay full fare coming and one-third fare returning over the following named roads: Memphis and Charleston, Mississippi and Tennessee, Illinois Central and its connecting line from Aberdeen to Tchula, Mobile and Ohio, and the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas road. Those who take the last named road will come via Memphis.

To secure the reduction named the purchaser must present to the ticket agent a blank form furnished by the commissioner. The agent will certify that the holder has paid full fare going, and this certificate presented to the agent at Grenada, with the secretary's endorsement, will secure the reduction on return.

Let every auxiliary be represented; and a cordial invitation is extended to the preachers. The blank forms are in my hands ready to be sent to those who give notice to Mrs. E. G. Payne, Grenada, Miss., of their coming. Let fervent prayers be made that this meeting may be richly blessed with God's presence.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

Notice.

Reduced rates have been secured over the various railroads in Mississippi to the meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, of the Mississippi Conference, to be held in this town, June 28 and 29. Delegates will pay full fare coming, and return at one cent per mile. The opening sermon will be preached on the evening of the twenty-eighth. A cordial invitation is hereby extended to ministers of the gospel and others specially interested in missionary work.

All parties who expect to attend will please notify Mrs. Kate E. Moore, secretary Enterprise Society, immediately, so that certificates may be forwarded them in order for them to secure reduced fare. Certificates have to be endorsed by agents where tickets to this place are purchased. H. S. RAYNER.

MARTHA OR MARY?

I can not choose; I should have liked so much
To sit at Jesus' feet—to feel the touch
Of his kind, gentle hand upon my head,
While drinking in the gracious words he said.

And yet to serve him! O divine employ!
To minister and give the Master joy,
To bathe in coolest springs his weary feet,
And wait upon him while he sat at meat!

Worship or service—which? Ah! that is best
To which he calls me, be it toil or rest—
To labor for him in life's busy stir,
Or seek his feet, a silent worshiper.

So let him choose for us. We are not strong
To make the choice; perhaps we should go wrong,
Mistaking zeal for service, sinful sloth
For loving worship—and so fail of both.

The Sunday-School Lesson for July 3, 1887.

BY C. G. ANDREWS, D. D.

THE INFANT JESUS.

Matthew II, 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matthew i, 21.

INTRODUCTORY.

The Sunday-school lesson history takes quite a leap from the lesson for June 26 to that of July 3. About fifteen hundred years have intervened. Prophets have spoken, poets have sung, the patriarchal age has passed away, kings have arisen, reigned and fell. The fullness of time for the inauguration of the greatest event in the history of the world has arrived. "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." The central idea of the Old Testament teaching was to prepare the world for the coming of Christ. Minute particulars of his ancestry, of his birth, of his childhood, of his character, of his life, of his death, had all been given. Even the very place where he was to be born had been foretold. Not only devout Jews, but also men of all nationalities, who kept posted in the literature and transactions of the nge, were in a state of expectation of the appearance of the Messiah. Taking advantage of this state of expectancy, impostors tried to have themselves regarded as the promised One; but, lacking the power to work miracles and not having their claim based upon truth, very soon in each case were their false pretensions exposed, "and all, as many as obeyed them, were scattered and brought to nought." But now had the time come, when he was to be born who could stand all tests, and for all time to come could vindicate his claim to be the Son of God, the Savior of men.

VISIT OF THE WISE MEN.

Verse 1. "Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea." "Now" connects this narrative with the preceding chapter in which the genealogy and birth of Christ were detailed. There is no means of knowing just what the age of the Savior at this juncture was; but he was still in early infancy. The place of birth is so described as to distinguish it from other towns similarly named. This Bethlehem is spoken of in many places in the Bible. In Ruth i, 1, it is called Bethlehem-judah; in Genesis xxxv, 19, Ephrath, which is Bethlehem; in Micah v, 2, Bethlehem Ephratah. "In the days of Herod"—during the reign of this king. He was the son of Antipater, an Idumean. "Wise men from the east." The east may mean Arabia, Chaldea or Persia, as they all had Magi, or wise men. They were a sort of astrologers, and probably of Jewish extraction, because they came to their metropolis, Jerusalem, to worship the new-born King.

2. "His star in the east." All Scripture writers admit that a new star or meteor appeared; and, seeing this, the wise men remembered the prophecy of Balaam (Numbers, xxiv, 17): "There shall come a Star out of Jacob." They recognized his divinity, as they came to "worship him."

3. "Herod was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him." It is not difficult to surmise the cause of Herod's trouble. It arose from a fear lest the new King would deprive him of his throne. Just why all Jerusalem should be troubled is not so easily accounted for, except that "troubled" means "agitated." Certainly the announcement of his birth, of whom it had been prophesied that his name should be called "Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Prince of Peace," was well calculated to stir the holy city to its center.

4. "The chief priests" means not only the high priest and his deputy, but all connected with the sacred office. From first to last Jesus found his most unrelenting persecution from this source. "Scribes of the people"—those who transcribed the sacred books and interpreted them—"demanded"—that is, inquired, "where Christ," the Messiah, "should be born"—that is, where the prophets declared should he his birthplace.

5, 6. "In Bethlehem of Judea." The proof given in the sixth verse is a quotation from Micah v, 2, the meaning of which is, that though Bethlehem up to this time was one of the most insignificant of all the cities of Israel, yet hereafter the fact of its being the birthplace of the Messiah would give it a history, sacred and imperishable. "A Governor that shall rule my people Israel." The Greek word here translated "rule" is the same used by the Savior when he said to Peter, "Feed my sheep"—tend as a shepherd.

7, 8. Herod sought to have explicit information about the Savior, what time the star appeared, and his exact whereabouts, so that he might not make a mistake about it. He stated that he wanted to worship him, but subsequent events very soon showed that his worship meant to devote him to death.

9. "When they had heard the king, they departed." Obedience to their sovereign was not the only motive which prompted them. Doubtless they were animated by an ardent desire to look upon the Messiah. "The star * * * went before them * * * and stood over where the young child was." There is no room here to explain this occurrence upon some astronomical phenomenon. The whole narrative must be styled by infidels a fable, or it must be admitted that the same Agency which made the stars of the firmament made this new one also, and appointed its orbit to lead to the resting-place of the blessed Babe.

11. "When they were come into the house." It is probable that they had removed him from the stable to a human habitation. "When they had opened their treasures." A thesauros, whence our word "treasure," is a receptacle for valuable things. The inhabitants of the lands of the Bible were in the habit of bringing presents when they approached the presence of sovereigns. Jacob's sons took a present for the King of Egypt. The custom is said still to prevail in the East. "Gold, frankincense and myrrh." Commodities, all of which were held in highest esteem. The gold was the representative of all values; the others were desirable because of their qualities as perfumes and medicines.

12. "Being warned of God in a dream." "Of God" is not in the original. These words are put in italics in the New Version to indicate that they are supplied by the translators. God often employed dreams to seal instruction to his people. It is quite probable that these wise men strongly suspected that the motive which prompted Herod to seek the whereabouts of the young child was not a good one.

Happy wise men guided by the star to a sight of the infant Redeemer! Happy are they of all succeeding generations who have found by conscious experience "him of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph."

Once More—"Old Maids."

BY AUNT BETSY.

When a man attempts to put himself in a woman's place, either as mother or maid, and takes it upon himself to decide the question as to what constitutes her highest good, it may be very mildly suggested that, perhaps, he does not know all he thinks he does. I quote from the columns of this week's ADVOCATE: "After God made Adam, the Infinite saw there was one thing more necessary to round up his happiness—that was a wife." "His social, intellectual and moral well-being demanded it." "If anyone wishes to become acquainted with the evils and wretchedness of celibacy, let him read Taylor," etc.

I should have to quote the whole article to show that the thought in the mind of the writer is not woman as related to marriage, but man—that is, what would be the result to the "lords of creation" should women be influenced against a union with them? I quote again: "Marriage brings into healthful exercise a hundred splendid elements of man's being, which nothing else can." That, no doubt, was just what the Creator meant when he said: "It is not good for man to be alone." Does anybody question that fact? And yet to the mind's eye there comes the petition of scores of young wives whose brightness has gone out of their lives; and a walk to the cemetery, near by, will tell the cost to many more.

But, another quotation: "A mother who has a boy bursting into sweetfulness of manhood, would she exchange the love and veneration of that young heart for the ephemeral reputation of Alice and Phœbe Cary?" If the days of the millennium had already dawned, that would be a very pretty picture; but I have another in my mind that will offset it a hundred to one. There are twenty boys' mothers, in a half mile of where I write these lines, whose eyes are kept open night after night, while they listen with anxious hearts and dreadful forebodings for footsteps of boys who ought to be the blessings of their lives, but whose "love" for a "jolly good time" is greater than their "veneration" for their mothers; nay, more than this, these mothers say to me often, "You don't know what trouble is."

But, I quote again in connection with this moral boy—the conclusion: "A poor husband, therefore, is better a thousand times than none (for the poor husband?)." Notice the "therefore." The inference is plainly this: A woman is to be estimated only as she becomes the creature of man; a beautiful, noble, gifted woman reaches a higher plane by accepting a union with anything in the shape of a man—be he ever so degraded, sensual, unworthy. Such sentiments are known to exist among savage and half-civilized tribes.

Mary Wortley Montague says the followers of Mahomet teach their women that unless they are wives they have no souls to be saved; but marriage to them involves such utter wretchedness that they put off the evil day until they think death stares them in the face; and then marry to save their souls.

There is something of the darker ages in these false ideas concerning marriage, even in Christian America. How many girls are sacrificed because they prefer the risk of unhappy wifehood to being called "old maids." The result of this sentiment is a suit for divorce or a life of bitter expiation.

Sam Jones says, "I would rather be 500 old maids than the wife of one drunken man." And no less an authority than England's great poet says:

"As the husband is, the wife is.
Thou art mated with a clown;
And the grossness of his nature
Shall have power to drag thee down."

One might expect a schoolgirl, to whom all the world is June days, sunshine, love and roses, to utter such a sentiment as this: "Better a poor husband than none;" but that a man, a husband, perhaps the father of a rosy-cheeked, bright girl, would adopt the ideas of a Mohammedan, in these days of enlightened gospel dispensation, is incredible. The husband, however, seems to be, in the mind of the writer, altogether a secondary consideration, a matter of minor importance—the main fact is "having the boy."

The noble life of Frances Willard (God's best gift to America) would be put to shame beside the record of the Indian woman plodding along the highway with her papoose swinging over one shoulder, and from the other her burden of willow-baskets, by the sale of which latter she makes a living for her lord and master, who rides ahead on his Indian pony, carrying his blow-gun. Laura Haygood, Lochie Rankin, Hannah Moore, Agnes Strickland, and a hundred others, sink into nothingness by the side of a washwoman, bearing the supreme honor of being some man's wife, and some boy's mother.

In support of the writer's theory as to a woman's condition, St. Paul is quoted: "I have learned in every state to be content." But a more apt quotation from St. Paul, on this subject, will be found in I Corinthians vii, 34: "The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy, both in body and spirit; but she that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband."

The truth is that neither man nor woman owes character or disposition, success or failure, to any particular state or condition of life. The woman who becomes an unhappy wife, would, perhaps, be the same unmarried. Her usefulness and amiability depend, in either case, on the conscientious discharge of the duties God gives her. The highest type of man and woman is to be found in the ranks of both married and single. The discipline of life which God gives to both, in the sphere to which he calls them, tends to purify, ennoble and strengthen. No higher type of manhood is to be found than St. Paul, than McKendree and those other noble pioneers of Methodism in America, whose busy lives had no room for anything but work for the Master. It is universally conceded that the one great mistake of Wesley's life was his marriage; and although he was never legally divorced, the separation from his wife was almost as complete.

Surely Solomon, in all the glory of his thousand wives, was not arrayed in robes of righteousness like one of these; and the muchly married Mormon has never yet successfully established a claim to those "hundred splendid elements of man's spiritual being." The writer of that article on "reasons why a woman ought to marry," no doubt, forgot to consult his wife. She could have presented some points of which his philosophy never dreamed; even that "sensible female physician" is familiar with some things that must remain forever unfathomed by the masculine mind. Or, perhaps, he may be a bachelor, and making use of the best arguments he can command to induce some woman to marry him.

But, seriously, Mr. Editor, I am not writing in defense of "old maids," but in behalf of the young womanhood of the land. Much has been done to break the shackles of custom that bound the young men of our country; but the thralldom that has continued to sacrifice the fair girls of our homes to these false and perverted ideas of marriage is no less harmful in results to themselves and others than is intemperance in the other sex. Let a girl be taught that her standard in a husband must be high; let her determine that unless the man of her choice comes up to that standard of true manhood, she will live her own life; the result will be the kind of marriage that God ordained, or none at all. Who can doubt that the happiness of the race would be promoted, and the world made better, if the "twain were made one" by that nuptial vow?

The conclusion of the whole matter is this: That every man or woman who lives conscientiously the life God appoints, in the way he appoints, is the happy, the successful individual. It is a fact that a woman can be more useful to the church and the world single than married. A woman's life may be so full of work for others that she has no time to think of self. It is true that a woman's life may be full of brightness, and that she may be not only happy, but thankful her lot has been that of an "old maid."

A New Tractate.

THE PRIEST AND THE PREACHER; OR, INFORMATION FOR THE PEOPLE. By R. Abbey, of Mississippi. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. 24 mo. 64 pp. Price, five cents each; or fifty cents per dozen.

I do not know when I have read with as much pleasure a tract or pamphlet as I have this little one from the diligent pen of Bro. Abbey. It is an admirable production; brief, pointed, clear and comprehensive, yet, withal, kind and Christian-like in its tone. It can only do good if it be circulated, as it deserves to be. Multiplied thousands ought to be scattered, not only in New Orleans, but in Baltimore, Boston, St. Louis and other cities where Romanism is strongly intrenched, and also in the smaller cities and towns, like Jackson, Vicksburg and Natchez, Miss. There are many under Romish influences who only need the light shed by this little book to lead them to the grander light of the book of God. "Turn on the light!" T. L. MELLEN.

Bishop Hendrix on the Needs of the Church.

From the Nashville Christian Advocate we take the following utterances of Bishop Hendrix, which we commend to the thoughtful consideration of our readers:

"Never did our church so need wise and strong men in its pulpit as now—"men that have understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do." We need men who shall be leaders of thought, men of conviction, and with the courage of their convictions. We need men of intellect and heart. We need an able and outspoken church-press, and well-manned and well-endowed institutions for both our sons and daughters. Then we need preachers who are wise enough to know the immense value of press and school, and to secure the needed patronage for both. We are not beginning to do our duty until a church paper is in every Methodist home, with its weekly advocacy of whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, and whatsoever things are of good report. "My people perish for lack of knowledge." The absolute prejudice against educated men and educated preachers in some quarters is discreditable. It discounts our intelligence. We build colleges as places where young men called of God may study for the ministry, and obtain liberal gifts for them on that plea, and yet in some instances use every influence to keep our young preachers from attending them. In one of the so-called patronizing Conferences of our foremost institution of learning a large class was received on trial, not one of whom had enjoyed its advantages. The pulpit of the future can not be manned in this way. When the education of the pew outstrips that of the pulpit, the latter will lose its influence."

A Monument to Rev. J. D. Murff.

Bro. J. D. Murff spent five years of his itinerant life in serving the Faisonia circuit, and in its service sealed his ministry with his life. In grateful remembrance of his love and great labor in ministering so long and faithfully to their spiritual wants, the good people of this charge have determined to raise a suitable monument to mark the last resting-place of their much-loved pastor. Thinking there will be many of those with whom Bro. Murff has labored during the past, who would feel it a pleasure to aid in the erection of this last tribute to his memory, we publish this that they may have an opportunity of doing so. As Jacob set up a stone in Ephrath to mark the grave of his illustrious dead, so may we, by rearing a modest shaft over the dust of this, our departed brother, perpetuate his memory for ages yet to come. We owe it to him in justice to his service. A work of duty should be a work of love.

Should this fall under the eye of anyone who knows the post-office of Sister Murff, they will do me the kindness of notifying me where she is, as I shall be glad to correspond with her. Those wishing to help in the cause, as above given, can forward all contributions to me, at Faisonia, Sunflower county, Miss. Fraternally,

F. P. SPENCER.

MR. EDITOR: The building of the church at Boyce made it wise to remove the church from Howerton Hill to Lamothe's Bridge, on Bayou Rapides, about equi-distant from Boyce to Alexandria by the bayou. The plans inaugurated last year for this purpose have been completed, and on the fifth Sabbath in May we dedicated the church under the most encouraging circumstances. House full of attentive hearers; all expenses paid, and the prospect of a large working congregation. This charge is now ready to be divided into three, each of which, with earnest, working pastors, will be well able to sustain themselves.

I have never found a more hospitable people, or a people more eager to have pastoral work done, or a people more anxious to hear the Word expounded. I am astonished at the smallness of our numbers in this attractive and well-settled parish. I find many families which have never known what pastoral work is. So many that I can not possibly visit them, as should be done.

We are up with all our collections except at Lamothe's Bridge. Have sent forward all our assessment for foreign missions. The Woman's Missionary Socie working earnestly and suc fully.

We are fanning the prohib flame and, by our gospel tem ance meetings, keeping the p mind awake on this great ject. I am hoping for an as ant soon. We have had a twenty accessions to the chu

Thoughts for the Home Circ

"Prayer is the key of morning and the lock of night." Happy is the fa whose day holds nothing w the one may not fitly open, the other peacefully close.

"He always wins who with God."

The working thread whic manageable as the Lord pre it, becomes knotted and tw with a dozen more by neglect.

"Shine like the sun in e corner."

Every little duty counts. matter how small, it may b you out, as that delighted boy came out, who, having one cent to put in the plate, desperately afraid it was small to be counted. Imm his joy when the minister out: "Our collection to amounts to fifty dollars—and cent!"

When daily life is to do will of God, no disappointm is possible; neither can fa come in. Step-by-step follow is the most quieting, disen gling thing in the world.

The Lord's call to the P enco Chamber, means only further work here was not to do.

The Queen's Jubilee.

On June 20, 1837, Vic-ria, then a girl of eighteen, ceeded her uncle, William Fourth, as sovereign of eat Britain and Ireland. She ll, therefore, have reigned, on coming June 20, just fifty ars.

Throughout the vast empire, ttered in every quarter of the be, over which Victoria holds y, this reign of half a century ll be celebrated by every va-ty of ceremony and festivity.
England itself, the Queen's ubilee Year," as it is called,
be marked by special reings and testimonies of reet and loyalty. An "Imperial itu e" is to be founded, to alize the event, which will prise a stately edifice, in ch the productions of Great ain and her many colonies ll permanently placed and ibited.

the inner circle of the court
the high aristocracy, the t will be commemorated by balls, concerts, levees, and ten-parties. London will rend with gayeties rarely wit-ed even in the height of its ety season." Corporations, le guilds, societies of every d will hold banquets, and en to glowing speeches of d cheer and loyalty.

t is no wonder that the Engpeople enter with such hearty husiasm into the celebration so long, prosperous, and notaa reign.

Queen Victoria's rule, indeed, ot more wonderful in its nual length, than for the great nts which have marked it.
empire has been greatly ex-ded; for within this period powerful colonies in Auslia and in Southern Africa
e been organized, and her over the Indian Empire has ome complete.

t home, the British subjects the Queen have made vast des in civilization, freedom, general intelligence. The nciple of free popular educa-n has been introduced. The litical power has passed from aristocracy to the masses of people. The House of Com-ns has become the supreme hority of the State; and that use is chosen by household frage.

Many abuses have been cor-
ted. The England of to-day far more enlightened and hune than was the England of y years ago. Factory operas are now protected in life, b, and health. The rights of laboring classes are more fully gnized and protected by the
s. The system of jail and ne hospital management have me more mild. Great in-tions of charity have been nded all over the land.

reat progress has been made,
ng the half century, in nce and the material arts.
en Victoria came to the ne, railways were yet in their
ncy. No steamship had ever ssed the Atlantic. Invention, e that time, has wonderfully nged the process of every d of manufacture.

he English literature of the torian reign has produced a adid harvest in poetry, histoomance, the drama, and phil-
phy. To that reign belong the es of Tennyson, Macaulay, wer, George Eliot, Dickens,
ckeray, Darwin, Huxley,
dall, Mill, Froude, Lecky, eman, and many other writers igh rank.

ueen Victoria has ruled wise-nd well. She has better unstood her position as the reign of a free, constitu-al kingdom than did any of predecessors. She has been ng to reign, and not to
rn. She has always fur-
l the wishes of her subjects, xpressed by their represent-
s. Only once—and that, she was still young and in-rienced—has she ever sought ve her own way against a ister who had the confidence Parliament; and on that sion she finally yielded.

ring the first half of her n, she was guided and aided wise and devoted husband, ce Albert. Since his death has lived in too mournful usion, but has scrupulously hanged all the duties devolv-upon her as a sovereign.

her own home circle she proved herself a model wife mother, presenting to her ects a bright example of do-tic affection, purity, and
ue. No English court was more free than hers from dal or extravagance. Her uence upon the morals of the lish has been wholly good elevating.

Queen Victoria has never been a brilliant or beautiful woman; but her sterling virtues, her genuine interest in and love for her subjects, her submission to the new order of things in English politics, her motherly qualities, and her devotion to the duties of her station have endeared her to the English nation, which gladly does honor to her in the year of her Jubilee.—Youth's Companion.

DIVERSITIES OF GIFTS.—Very much of the criticism that is expended upon preachers or Christian workers would be rendered valueless, if the fact were kept in view that God employs all varieties of talent to carry on his work in the world and to effect his purposes. What one can not accomplish with the talent with which God has entrusted him, another can, with his God-given measure of mental equipment. The Boanerges may not be successful as a son of consolation, nor may a Barnabas be capable of taking the place of a son of thunder, but the criticism upon the work of each loses both its point and its propriety when the question is considered, Who hath made them to differ?—Pulpit Treasury.

Many Latent Virtues.

"Poo-bah," in the opera of "The Mikado," held every office in his province except that of Lord High Executioner. His duties were as varied as are the medicinal virtues of Drs. Starkey & Palen's Compound Oxygen, in which that marvelous life-sustaining property of the earth's atmosphere is latent and liberated for the inhalation of a patient by a very simple process. If you have any curiosity to know the remarkable results of the Compound Oxygen Treatment for consumption, bronchitis, rheumatism, and other related maladies, send your address to Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., and receive their interesting pamphlet free.

There are Christian cranks. We emphasize Christian. These are men and women who love and serve Christ, yet who take up the strangest notions, and always with some reasons for them. The "faith healers" are Christian cranks, who could easily test their power by curing diseases which depend not upon the nervous system—say, curing a man with one arm. It is as easy for the Almighty to give two arms as for him to cure hysteria. Hysteria may be cured by imagination, but the one arm man can not. So if faith curers will get two arms to the man with one, we will believe; otherwise, they are cranks, Christian cranks, but cranks beyond all doubt. — Southern Churchman.

Humbug.

Barnum said, "The American People like to be humbugged." This may be true in the line of entertainment, but not where life is at stake. A man with consumption or any lingering disease, looking Death in the face and seeking to evade his awful grasp, does not like to be trifled with. So with confidence we place before our readers Nature's great remedy, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a sure relief for that long train of diseases resulting from impure blood, such as Consumption, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Liver Complaint, Kidney Disorder, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Scrofula and General Debility. Time-tried and thoroughly tested, it stands without an equal! Any druggist.

Materializing Worship.

The subject was suggested in reading a public report of a new pastor's first Sunday's service. The principal and most attractive thing about the service, and by its prominence apparently the most important, was an elaborated floral display, which made pulpit and platform a bank of flowers, like a brilliant, fragrant conservatory. This drew all admiring eyes; this was the absorbing object of thought and remark. How beautiful! How lovely! Here was an exhibition of a service of much labor, taste and cost. And for what? To prepare the way for the entrance of the divine Presence into his sanctuary! He needs not, requires not, such preparation. Was it to give significance to the table whereon lay the emblems of Christ's crucifixion? Did the incense of flowers surround the cross? In the sanctuary where God's people come to worship him, and with tender, loving hearts partake of the emblems of his crucified Son, in remembrance of him, shall the cross be concealed by materialistic adornment? Can the incense of flowers take the place of pure, spiritual devotion? Heathen altars in idolatrous temples are thus adorned; but the humble, wearied man at Jacob's well declared, "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." On all occasions of worship, and especially one which introduces the servant who is to minister at the altar and the sacramental table, he requires of his people a service of the heart, in its devoutest, purest spirituality, not vain offerings of sensuous things. Such days used to be days of earnest prayer for the Holy Spirit on pastor and people. The Aarons exercised their hands in devout-upholding, not as bearers of flower-pots. The tide of feeling was not in the way of display, but in silent seeking of God's favor. So important the step, so much was involved, so great the responsibilities, taking hold on eternal things, and the welfare of souls, there was a deep "sense of God" in the service that turned the mind from all earthly things to God for help and approval. Heaven and eternity were too near and real for earth to have a place, whatever its attractions. Were our fathers behind the times? They met the duties and responsibilities of their generation with the Bible in their hands, and the Holy Spirit for their guide. The induction of a pastor under such influences meets God's favor and secures a blessing, but a sensuous display God has no interest in. The scent of flowers is not "a sense of God." He would draw us to himself, not to a bank of flowers. He requires the true, spiritual worship and service. The times are changed. We are wiser than the Bible. We are skillful in substitutes. We worship the material, as perhaps Dr. Withrow did when he baptized (sprinkled) thirty persons with water brought from the river Jordan. Substitution in duty or worship has no warrant in Scripture. You may exhaust Jordan to furnish water for sprinkling, but all that stress on the element can not take the place of obedience to the Divine command. You may bank a church with flowers to the ridge-pole, and mingle their fragrance with the most artistic music, but they can not be substitutes for true devotion and the Holy Spirit.—S. W. F., in Watchman.

How shall we define this golden attribute of mercy? Is it not the one perfection which we creatures give, or seem to give, to our Creator? How could he have mercy were it not for us! Mercy is the tranquility of his omnipotence, and the sweetness of his omnipresence; the fruit of his eternity, and the compassion of his immensity; the chief satisfaction of his justice, the triumph of his wisdom, and the patient perseverance of his love. Wherever we go, there is mercy, the peaceful, active, broad, deep, endless mercy of our Heavenly Father. If we work by day, we work in mercy's light, and we sleep at night in the lap of our Father's mercy.—F. W. Faber.

Gladstone says: To comprehend a man's life it is necessary to know not merely what he does, but also what he purposely leaves undone. There is a limit to the work that can be got out of a human body or a human brain, and he is a wise man who wastes no energy on pursuits for which he is not fitted; and he is still wiser who, from among the things he can do well, chooses and resolutely follows the best.

Being accustomed to spells of nervous prostration, for which I tried every known route, I most heartily give my testimony that Moxie is the leader of them all. There is nothing like it. It makes you forget that you have ever been nervous.—Mrs. P. P. Lyon, leading society lady in St. Louis, Mo.

The world is his who can see through its pretensions.

Tutt's Pills

REGULATE THE BOWELS.

Habitual Costiveness

Causes derangement of the entire system, and begets diseases that are hazardous to life. Persons of sedentary habits are subject to Headache, Dizziness, Dyspepsia, Gloomy Forebodings, Nervousness, Fevers, Drowsiness, Irritable Temper and other symptoms, which make the sufferer for business or agreeable associations. Regular habits of body alone can correct these evils, and nothing succeeds so well in achieving this condition as Tutt's Pills. By their use not only is the system renovated, but the consequence of the harmonious changes thus created, there pervades a feeling of satisfaction; the nervous faculties perform their functions with vivacity, and there is an exhilaration of mind, freedom of thought, and perfect heart's ease that bespeaks the full enjoyment of health.

SECRET OF BEAUTY

is health. The secret of health is the power to digest a proper quantity of food. This can never be done when the liver does not act as pure. It is the driving wheel in the mechanism of man, and when it is out of order, the whole system becomes deranged, and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Constipation, Jaundice, Bilious Colic and General Debility ensue. To restore the functions of the Liver and impart that beauty which always attends a healthy constitution, Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills are recommended. They are not a cure-all, but are designed solely for the disordered Liver and the diseases which it produces.

The Board of Missions appointed the week, beginning August 8, as a week of prayer and self-denial in the interest of our missions.

Triumphant Justice.

We have followed the progress of the trial of Hamilton and others, for the assassination of R. D. Gambrell, with the most intense interest, from the fatal night to the incarceration of the assassins in the county jail, without the benefit of bail. Acting upon the determination of the noble father of the murdered boy, to let the law ferret out and expose in all its hideousness this dastardly crime against humanity and its best and most precious interests, we have watched the process of investigation with trembling, less justice should again be cheated. The testimony given, the speeches made and the promptness of the presiding judge in giving judgment in the case—all go to show that such a crime can be exposed and will be promptly punished. The spirit of justice is awakening in the hearts of the people, and the enforcement of law is coming to be the demand of these times.

The spirit of the murdered champion of Mississippi's prohibition element has infused new life into the hearts of the earnest friends of temperance, and caused the lukewarm to ponder their inconsistent position, and struck dismay into the ranks of the enemy. Like the blood of Abel, the young martyr's blood "crieth to God from the ground" for retribution; and already the dread Nemesis has thrown her inextricable meshes of retributive justice over the principals in this midnight assassination. In this we have the promise that when the case comes up for final arbitrament, full retribution will be measured out.

This case affords but a glimpse of what the temperance cause has to suffer as well as do. The deepest and basest passions of the human heart are aroused by the efforts of the temperance people to drive out the saloons, and those passions are ready to glut their vengeance upon all who oppose with earnestness the traffic in liquors. The murder of one man, or a dozen men, or a hundred, will not satisfy the murderous desires of men who are daily killing people by the score, by the selling of intoxicants, as long as the temperance people keep the battle raging. But the watchword is, "On with the Revolution." Young men may be called to give up their lives, pure women may see untold sufferings, and old men may go down into their graves in despair of victory, still the cry will be, "On with the Revolution." Such a cry as comes from the grave of a murdered Gambrell is already causing the "dry bones" to shake; and an army of living, earnest, intrepid, valorous and undaunted men and women is going forth to certain victory.

A private note from Bishop Galloway says that he contracted malaria while in the Indian Territory, which hastened his return home. He is now improving. The Bishop attended the International Council of the Indian tribes, and was much pleased with what he saw and heard. He regards our work among the Indians as progressive.

Church Schools and the Bible.

The Apostle Paul, in his letter to the Ephesians, which has been aptly termed "the church epistle," has expressly stated that all the machinery of the church, under the supervision of the Holy Spirit, is working together for the one purpose of making "perfect" men—men who will measure up to "the stature of the fullness of Christ." The various agencies the apostle enumerates as engaged in this grand work—apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers—are agencies who work under the supervision of the Holy Spirit, and in co-operation with him. The great instrument which is most commonly used for the accomplishment of the end proposed is the Word of God. This is the effective means by which these agencies make a "perfect" man. The teaching of God is, that a "perfect man" can be developed only as his spiritual nature apprehends and assimilates the facts laid down and the doctrines taught in the Bible. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Now, a church school, to be in harmony with the line of church work which Paul has outlined in the Epistle to the Ephesians, must develop and train the young in such a manner as to give them a good start in the pursuit of this "perfect" manhood and womanhood. If the school is doing church work, then the "fullness of the stature of Christ" is the goal of all its educational effort in regard to everyone of its pupils. The church, with the Holy Scriptures in her hands and the Holy Spirit in her heart to interpret those oracles, can never be satisfied unless all the agencies which she employs are earnestly engaged in her legitimate and peculiar work of making "perfect" men and women—of developing them into the "fullness of the stature of Christ."

Now, if the Bible reveals any fact clearly, it is that such a work can be done only by a diligent and persistent endeavor to educate the mind and heart in the facts narrated, and the principles inculcated, and the doctrines revealed in the Bible. The "highest style" of manhood and womanhood is reached only at the end of such an educational process. There has never been but one perfect man in this world. There has never been but one portrait drawn of him. Of all the myriad books in the world, only one has given the portraiture of his character. He is the model character, the pattern man; and if we do not hang his portrait upon the walls of our church schools and place his biography in their courses of study, do we not weaken, in some degree, our efforts to develop the true manhood and the true womanhood in our pupils? At the very time of life when the Holy Spirit, by the use of the divine Word, can make the deepest and most lasting impressions upon young hearts, if we take out of his hands his most effective instrument, do we not weaken his power and dishonor his wisdom? If we neglect to put the Bible among the books by whose teachings we are seeking to educate our children, does not that neglect discount God's Word before the world as to its educational value? In seeking to educate our children without making the Bible a constant factor from beginning to end of that process, are we not grieving the Spirit of God who gave that book to the church and commanded her to "bring up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord"?

But, lest we should run a little too fast on this line, we will ask a question or two. Have any of our readers ever seen a catalogue of any of our church schools, excepting our theological seminaries, in whose course of study the Bible holds as prominent a place as heathen books? If you have not seen such a catalogue; if it is true that in our educational institutions heathen books are more largely used than the book God has given us, does not that fact "grieve the Spirit of God" who inspired this book? Will he give his largest blessings upon our educational efforts as long as we thus discount the value of his book as an educational factor? As far as our knowledge goes, we know of but one college where the Bible is a prominent study through the whole course. In another column of this paper we give our readers an outline of its course of Bible study, taken from the Advance, of Chicago. In a letter from the president of that college, speaking of the results of their efforts to "work religion and learning into a living organism," he says: "An endless chain of spiritual forces seems to be moving here. While a spiritual life and a steady moral strength have been imparted to the whole college, some forty per cent. of our male graduates have chosen the ministry for their profession." Those results are simply what any college might expect which will thus honor the Word of God. "Them that honor me, I will honor, saith the Lord." Can any Christian in the world give a valid reason for keeping the Bible out of the course of study in our church schools?

Letter from Niagara Falls.

Mr. Editor: Finding myself within a short run of the Falls of Niagara, I determined to gratify my long-cherished desire by a visit to this great natural wonder.

Taking the train at Chicago, at four o'clock P. M., one day, at eight, the next morning, I found myself at my place of destination. An incident occurred while making this trip which forcibly reminded me of Davies' old school Arithmetic, and served as a very practical illustration of the rule of "Longitude and Time." When I awoke in the morning, I found we had stopped at London—not London on the Thames, but a considerable town in the Province of Ontario—and when I examined my watch (which, of course, is always correct), I found it to be just 3:30 o'clock; yet it was broad daylight, and people were going about their business. Why, what's the matter? Nothing at all; except I'm traveling east, and by the time in London it is five o'clock. Again, I was impressed with the embarrassment in which those who contend for an unalterably fixed day as Sabbath must necessarily be involved. On opposite sides of the globe one or the other are behind or ahead. Which? Who's to decide?

But, to my subject. The world-famed Niagara Falls, who can describe them? They utterly defy all such thought to one possessed of as little of the poetical or imaginative as your correspondent. After some reading, much hearing and much speculation, I found that I had gotten but the faintest idea of this thundering cataract. About one mile above the Falls the water begins its rapid descent, rushing with seeming fury and madness over its rugged, rocky bed of two miles or more in width, running smoothly for a distance; then, dashing itself against the great bowlders and rocky projections, which stand out here and there to impede its course, it hurries on, each wave seeming anxious to be first to make the mighty leap. These are the Rapids; and very appropriately named they are. When one stands for the first time at the edge of the Falls and sees the great mass of water as it leaps over the precipice nearly 200 feet down, he is possessed with a feeling of awe, and rather inclines to shrink back. After watching its incessant flow, and hearing its continuous roar a few minutes, he unconsciously asks the question: Where does all this water come from; how long has it been at this, and how long can it keep it up? I wonder, sir, that the Great Lakes have not been drained dry long ago, and that the sea has not been full to overflowing. I could fully appreciate the answer given by the practical son of Erin to the æsthetical college graduate. It is said the young man was so enraptured at the sight that he took hold of Pat, as it were, to wake him up, saying, "Look, look, Pat!" "Ah!" and says Pat; "what's to hinder?" So I thought what could withstand such force. I thought that all the machinery of the continent could be run by this water-power, if it could only be utilized. We are taught by these rushing waters the truth of the assertion, so far as anything practical is concerned, that you can have too much of a good thing. All the parks, islands and walks, once owned by private parties and of such annoyance to travelers, are now owned by the State of New York, and free to all. An officer keeps the grounds; and you are at liberty to go where you please. Of course, you must observe the rules which are posted about here and there. The best way to see these wonders is on foot. Hackmen would persuade you to ride, but they go too hurriedly. Anyone can walk leisurely, resting himself on the many seats stationed along every walk, and see all in one day. A good view of all points can be had from the New York side; very little of interest from the Canada side. Still they are worth seeing. The best time to visit the Falls is in early summer, as the flow of water then seems greater.

Time and the force of the water are gradually working changes. The Horseshoe Falls present now the appearance more of the letter V, and are cutting toward the American side. The famous Table Rock is rapidly breaking away, and the Old Terrapin Tower, which stood for so many years on its rocky projection, has been blown up; it having become dangerous. Unless aided, however, by some mighty upheaval or earthquake force, these beds of rock will withstand the water many thousands of years yet to come.

Below the Falls—two miles—are what are known as the Whirlpool Rapids. Here the great volume of water is compressed into a narrow, rocky gorge 200 yards wide, and 300 feet deep. As the water approaches this narrow defile, hurried on at the rate of twenty-seven miles per hour, there is a grand struggle for the mastery. As they strike against the perpendicular walls and are thrown back again upon each other, they mount up to the height of twenty to twenty-five feet—a terrific battle of waters, like two great armies meeting in a final charge for the victory. It is quite a feat to pass through these surging waters and come out safe. A few, more daring than sensible, have attempted the undertaking. Some have sunken to rise no more; others have survived to wear their shallow honors. No more wonderful are these works of nature than are the two tremendous suspension bridges, more than 800 feet from tower to tower, and bearing up heavy trains of cars. What is it that man might do, if he would only try? Fraternally,

T. H. HOLLOMAN.

In an address at Philadelphia, Canon Wilberforce, after stating the fact that France has undertaken the experiment of living without God, made the significant comment that last year there were 7,952 suicides there from chagrin, misery, and despair.

A Noteworthy Example.

In another column we make reference to a college in which the Bible is a text-book through the whole course. This is Olivet College, in Michigan, under the control of the Congregationalists. We exceedingly like this. We believe it is the right thing to do. We believe all our church schools should follow this example. Many of our wisest men have put on record the opinion that the Bible is the best educational book in the world. President Butterfield has this to say in regard to his college:

She uses the classics, the mathematics, all the regular studies of the old regime, and she offers the best facilities for training students in the natural sciences. Thus her foundations are laid, broad and deep and sure. They foreshadow a building of God, which shall be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. She would educate her sons and daughters for all callings and train them all for Christian work. The better to reach her ideal, she has lately put a vertebral column of Bible instruction into her whole seven years' course of preparatory and college study. The recitation comes Monday and is obligatory. The outline is this: The study of the Old Testament as to origin, preservation, divisions, books; the same treatment of the New; the study of the human characters in the Old Testament and the New; the study of Christ as seen in the gospels; the planting and unfolding of the Jewish Church and the Christian; the external and internal evidences of Christianity; the doctrines and the duties, with the Shorter Catechism.

Referring to this same college, the Advance, of Chicago, says:

There is this to be said of Olivet College: it has never forgotten, it has never seemed to forget, that it was meant to be a Christian school. Among all the books, and all the literatures, and all the sciences that are fitted to be used as instruments of education and culture, it has never ignored, or left any pupil to imagine that it ignored the one book, the one volume of the world's supremest knowledge. Olivet does not ask the young student, during just the years of his greatest susceptibility to impressions and at just the time when not only his ideas, but his ideals, are taking form, to pore over the cultus, the morals and the myths of heathen antiquity, and then lend him any excuse of its own for disregarding the sure revelations of the divine thought and heart and purpose. In this college, the Bible, moreover, is not only honored, but loved. And it is taught and studied, not in the corners of time and at hap-hazzard. They have there a carefully thought-out scheme of Bible study for all. It is not the so called "uniform lesson system," but one better suited to their purpose. The work of the week begins every Monday with this systematic Scripture study. All this, as a matter of course, tells on the most distinctive characters and life and power of the college.

The following is the outline referred to above:

First year—The study of the Bible in its more material form, as a part of every scholar's education. Origin, preservation, grand divisions, and subdivisions, with relations of each to the other; authors, books and relative position, with name and brief analysis of each; also a simple presentation of such questions as the term day, length of life, unity of the race, deluge, miracles, plagues, etc., to the end of founding the student in the Christian faith, rather than for the simple historical study. The analysis of books this year is confined to the Old Testament.

Second year—The same general and special work in the New Testament; together with the historical and logical connection between the Old and New Testament.

Third year—The study of the principal characters of the Old Testament in the light of the Old Dispensation; and the study of the characters of the New Testament, except Christ.

Fourth year—The study of Christ as set forth in the gospels.

Fifth year—The planting and developing of the Jewish and Christian Churches, covenants and ordinances.

Sixth year—Doctrines and external evidences of Christianity.

Seventh year—Doctrines and duties as set forth in the Old Testament and Pauline Epistles. The Shorter Catechism.

"The Priest and the Preacher; or, Information for the People."

A little tract with the above title, written by my old friend, Rev. R. Abbey, has recently been issued from our Publishing House. The occasion of its writing was a revival meeting at Bay St. Louis, a charming Mississippi town on the gulf coast, whose population is largely Roman Catholic. To answer many questions propounded by inquirers during that meeting, and remove certain prejudices and superstitions from minds unacquainted with the Scriptures, this tract was prepared. It discusses with great clearness, fairness and force the doctrines of Romanism, and in a style and compass adapted to all classes. Pastors might do much for the cause of intelligent Christianity by circulating this little tract among Roman Catholics of our towns and cities. This would be read when a more pretentious volume would be unopened. Not in so short a space have I found more valuable information for the people on the subjects treated. And surely such work is important. It is folly to send missionaries to Roman Catholic countries and neglect the priest-ridden of our own communities. This tract will open the eyes of a young Romanist too wide for a priest ever again to close them. I bespeak for it an extensive circulation.

Temperance Notes.

The Woman's Temperance Publication Association, of Chicago, was founded less than seven years ago by women, and is controlled by them. It is a joint stock company, with shares at twenty-five dollars each, which must all be held in the name of white ribboners. Its finances have so prospered that it has for the last two years declared a dividend of four per cent. the first, and five per cent. the second year.

It employs four editors, and has a total of sixty persons on its pay roll. Its types are nearly all set by women, and it published last year thirty millions of pages of temperance literature, and this year will not publish fewer than fifty millions. These cover the six divisions of the modern reform as set forth by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, namely: Prevention, Education, Evangelization, Society, Laws, Workers' Helps.

Everything useful in the forming of juvenile societies is provided: also literature with special reference to local option and constitutional amendment campaigns. The White Cross movement has a varied literature of its own from the best pens in England and America, devoted to that cause, and all of these are furnished by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association.

To the Friends of Prohibition Everywhere:

Dear Brothers and Sisters—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Texas will work vigorously for prohibition during this campaign. We will take up the work by districts, sending out speakers and literature and Loyal Legion organizers. We purpose holding many district conventions. We have 50,000 Germans in the State; they must be evangelized. There are 70,000 colored people; we must try and win them. No class will be neglected. Help us, friends, with your donations, your prayers and your money. Remember we have five large States in one. Texas gained or Texas lost, is a momentous issue.

To the Friends of Prohibition:

Dear Friends—At a recent meeting of the Executive Board of the Texas Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

So earnest and real has been the sympathy which good prohibition men and women in other States have expressed for us, we repudiate the no-outside-help theory, and will be thankful for any aid from any quarter.

Friends, aid us as generously as you can. The Brewers' Association has voted a large sum of money to fight against us. All eyes are on Texas. We feel if we do not our whole duty at this time, it will be written, "The glory is departed." Ichabod.

All donations of money should be sent to our State treasurer, Mrs. W. E. Knowles, 1016 Marille St., Dallas, will be thankfully received by her and acknowledged in the Union Signal.

ANNIE HORNER, State Cor. Sec. W. C. T. U.

DENTON, TEXAS.

Thomas Jefferson said: "Were I to commence my administration again, with the knowledge which from experience I have acquired, the first question I would ask with regard to every candidate for office would be: Is he addicted to the use of ardent spirits?"

Do you know what per cent. of our population is supported by the profits of the whisky traffic? About three million or one-twentieth of the entire population. Many of them are amassing colossal fortunes and are living in luxury and ease. What does this army of non-producers cost the country? Nine hundred million dollars! And this is the smallest item. God only knows the anguish, the woe, the wretchedness, the poverty, the crime that must be taken into the account. Will you use your influence to perpetuate this army of non-producers?—Holston Methodist.

In a good many colleges the students have organized themselves into clubs for the promotion of prohibition. These clubs are said to be quite formidable in New York and Ohio. These clubs held a National Convention in Syracuse, N. Y., last week. The augury is good when the young men go forth to battle against the saloon.

The great Illinois Central road is again to the front with a novel scheme in the way of comfortable travel. Parties can now make reasonable rates for Porter Boarding Coaches through to destination without change. Col. William Murray will take pleasure in giving facts and figures to persons desiring information; also in furnishing descriptive circulars, maps, and rates of round-trip excursion tickets for all watering-places in the northwest and Canada. He will be found daily at the office of the company, corner Canal and Carondelet.

The Alexandria District Conference will be held at Lecompte, La., beginning on Thursday, August 11, 1887.

Mississippi Notes.

Recent hail-storms have seriously damaged the crops in Noxubee county.

The people of Macon are going to erect a monument to the Confederate dead in that place.

An error was made in this column last week in regard to the Crystal Springs Camp Meeting. It begins July 28, and continues eight days, instead of July 15.

During the past week a number of the leading business men organized the First National Bank of Greenville, with a capital stock of $150,000, which will be increased an additional $100,000 the coming season.

The Southern Express Company has discontinued its office at Vicksburg.

The grand jury, at the recent term of circuit court in Yazoo county, returned only twenty true bills.

The number of spindles in the East Mississippi Cotton Mills has been increased to 1,500.

The Natchez Water Works Company have purchased a site for a stand-pipe and begun work on the foundation. It will not be long before the work of laying pipes begins.

The mill-men at Moss Point have issued a circular to the Knights of Labor, notifying them that hereafter they will run their mills "from 6 A. M. to 6 P. M., allowing one hour at noon; wages to remain the same, and no distinction will be made against the Knights of Labor." It is hoped that the strike will be declared off, and that business will be resumed at once.

The charter for the First National Bank of Greenville has been approved by Gen. Catchings, and has been forwarded to Washington.

"Christ Before Pilate."

Munkacsy's great picture of "Christ Before Pilate"—a perfect copy on steel of the original picture, which has just been sold for one hundred thousand dollars. For sale by subscription only.

Louisiana Notes.

The police jury of Lafayette parish have decided to build an iron bridge over Bayou Vermilion.

Charbon is still spreading rapidly in St. Charles parish.

The crops of East Carroll parish are at least three or four weeks ahead of last season at this time, and in much better condition to stand the rains than then. The corn crops are virtually made, and bid fair for an abundant yield.

Crops in Bossier parish look fine, but the incessant rains have caused grassy cotton; but, with the fine weather now prevailing, the farmers will soon get their crops clean.

Reports from Pointe-a-la-Hatch say that the salt water has receded from the overflowed rice plantations; but unless there is rain very soon, or fresh water can be pumped on the lands, the rice crop will be a total failure.

The mail messenger service from Sabine Station, Calcasieu parish, to Louisiana Western railroad, has been ordered discontinued from June 23.

It is expected that the railroad between Covington and Arbita will be completed in a week.

The 2,600 Horse Cars that pass the famous United States Hotel, in Boston, come from and go to every part of "the Hub" and its most elegant suburbs. For a short or long vacation one can get more for their money there than anywhere else.

Uncle Sam has a good deal of trouble with his money. Money is a great trouble anyhow. If you have a great deal, it troubles you to know what to do with it; and if you have none, how to get it causes a sight of trouble. Here is what is said about Uncle Sam counting his money:

The counting of the money in the Treasury vaults will occupy seventy-five persons for nearly two months, during which they will count $137,000,000 in currency in the reserve and $95,000,000 in the cash vaults, $60,000,000 in standard silver dollars, $25,000,000 in gold, and some $3,000,000 or more in smaller coin, a trifle of $320,000,000.

KENNESAW ROUTE.

East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad.

The old reliable Kennesaw is the most desirable summer route, as it passes through the mountains nearly all the way to Washington City, crossing the Blue Ridge and Alleghany Mountains in daylight. Double daily trains and fast time. This is the only line running Pullman Buffett Sleepers through from New Orleans to Washington City without change. Excursion tickets are now on sale. Cabon Ticket Office, 146 Common St., under St. Charles Hotel.

IMMENSE BARGAINS.—The great piano dealer, Philip Werlein, 125 Canal St., is now offering some of the greatest bargains in pianos and organs. This popular merchant means business, and he has put prices of pianos and organs down so low as to put them within the reach of all. You will be astonished to see what money can be saved by dealing at this popular house. Indeed, it is a source of pleasure to have dealings with such a house as that of Philip Werlein. Now, that the prices have been reduced, and terms offered are so convenient, every one will avail himself of the opportunity. Write to Mr. Werlein for catalogues and prices.

There are two titles in this country—the Electoral Count and Sir Plus. Several European monarchies would like to have the latter.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

Dyspepsia Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Rheumatism Is undoubtedly a blood disease caused by an excess of the lactic acid in the blood. Where there is perfect filtration of the blood there can be no rheumatism. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA will remove the poison, supply the acids and relieve the pains.

Scrofula is caused directly by impurities in the blood, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, by purifying the blood, forces the impurities from the system.

Kidneys Through the Kidneys flow the waste fluid containing poisonous matter. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing pain in the small of the back and loins, flushes of heat, chills. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic, causing the kidneys to resume their natural functions.

The Liver By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood resolvent.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It has now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the best foreign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of destroying the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and parents are most frequently the cause of these hidden rappers and robbers. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing it, become flet, loosing restlessly in deep, grinding and grinding the teeth. Then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from infancy to old age, therefore parents see [illegible] with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge. Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it, and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children in a state of paralysis, and suppressing the cause of the illness, as large quantities of worms were discharged, and immediate relief afforded. Every bottle is covered by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The directions are plain and not ambiguous. He must look closely and carefully, to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., Mo.

Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your Vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.

Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

JAMBRIDGE, MD.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. H. LANDY, M. D.

MY GOOD-FOR-NOTHING.

BY EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

What are you good for, my brave little man?
Answer that question, if you can;
You, with your fingers as white as a nun;
You, with your ringlets as bright as the sun!
All the day long with your busy contriving,
Into all mischief and fun you are driving;
See if your wise little noddle can tell
What you are good for. Now, ponder it well!

Over the carpet the dear little feet
Came with a patter to climb on my seat;
Two merry eyes, full of frolic and glee,
Under their lashes looked up into me;
Two little hands, pressing soft on my face,
Drew me down close in a loving embrace;
Two rosy lips gave the answer so true,
"Good to love you, mamma: good to love you."

Instead of the usual batch of young folks' letters, the editor gives the little cousins a story, which he hopes will both interest and instruct them.

Reliable.

BY SIDNEY DAYRE.

"Yes, they all say that Fred is a very bright boy," said Fred's mother, speaking to her brother, who, just arrived on a visit, had not seen her children for several years.

"And is not Will bright, too?" he asked.

"Well, I can't say that he is at all like his brother," was the reply. "Of course I do not mean that he is deficient in ordinary ability, but he is very different from Fred. He is not, indeed, at all like the rest of the family, as you will soon perceive."

Uncle Harlow did perceive that his nephews were very unlike, and was at first inclined to agree with their mother that the difference was entirely in Fred's favor. He was quick and bright in all his doings, ready to make himself agreeable to everybody, and always ready to go out of his way to oblige. And it was evident that his talents were of no mean order. For a leading part in any small entertainment, for a recitation or a song, Fred was sure to be chosen; he was so quick in learning and so brilliant in rendering.

"Yes, it is a great pity that Will is so slow," said his mother. "Fred can toss off his lessons so easily that they are never burdensome to him, and he has plenty of time for other things. But Will has to study hard to acquire anything."

"Is he, then, far behind Fred, for his age?" asked his uncle.

"Well, now that I think of it, he is not. And, if I remember rightly, he has never missed in his examinations. But he plods and plods—so different from Fred."

So different from Fred. It seemed a keynote of complaint in the family. No one had any other fault to find with Will, but it seemed to be an accepted fact that he was laboring under a misfortune.

"I have quite a walk planned for to-day," said Uncle Harlow to the boys one Saturday morning. "A tramp over the hill and down by the way of the mills and factories, which I wish to visit. I should like to have your company, if you can go."

"I should be delighted, thank you, Uncle Harlow," said Fred, springing up with his usual alacrity.

"I should like it very much, thank you, sir," said Will, "but you know, Fred, we undertook to cut old Gurley's wood this morning."

"Well, what of that?" said Fred, lightly. "Any other time will do as well, won't it?"

"Perhaps so, but we promised," said Will.

"Just like you, Will," said Fred, impatiently. "You can only hold about one idea in your head at a time, and it sticks like a burr."

"But," went on Fred, "what difference will it make when we cut old Gurley's wood, so it is done before cold weather. I'll be glad to go with you, uncle."

Will took his hat and said good morning.

"I think," said Uncle Harlow, quietly, "that as your brother is engaged, we will defer our walk until a time when he can go."

Fred grumbled discontentedly as he followed Will, and felt a little contempt for his uncle for regarding the whims of such a slow poke, as he chose to call his brother.

"I want Will to harness the horse for me," said his mother as she went for a drive. "Fred will do it faster, but I always feel so sure everything is right when Will does it."

"It is a great recommendation to a boy," observed Uncle Harlow, "to be able to feel sure that what he does is done well."

"Oh, yes," said mother; we can all say that for poor Will. He is slow, but we can depend upon him."

"Can you do a few errands for me this afternoon, boys?" asked their uncle.

"I can, sir," said Fred with his accustomed readiness.

"Will it do in an hour, sir?" asked Will. "Father told me to do some weeding in the garden, and he'll expect to see it done."

"The weeding can wait just as well as not, but that's just the way with Will," said Fred in a tone as of pitying condescension for a weakness. "He's bound to stick to his own idea, you see! But you certainly are not overpolite to Uncle Harlow, Will."

"No letters for me?" said Uncle Harlow, as the mail-carrier passed the house. "It is time I was hearing from some important letter—the ones I gave you to mail for me last week, Fred."

"Dear me!" exclaimed Fred, a blank expression spreading over his face. "I don't believe I mailed them, uncle. I mean—I know I didn't. I forgot to."

"Where are they?" asked his uncle, coldly.

"They are—I believe they are in the pocket of the coat I wore that day."

He rushed to his room, returning soon with a look of still greater dismay.

"It was the day I got wet in the creek," he said, holding out some sorry-looking letters, with moldy envelopes and blurred addresses. "I'm sorry, Uncle Harlow. Will it make any trouble for you?"

"Possibly not," he answered, "if I can reach New York by to-day's train. I must hurry off."

Fred was profuse in his apologies and offers of assistance. His uncle had little time to listen to the first, and to his great mortification the second were set aside and those of his brother accepted instead; this being an emergency in which Will's idea of a faithful performance of duty allowed him to defer his father's work. The sudden departure was a cause of great regret to all, but a continuance of Uncle Harlow's visit was hoped for until the following letter came, which mother read aloud:

"My dear sister: I regret very much to say that I shall be unable to return to finish my visit to you, through some extra business having arisen—"

"Too bad!" interrupted Fred.

"Yes," said his mother in rather a severer tone than she was in the habit of using towards Fred. "And it makes it worse that the loss should have occurred through your negligence."

"Such a fuss to make about the mailing of a letter," groaned Fred, he being unused to reproof and receiving it with a bad grace. His mother went on:

"Which will detain me until my return to Europe.

"I have a proposition to make which may surprise you. Can I borrow one of your boys for a year? It is, I know, a serious thing to interrupt study for so long, but it would be for the purpose of giving me some slight assistance in business matters, and it would be a year of travel which I can not help thinking would fully compensate for the loss—"

"Hurrah! hurrah!" shouted Fred, springing to his feet and dancing with delight. "Travel for a year—in Europe! Of course you'll let me go, mother?" His mother read on:

"There are many older boys who would be glad of the opportunity, but I have kept my eyes open and feel sure that the steadiness of character, the eye single to the faithful performance of duty, and, in short, the general trustworthiness, if I may call it so, of your son Will, render him—"

"Will!" exclaimed Fred, in an explosion of amazement and dismay.

"Render him all I could desire in a boy. So, if he and you are willing, I trust we shall spend a pleasant year together."

"The idea of anybody wanting to take Will instead of me!" went on Fred, unable to conceal his anger and astonishment.

"Indeed, it is not to be wondered at," said his mother. "I am sure it was time that some one was perceiving that Will's conscientious regard for the duty which lies next him was appreciated. It has taken your Uncle Harlow to find out what he really is, and the treat he is to have is fairly won."

Fred did not at once cease to express his contempt for Uncle Harlow's judgment, but the lesson was a severe one, and in time worked its natural effect upon his vanity and self-conceit. —Interior.

Farm and Home.

HOME MANNERS.—American men respect women in the highest sense and treat them with all the civility possible, so far as immunity from insult is concerned. The national character of the American man in this respect is above reproach. But are they at home amiable and polite? Do they treat their wives and daughters or their mothers with constant and daily and proper politeness? Are American women models in this respect? Do they remember to be grateful and polite in little matters of salutations and of compliment? Are they careful to consume their own smoke, and to bring only an amiable face to the dinner-table? We are afraid not. The national home manners need improving. The amenities of home can alone make up for the national disadvantage. It is at the home dinner-table, by the hearthstone, the evening fire side, in the nursery, the bed-room and the sick-room, that manners must be taught. We can not count upon outside influences for our children. Home first, and home always, must be to them what the external world is to the ignorant foreigners. There every institution teaches him by the iron bands of power and custom to be respectful. If he dares to be otherwise, he is an outlaw and a criminal.—Appleton's Home Series.

WHY SOME PEOPLE ARE POOR.—Silver spoons are used to scrape kettles. Coffee, tea, pepper and spices are left to stand open and lose their strength. Potatoes in the cellar grow, and the sprouts are not removed until the potatoes become worthless. Brooms are never hung up, and are soon spoiled. Nice handled knives are thrown into hot water. The flour is sifted in a wasteful manner, and the bread-pan is left with the dough sticking to it. Clothes are left on the line to whip to pieces in the wind. Tubs and barrels are left in the sun to dry and fall apart. Dried fruits are not taken care of in season, and become wormy. Rags, string and paper are thrown into the fire. Pork spoils for want of salt, and beef because the brine wants scalding. Bits of meat, vegetables, bread and cold puddings are thrown away, when they might be warmed, steamed and served as good as new.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH OUR SONS?—Give them a good education. Teach them to be brave, strong and true. Teach them to respect women and treat them as their equals. Teach them to be pure in thought, deed and action, to despise meanness and falsehood. Teach them to be self-supporting and ashamed of idleness. Show them the way to love nature, to love the sunshine, exercise in the fresh air and honorable work. Teach them to spend their evening at home or in good society, and never go into the haunts of vice and sin. Teach them all the virtues, none of the vices, and they will, when you are old and ready to depart, rise up and call you blessed.

HOT WATER FOR SPRAINS.—Hot water is the best thing that can be used to heal a sprain or bruise. The wounded part should be placed in water as hot as can be borne for fifteen or twenty minutes, and in all ordinary cases the pain will gradually disappear. Hot water applied by means of cloths is a sovereign remedy for neuralgia and pleurisy pains. For burns or scalds apply cloths well saturated with cool alum water, keeping the injured parts covered from the air.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Why You Feel

So weak and exhausted is because your blood is impure. As we expect the sanitary condition of a city to be perfect with defiled water and defective sewerage; as to expect such a complicated piece of mechanism as the human frame to be in good order with impure blood circulating even to its minutest veins. Do you know that every drop of your two or three gallons of blood passes through the heart and lungs in about two and a half minutes, and that, on its way, it makes bone and muscle, brain and nerve, and all other solids and fluids of the body? The blood is the great nourisher, or, as the Bible terms it,

"The Life of the Body."

Is it any wonder, then, that if the blood be not pure and perfect in its constituents, you suffer so many indescribable symptoms?

Ayer's Sarsaparilla stands "head and shoulders" above every other Alterative and Blood Medicine. As proof, read these reliable testimonies:

G. C. Brock, of Lowell, Mass., says: "For the past 25 years I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In my opinion, the best remedial agencies for the cure of all the diseases arising from impurities of the blood are contained in this medicine."

Eugene L. Hill, M. D., 381 Sixth Ave., New York, says: "As a blood-purifier and general builder-up of the system, I have never found anything to equal Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It gives perfect satisfaction."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla proves equally efficacious in all forms of Scrofula, Boils, Carbuncles, Eczema, Humors, Lumbago, Catarrh, &c.; and is, therefore, the very best

Spring and Family Medicine in use. "It heals all," says Mr. Cutler, of Cutler Brothers & Co., Boston, "how does sell." Prepared by ENOCHS—Died, at her home in Copiah county, Miss., on Sunday, May 22, 1887, MRS. REBECCA JANE ENOCHS (nee Black), and sister of Dr. W. C. Black, of Mississippi Conference. Deceased was born in Copiah county, December 22, 1833; married to J. F. Enochs, February 15, 1849, to whom she has borne ten sons—eight of whom are living—and one daughter. Our departed sister's Christian experience and church connection dates back to the days of childhood. But in 1851, at Sinai Camp Meeting, in Rankin county, she made a public consecration of her life, with its wifehood and motherhood, and received the testimony of the real presence of the Spirit in her heart that has been the strength, the light, and joy of her life, as, placing her hand in that of the good Father, she has marked the line his Word has shown her feet—the way to the "beautiful gate," which she found ajar for her to "pass through." Though naturally timid and reticent, she has ever been bold in word and work, just in proportion as the emergencies of duty demanded, and whether in the great congregation, in her Sunday-school class, or the social circle, she has ever been bold to maintain the glory of the cross and honor of the Savior's name.

A little more than a week before she left us, as her pastor, I was summoned to her bedside. She had several times during the night expressed a desire to talk to us all of the Lord's mercy and faithfulness to her; but her nurses, desiring to economize all her vitality, had put her off till 3 o'clock in the morning, when, thinking the end at hand, she was given permission to talk. The family were called in. She asked that her teeth be put in her mouth, that she might articulate easily, and then said, that "this was the third time she was brought to the door of death; but God had thus far left her to family and her work; but if now her work was done, she was ready to pass through." One by one, she called her children around her, and gave to each her dying charge and admonitions, leaving messages for the absent; then her aged mother received her words of encouragement, and finally, with pitying love, she administered words of consoling love to her weeping husband, and exhortations to faithfulness and patient endurance in the way in which they, hand in hand, had walked for nearly forty years. She then turned over her class in Sunday-school to one of her sons, with admonitions to him, and messages to them; next she nominated her successor, as president of the Woman's Missionary Society, which responsible post she had held since its organization, consoling herself with the expression that, "though the workmen die, God still will carry on his work." She then turned to me, and said, that now her work was done; that it was not done till she had borne this testimony to the sure foundations of Christian experience. Then said, with a heavenly radiance on her face, "I am now ready to pass through" (through the shadow only). Then she asked that her favorite song be sung—"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord." She lingered a short while, when her soul passed triumphantly to the home of God's people.

Mourning ones, you shall meet her again if, like her, you are faithful to the end.

G. BANCROFT.

WOOD—ALFRED BELDON WOOD was born in Sunderland, England, October 16, 1865; was baptized into the Protestant Episcopal Church in infancy; came to America with his parents, when seven years old; professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Hernando, Miss., in 1885. Piously inclined from his childhood, he had the love and confidence of the church before he joined. Soon after he joined he was made a steward and served one year. He was then in feeble health, and left home in search of a place where he might regain his health. He tried Southern Mississippi, Virginia and Texas. He came home from San Antonio, Texas, in February last, to die. He had failed to find a balm for his wasting lungs. This did not make him sorrowful. He had tried all he could to prolong his life for his mother's sake and the church's; and now, when he realized that God willed otherwise, he was ready and happy. He leaves a loving mother, a sister and brothers who feel that no family ever buried a nobler, better boy. They and we are bereft, but "palms of victory" are his. JNO. W. BELL, Pastor.

BRADFORD—ALICE A. BRADFORD, infant daughter of Mr. R. J. and Mrs. M. A. Lucas, was baptized September 15, and ended her brief life, April 9, 1887. This bright little mayflower won our love, and seemed to be sent on a mission of love to draw the fond hearts of the stricken parents heavenward. We bowed in submission, and laid her away beneath the cedars in the family burial-ground. May the breeze sigh softly, the flowers bloom in beauty and droop in graceful tendrils over the sacred dust of the lovely Alice. AUNTIE.

MCKNIGHT—MRS. MATTIE E. MCKNIGHT, daughter of Rev. James B. and Susan W. McCutcheon, was born April 18, 1858; left motherless at about twelve years of age, and was taken by her mother's brother, and his excellent Christian wife to raise—Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Barnett, of Iuka, Miss.—who did a good part by her in every way. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1871, under the ministry of Rev. J. C. Low. October 21, 1880, she was married to C. W. McKnight.

She passed away from her home in Memphis, May 3, 1887. Her illness was of short duration, and she was hardly conscious during the time—hence there was little said about dying; but, judging from her life and repeated testimony during health, she was ready when the summons came. For several years she has been a child of affliction, but she bore it as a soldier of the cross. It was her desire and aim to do something for the cause of Christ. She loved the church and was distressed that her health would not admit of her doing more for it. I never knew anyone that seemed to feel their unworthiness more than she; but those who knew her inner life found that she possessed the qualities of a genuine Christian woman. She realized the truth of the Scripture—"Godliness with contentment is great gain." She came as near being contented under all circumstances as anyone I ever knew. J. H. MITCHELL.

There is a great difference between worrying over our imperfections and bewailing our weaknesses and reaching out boldly with all our concentrated faculties of mind and soul to that which is before. We are not called on to reconstruct the past, but to make the future what it ought to be and may be. And since we have the promise of God's help at every step, there is no reason whatever why one should not go forward with a joyful heart. To live for Christ is to enter into the possession of new spiritual life.—Central Christian Advocate.

She scolds and frets,
She's full of pets,
She's rarely kind and tender;
The thorn of life
Is a fretful wife—
I wonder what will mend her?

Try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Ten to one your wife is cross and fretful because she is sick and suffering, and can not control her nervousness when things go wrong. Make a healthy woman of her and the chances are you will make a cheerful and pleasant one. "Favorite Prescription" is the only remedy for woman's peculiar ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper. Large bottles, $1. Six for $5.

What we need is not an annual yeasty effervescence, but the leaven hidden in the meal twelve months in the year.—Dr. W. S. Apsey.

"Not Balk, but Business!"

is the way a Western man put it in expressing to a friend his complete satisfaction in the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. So small and yet so effectual, they bid fair to supplant entirely the old-style pill. An ever-ready remedy for Sick and Bilious Headache, Biliousness, Constipation and all blood disorders. Mild in action, wonderful in effect! Put up in vials, convenient to carry. Their use attended with no discomfort! These sterling merits account for their great popularity.

He that can feast upon another's misery, vexation or disappointment, has a most unhealthy soul.

WEST BROOK, NORTH CAROLINA, Sept. 6, 1886.

DR. A. T. SHALLENBERGER, Rochester, Pa.

Dear Sir—The two boxes of Pills you sent me did everything you said they would. My son was the victim of Malaria, deep-set, by living in Florida two years, and the Antidote has done more than five hundred dollars' worth of other medicines could have done for him. I have had one of my neighbors try the medicine, and it cured him immediately. I now recommend it to every one suffering from Malaria.

Respectfully yours,
W. W. MONROE.

News Summary.

JUNE 14.

Ex-Secretary W. E. Chandler was elected United States Senator from New Hampshire.——The Supreme Court of Louisiana met at Monroe.——The Louisiana Press Convention met at Lake Charles.——The Chicago wheat clique were driven to the wall, and a heavy decline in prices created a panic on the Board of Trade. July fell 10 1/2 cents, and June 20 cents. Three grain houses in Milwaukee engulfed in the crash. Several Chicago firms caught.——The Saturday Review says: "The American Exposition may be considered remarkable, as it has received no assistance from the government of the United States; yet it bids fair to prosper and take a place among the great exhibitions at South Kensington."——M. Ristico, the new premier of Servia, is a strong pro-Russian sympathizer. His elevation is considered a check to Austria and a gain to Russia in the Balkans.——A terrible hail-storm in the Balkans ruined the crops and destroyed many lives.

JUNE 15.

The jubilee festivities began in London.——The evictions at Bodyke were finished to-day. The tenants are in the direst poverty.——A small force of Cuban soldiers had a fight with the band of Chalgo Ronuro, killing that famous bandit.——The Queen, in commemoration of her jubilee, will grant amnesty to all military and naval prisoners convicted of minor offenses.——Attorney General Garland issued an order fixing the compensation of assistant district attorneys employed at fixed salaries, for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next, at the rate of 20 per cent. less than now paid.

JUNE 16.

Reports from Hawaii are to the effect that an uprising of the Chinese is imminent; the royal palace is fortified and prepared for a siege, and that the king is constantly attended by his bodyguard.——A fever, called the Sardinian, and said to be somewhat similar to yellow fever, is epidemic at Guaymas, Mexico. A late arrival from there, at Nogales, Arizona, says he noted as many as twelve funerals in one day.——Emperor William is better.——Three more cases of fever at Key West.

JUNE 17.

In the House of Commons when the hour for voting on the Crimes Bill arrived the Parnellites arose and left the House, refusing to vote.——James G. Blaine and family reached London.——The Kings of Greece and Denmark arrived in London to participate in jubilee celebrations.——On his arrival at Queenstown Editor O'Brien received an ovation.——The Hawaiian consul general at London denies the stories of a revolt against the King of Hawaii.——The steamer Champlain, of the North Michigan Line, burned on Lake Michigan at midnight. The rapid progress of the flames forced the passengers to leap in the lake. Many lives lost and a number of persons unaccounted for.

JUNE 18.

The guests are gathering in London for the jubilee celebration. The Marquis of Salisbury, at the Queen's command, has requested Mr. Phelps, United States Minister, to attend the palace on Monday to deliver President Cleveland's jubilee congratulation.——The French Chamber of Deputies has passed the clause of the Army Bill, making it the duty of every Frenchman to perform military duty.——The floods in Hungary are subsiding. Fifteen hundred farmers are totally ruined, and the entire damage is estimated at $5,000,000.——While a party of 250 persons were crossing the Dambe river, near Paks, the boat was caught in a hurricane and capsized. Only a few of the party were saved. Over 100 bodies have been recovered.——Another train robbery on the Southern Pacific road near San Antonio.

JUNE 19.

A riot occurred during a jubilee celebration at Liverpool between a party of Orangemen and a crowd of socialists.——The Superior Council of War has approved Gen. Ferrons' army forms.——Emperor William is improving slowly.——Three new cases of fever and three deaths at Key West during the last twenty-four hours.——It is universally conceded that President Cleveland will tender to Secretary Lamar the vacant seat on the Supreme Bench, and that it will be accepted. Senator Pugh will probably be his successor.

JUNE 20.

Later particulars show that the recent ferry accident at Paks, on the Danube, was much worse than was at first reported. The boat was fearfully overloaded, having 400 persons on board. It is stated that the boatmen were intoxicated. It is thought 300 were drowned.——Earthquakes were felt in Smyrna and the Island of Scio.——Minister Phelps waited on Queen Victoria and presented President Cleveland's letter of congratulation. The Crown Prince of Germany is in London attending the jubilee celebration.——The governor of West Virginia has issued a certificate of election to the United States Senate to Mr. Faulkner.

The local day train over the Mississippi Valley Route has been renewed. We hope soon to report that the local mails will be sent out on this train. Arrangements have been perfected by the management for through trains to Kansas City, and all northwestern points of importance. The transfer is made at Memphis with dispatch.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post-paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

Prophylaxile in Sickness.

"Typhoid Fever has broken out here again, but wherever Darbys Prophylactic Fluid has been freely used there has been no fever."—M. B. LANCASTER, P. M., Ed. Central Alabamian.

"The Fluid is not merely a deodorizer, but a disinfectant—a destroyer of the disease germs in an atmosphere which can not be breathed without danger."—NEW YORK EVENING POST.

"Life and Labors of William H. Watkins, D. D.," will be sent to any address as a premium for two new subscribers accompanied by the cash, or for four renewals with cash.

For Rickets, Marasmus, and Wasting Disorders of Children,

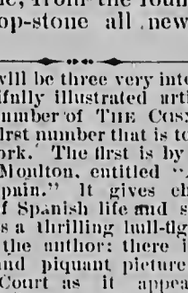
Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is unequaled. The rapidity with which children gain flesh and strength upon it is very wonderful. Read the following: "I have used Scott's Emulsion in cases of Rickets and Marasmus of long standing, and have been more than pleased with the results, as in every case the improvement was marked."—J. M. MAIN, M. D., New York.

Conversion is no repairing of the old building; but it takes all down and erects a new structure. The sincere Christian is quite a new fabric, from the foundation to the top-stone all new.—Alleine.

THERE will be three very interesting and beautifully illustrated articles in the July number of THE COSMOPOLITAN, the first number that is to appear in New York. The first is by Louise Chandler Moulton, entitled "A Lazy Tour in Spain." It gives charming glimpses of Spanish life and scenery; it describes a thrilling bull-fight witnessed by the author: there is also a lively and piquant picture of the Spanish Court as it appeared at this entertainment. Charles C. Welman has a beautifully illustrated article on "Monte Carlo: Its Games and Gamesters." He spent several weeks at this well-known place and had unsurpassed opportunities for making himself familiar with all its attractive as well as unattractive phases. His description of the games is lucid, and his account of the people that he saw at the tables bright and interesting. Mr. F. G. Carpenter's illustrated article on Royal Signatures will be read with much interest. The new address of THE COSMOPOLITAN is 29 Park Row.

I distinguish a man that is absent because he thinks of something else, from him that is absent because he thinks of nothing.—Addison.

ROYAL



BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and can not be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1887 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (thirteenth), July, 1887.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds. Several distinguished preachers invited from a distance will be in attendance and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. A very general expression having been made to continue the meeting for a longer session than usual, it has been determined to extend the time of the services of the camp meeting to two weeks.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.; W. Otis, W. J. Heerin, R. E. Jones, Mobile, Ala.; J. A. Flowers, Rolling, Ala.; Dr. E. F. Griffin, Moss Point; J. P. Carter, Hattiesburg, Miss.; W. H. Foster, E. P. Mackie, J. H. Campman, R. O. L. Rayne, T. J. Carver, H. Jamieson, Jr., P. Werlein, H. Haag, New Orleans, La.; or H. E. Price, the keeper of the camp ground, near Biloxi, Miss.

Round-trip rates, over Louisville and Nashville road, from Athens, Ala., $10 25; Birmingham, $9 25; Montgomery, $6 50; Greenville, $5 90; Evergreen, $4 80; Pollard, $3 50; Bay Minette, $2 90; and all stations between these points at corresponding rates. Tickets will be on sale from July 11 to 23. Mobile, $2; St. Elmo, $1 70; Grand Bay, $1 50; Scranton, 90 cents; Pass Christian, 80 cents; Bay St. Louis, $1; New Orleans, $2 50. Tickets on sale from July 12 to 27; good to return to July 31.

The rates for the round trip over the Illinois Central from all stations as far north as Canton will be four cents per mile. Tickets on sale July 12 to 21, and limited to July 31.

The rates over the Mobile and Ohio from all stations as far north as Corinth will be four cents per mile for the round trip. Tickets on sale from the eleventh to the twenty-third; good to return to thirty-first.

The public are invited to attend.

W. H. FOSTER, Pres.

HUGH JAMIESON, JR., Sec.
NEW ORLEANS, May 16, 1887.

The second annual camp meeting for 1887 on Sam Jones Camp Ground will commence on the last Friday, August 26, 1887. The camp ground is beautifully situated, surrounded by mountainous scenery, and as fine ice cold springs as ever sought its level. The ground is situated on the L., N. O. & T. R. R.—commonly called Valley Route—146 miles from New Orleans, and ninety miles from Vicksburg; and the hotel and tabernacle are within a stone's throw of the railroad. All ministers of the gospel friendly to camp meetings are invited. The meeting will be continued ten or twelve days. The accommodations are large, and large additions will be made, and the accommodations will be sufficient for all who may come. Reduced rates of fare will be published later.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. F. Cassels, Dr. J. R. Willingham, A. J. Roberts, W. G. Longmire or J. K. Cobb, Gloster, Miss.

The public are invited to attend.

A. J. ROBERTS, Pres.
J. F. CASSELS, Sec.

The sixteenth annual camp meeting for 1887 of Hemingford Camp Ground, near Crystal Springs, Copiah county, Miss., will begin on Thursday night, July 28, 1887, and continue eight days. This camp ground is situated on the Illinois Central railroad, 158 miles from New Orleans, and twenty-six miles from Jackson, Miss.

Ample accommodations will be made on reasonable terms for all visitors.

The ticket system will be preserved.

Reduced rates on the railroads are being secured.

All ministers friendly to camp meetings, with the public, are invited to attend.

J. W. M'NEIL, Sec.

A SEA-SHORE SERMON.

The tide rolls up—the rippling, sunny tide;
The tossing waves throw diamonds to the sun;
They laugh about the gray old rocks, and fill
The air with breezy vigor as they run.

The tide rolls out; the clouds hang dark and chill,
And sadness creeps along the sea and shore;
The dripping rocks stand silent and alone,
Like solemn ghosts of days that are no more.

O life! How sweet thou art when tides flow in!
When skies are bright, and health is in the ale;
When sunny waves cover the weary sands,
And radiant hope laughs gaily at despair!

Yet sure as life there comes the ebbing tide,
When joy and hope flow backward from the shore,
And dreary wastes, and dull and solemn ghosts,
Come in the place of the bright days of yore.

O weary heart, look upward to that shore
Where hope is lost in sight that's never dim;
There only is assurance, rest and peace,
For there forever does the tide flow in.

On the Train.

BY MRS. L. CRARY SAYLER.

A telegram received at ten A. M., May 28, calling the writer to the bedside of a sick daughter, rendered it necessary to make a trip to New Orleans, and thence to the Mississippi Valley, on the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas railroad. Night, with her sable curtain, as if in sympathy to the sad traveler, shut out the sights along the road, and "nature's sweet restorer" banished care awhile from the mind. Sleep is a blessing, even such as one gets on a lightning railroad train. After asking God to let his "everlasting arms be around about me," and feeling that I was as near heaven there as at home, I was consoled enough to close my eyes and rest, knowing that he that neither sleepeth or slumbereth was keeping watch. Only twice did I remember of realizing the situation. When upon awaking the third time, and, looking out the window, I saw the "dawn on the hills was misty and gray," and I was soon en rapport with the strange sights to be seen, I seemed to have found the place where the "wilderness blossomed as the rose, and the hills skipped like rams." As far as the eye could reach on either side there were hills and vales, and fields teeming with the promise of a bountiful harvest. I could scarcely decide, in the hasty glimpse I had of the fertility of this wondrous soil, which was king—corn or cotton. The scenes that came and vanished like a dream were soothing, even to a troubled heart. On the steep hill-sides, where one could scarcely believe that a man could stand or walk, were the marks of where the plow had been, and the green blades of the golden grain were waving, or the branches of the graceful cotton were spreading, showing that there, too, the mule, the horse, or the oxen, man's faithful allies, had cast up the furrow and wound around those slippery places, that the earth might yield its treasures for the good of man. "O, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"

At the stations all was life and bustle. It being Sunday morning, "our brothers and sisters in black" were on the go also, and their sunshiny faces bespoke the peace within. Their happiness in being able to dress and travel like their pale-faced neighbors is transparent, if their skin is opaque. They rejoice and enjoy their liberty; and one, at least, of their fellow-travelers "rejoiced with those that rejoice." Very likely they thank God for the privilege of Sunday travel, for not many of them can go at other times; and how can even Christians that deplore Sunday travel wait for Monday to come when "delays are dangerous?"—when waiting over a day might make one too late to receive the last sad, loving look, or farewell of some loved one dying away from the home-fold? But he who is "touched with our infirmities and afflictions" was good to us, and our loved one was spared to us in answer to prayers in her behalf:

A lady, with two little children, that boarded the train forty miles below Vicksburg, was so chatty and pleasant we struck up quite an acquaintance. Her name was Reed, and her husband was a relative of Bro. Railway Jones, of Vicksburg, late of Moss Point, Miss. He was a great preacher, and Bro. Mounger (also a relative, I understood) was likewise. She was a Methodist, and so we were sisters. When told of the occasion of my Sunday traveling, and the unceasing prayers that went up from my heart, she said, "God would surely hear and answer such prayers as those, and spare the loved one." When Vicksburg was in sight, we two, that never saw or heard each other before, parted as old friends, each asking blessings on the other, knowing that our paths would meet again some time at the beautiful gate.

Vicksburg! How many memories came trooping up in our mind's eye at the sight of that place. Vicksburg! There rolled the old "Father of Waters." There stood the high hills covered with massive brick buildings. The same steep streets that look almost formidable to one just from the level pine lands of Louisiana. Vicksburg!—yes, that was the place that my youthful feet first trod the green-sward of this "Sunny Southland." There from the beautiful floating palace, the staunch "Eldorado," I, with my father, mother and two brothers, landed in the years agone. Leaving the ice and snow in our Northern home, we took up our abode among the roses and lilies and warm hearts of this delightsome Southland. Father, mother and two brothers have crossed over the river to the shining shore, and, after many days and many wanderings from Texas to Florida, through and around the intervening States, here I was back at the same place alone. No, not alone, for "Jesus has begun with me, and he still is with me;

And he says he will go with me to the end."

Vicksburg! While waiting at the depot on the continuous travel-car, I could imagine how it looked at that memorable siege, when those stubborn gunboats refused to go, and the watchword was, "Fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer." My heart sickened at the thought of what I had heard, known and read of those "times that tried men's (and women's) souls," and I fain would have blotted this page from memory's book; but I could not. The annals on that dark page were too real to be forgotten entirely, for in that memorable struggle one brother was chaplain in the Northern army, and one a soldier in the army of his adopted country. There they met each other, and neither knew it; but were spared to learn it after the "conquered banner" was furled for aye. When will nations learn the art of peace?

Right here in this beautiful valley is a good place to begin to make "plowshares of swords." From what I have heard of this wonderful soil, one might think they could use the swords without the "beating" process, for I was told that one man raised a crop of cotton with no implement but an ax. He chopped a hole, and planted cotton the first year, and made a good crop.

It is really wonderful to see corn and cotton growing finely where a few months ago the big trees and the cane held undisputed possession. These fertile vales are fast being reclaimed from the wilds of nature. Here, indeed, one has only to "tickle the earth with a hoe, and it will laugh with a harvest." And here also, as Bishop Keener used to say, is "a good place to stop."

Letter from Japan.

MR. EDITOR: I have only time to write you a few lines. I have just returned home after an absence of nearly a month, every day of which has been full of work. On the eighth of May I baptized twelve persons in Hiroshima, and organized a Methodist Church of fourteen members the same day in that city. On the twelfth I baptized one person—a widow lady in Iwakenin, thirty miles from Hiroshima; and twenty miles further we met with great encouragement. A week before that an urgent call came to us from Shonbara, up in the mountains, in a northeasterly direction from Hiroshima, imploring us to come and preach the gospel to them. And then another call from the same people, a Macedonian cry to come and help them. I wrote them to say I would try and be with them on May 17. We left Hiroshima on the sixteenth. Twenty miles from there we began to ascend the mountain until we were about two thousand feet above the level of the sea—a beautiful road and a wonderful piece of engineering. We continued in this good road for forty-four miles. There we stopped for the night. On the seventeenth we left the main highway, and the road became more rugged; and, after traveling eleven miles, we reached the town of Shonbara. Mr. Nokayama was on the lookout for us, and gave us a hearty welcome. He took us to his room until he could secure a hotel for us. In his room we found the Bible, tracts, etc., and every evidence that these good people were studying the Bible. Soon a young lady of sixteen came in, bowed to us, made tea for us, and then began to converse very pleasantly and intelligently. She was the daughter of the landlady, and I learned afterwards the daughter had been baptized by the Roman Catholics in Hiroshima. She had been studying the Bible with others, and was deeply interested to know the truth. After moving to our hotel the people began to come in until our two large rooms were full. I talked to them, and preached to them all that afternoon and until near ten o'clock at night. The audience became so large I had to request them to move to the lower rooms lest the upper rooms might give way. We had some three hundred persons present. The prominent men of the village were present, and the three trustees of the school were also present. That afternoon I learned the history of this work. Mr. Motsura, one of the teachers, heard the gospel in Hiroshima in January last; returned to his home and began to read the Word of God in his family. Mr. Nokayama had also heard the gospel in Osaka, and he, too, was reading the Bible. As soon as he heard of Motsura's reading the Bible, he went to him, and said: "Let us read the Bible together." They did so, and others were added to their number. They met Wednesday and Sunday evenings to read and pray together, until there were about twenty persons. Then came this Macedonian cry to "come and help us." Seventeen persons have handed me their names as candidates for baptism. Mr. Motsura and his whole family, seven in all, and one young lady with them, will become Christians. Thank God for directing us to these people! The young lady and her mother have also given their names; the president of the school, and the two teachers, Mr. Nokayama and Mr. Motsura, and some of the pupils who read English remarkably well. The trustees have decided to make the Bible a text-book in their school, and I have great hopes that in two or three years this whole village of three thousand persons will become Christians. They told me there were but two Buddhist priests in the town, and that their religion was about dead, and the people were about ready to receive Christianity. They want Bibles; they ask us to send them Bibles, and I have promised to do so.

On returning to Kobe I addressed our native congregation here, and gave them an account of this wonderful work, and then asked, "Who will send them a Bible?" In less than five minutes I had a promise of twenty-five Bibles from them, and some of them are not Christians, but on probation. And now another call comes from the lower end of the island of Shikoku; a Macedonian cry to come and give them the light of the gospel. I will quote from the letter sent us. A lawyer writes: "I am anxious to know more of the Christian faith, and I spoke to Mr. Nashimura about it, and he, too, is anxious to know all about the Christian faith, and wants to propagate the doctrine. My wife and daughter are Christians, and I want to be a Christian." Below I give Mr. Nashimura's letter in part. He writes to this lawyer, a native. He says:

"I am glad I called on you some days since to talk on the subject of Christianity. This place where we live is quite out of the way, and difficult of access, and I feel sorry for the people. I am not a native of this place, but now, that I see the circumstances by which the people are surrounded, I am determined to do what I can to get the Bible, and introduce it in my school and among the people. I am not a Christian; but I hope sooner or later to be one. I think it is only Christianity which can make the heart pure. At the present time, when everything is advancing, we can not postpone this any longer. I wish you would get a foreign teacher to come at once, and teach us and establish a church in our midst. There is one thing I am sorry about, and that is, I am not able to pay the expenses of a missionary to come to us. If he will come and preach the gospel here, much good will be the result. I will myself at once become a Christian, and I will work with all the power of my body and soul to help others to be Christians. I have over one hundred pupils, and it may be they will become Christians. I will help them. If the missionary will establish a church here, the people will at once know what the Christian faith is. If we can see that day, we shall not be sorry that our place is out of the way, for we shall have the light of the gospel, which will be the highest point of civilization. If the missionary will come, I will tell him all. I am so anxious to have him come once or twice a month to preach the gospel and give us light. Have him come as quickly as possible, for we need the light which the gospel brings."

Since then a telegram has come, asking us, "When are you coming?"

Now, dear brother, shall we deny them the gospel? Brethren of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, shall these people, who are stretching out their hands to us, have the gospel? Shall we refuse to give it to them? Let the whole church answer this question, and may God help them to answer it. Send us the men; send us Bibles; send us the money. Here is the Macedonian cry for help. I leave to-night to go to them. I can not stay at home when these starving souls are hungering for the bread of life and stretching their hands imploring help from Christians. Pray for us. God is with us; Idessed be his name! The telegraphic wires in Japan are flashing these calls from one end of the land to the other. Pray for us.

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

THE LATEST FROM JAPAN.

MR. EDITOR: I had not been at home more than two days when we had an urgent call from a people at the lower end of the large island of Shikoku, to come and preach the gospel to them. I left here on May 24 to visit them, and had a hearty welcome from them, and met with much encouragement. I received the names of twenty-eight persons who want to be Christians, and are reading the Bible. I addressed on the last evening an audience of one thousand persons, old and young, men and women. I have not time to give you the particulars, as the mail leaves in a few minutes; but I will write you at length before long. I returned yesterday.

Now, my dear brother, how much joy it would give me to know the three Conferences which support your paper would at once send us a missionary for Japan. Can not a thousand subscribers add a dollar to their subscriptions, and send us a man at once? Help us. Help these people. They are crying to us to give them the gospel, and they are calling to the church in Christian lands to help them. Pray for us. Help us at once. Help us all you can for thirteen years, and we ask for no more. More soon.

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

Reminiscences of My Early Itinerant Life Resumed.

At the request of Sister Galloway, wife of Bishop Galloway and granddaughter of my old friend, Daniel Willis, I resume these reminiscences for the sake of valued friends who kindly appreciate them, and hoping from my own experience to say something for the benefit and comfort of young ministers who are struggling with the fearful responsibilities and overwhelming convictions of the ministerial calling. The first years of my ministry were characterized by these convictions of responsibility and inadequacy to meet them as strongly as ever was felt by any minister. As has been previously stated, the first year of my itinerant life was on the Port Gibson and Grand Gulf charge, in my native county (Claiborne), Mississippi Conference. Connected with the two chief appointments, Port Gibson and Grand Gulf, were several country appointments. Among these was one called Salem, in the neighborhood of Mrs. Sally Barnes, Daniel Willis and Benjamin Humphreys. I wish to speak more particularly of these persons to whom I have previously alluded, which I will premise by saying that in our country appointments we frequently have more intelligence and character than in the town appointments, and yet the young minister has less dread and more courage to preach in the country than in the town. He has more sympathy, less hypercriticism, and receives more encouragement and forbearance in his ministrations under the great burdens of the work. Had it not been for this consideration, this scribe would have never survived the responsibilities of this charge. He would have fallen by the way this first year of his itinerant life.

Among the number of beloved friends who have cheered the heart and given inspiration to the sinking spirits of this shrinking and excessively timid minister, no one in all my ministerial life has given more aid and comfort than Mrs. Sally Barnes, the widow of John A. Barnes, a wealthy planter, a legislator popular among his neighbors, and wielding a fine influence in Church and State. His widow, my beloved friend, one of the best of my life, was no ordinary woman; intelligent, discriminating in her judgment of character, of noble family, the sister of Gov. and Gen. Humphreys, deeply pious, the warm friend of our ministers. Her home was the abode of hospitality, where our leading ministers—Winans, Drake, Burruss, Lane, J. H. Jones, and others—and the young ministers felt that they had a friend and wise counselor. She was, indeed, a mother to me. Her memory is precious. She was a widow, indeed, after the highest apostolic model. True to her first love, she lived and died a widow, and has joined her beloved husband in the heaven of the blessed. I will recite here a rare case of family affection, illustrative of wise maternal government in the family circle. Her stepson, Thomas, never knew until he was grown that she was not his own mother; and the knowledge, when communicated, gave him real grief.

Daniel Willis, one of my stewards of this charge, was a man of sterling worth, a true friend of the minister, faithful in the discharge of the trust of the church, stern in his allegiance to his convictions of duty as a member of the church and a citizen. Happily married in a lovely and amiable family, his house was the home of the itinerant. He was a Methodist of the old stamp. He did not believe in, nor could he tolerate any new departures from the old landmarks. When choir singing and instrumental music were introduced into our town churches, I have known him deliberately to walk out. It is yet a mooted question whether this substitution of music for our old-fashioned hearty Methodist singing has been for the greatest good and spirituality of our people in their religious worship. I will recite in conclusion an instance of the strength of the convictions and patriotic feelings of this firm man of principle. When the Yankee army took Grand Gulf, in this neighborhood, and were converting their deteriorated greenbacks into gold, in the purchase of cotton, they proposed to purchase his. But not a bale could they purchase. All would have been sacrificed by this incorruptible patriot.

Program.

The Meridian District Conference will be held at Heidelberg, July 28-31.

The Sunday-school Conference will be held on Saturday, July 30, 8 to 12 A. M.

The District Conference will meet Thursday, July 28, at 9 A. M. The opening sermon will be delivered by Rev. R. Selby, Thursday, 11 A. M. At 7:30 P. M., Rev. W. C. Black, D. D., will deliver a sermon on Church Extension.

Friday, 11 A. M.—Report on Church Literature, followed by address on the subject.

Saturday, 8 A. M.—Sunday-school Conference: reports of Sunday-schools by pastors and Sunday-school workers, followed by addresses, according to the following programme:

1. On the duties of teachers, and the importance of personal piety in them. Rev. E. F. Edgar, S. S. Cope.

2. The paramount object of Sunday-schools is the salvation of souls. Rev. H. P. Lewis, T. Y. Blanks.

3. Importance of prayer in Sunday-school work. Rev. D. C. Langford, L. P. Brown.

4. The Bible and the Catechism in the Sunday-school. Revs. L. Carley, W. G. Backus. 11 A. M.—Sermon to children by Rev. J. A. Godfrey.

Saturday, 7:30 P. M.—The missionary cause will be discussed.

All Sunday-school workers invited to seats in Sunday-school Conference.

There is no better test of men's progress than this advancing power to do without the things which used to be essential to their lives. As we climb a high mountain, we must keep our footing strong upon one ledge until we have fastened ourselves strongly on the next. Then we may let the lower foothold go. The lives of men who have been always growing are strewed along their whole course with the things which they have learned to do without.—Phillips Brooks.

IN SUMMER-TIME.

BY REV. JOSEPH MOUNTAIN.

I love to walk in quiet ways
As Jesus did when here below;
I love to think that even now
A-field with me he cares to go.

I hear his voice in every breeze,
I feel his breath upon my brow,
He is not very far away
Where, in his name, my head I bow.

I see him in the brook's glad smile,
I hear him in the songs of birds,
And o'er my heart, like sunshine, falls
His ne'er-to-be-forgotten words.

And while my heart sings joyful praise
I hear a rippling in the grass,
And know that even as I wait
I've heard his silent footsteps pass.

Dear Lord, I give thee hearty thanks
For building me this leafy wood,
And coming from thine own bright home
To bless me in my solitude.

I thank thee thou didst not forget,
When coming from that sunny clime,
To bring and leave, dear Lord, with me,
These golden days of summer-time.

The Sunday-School Lesson for July 10, 1887.

BY C. G. ANDREWS, D. D.

THE FLIGHT INTO EGYPT.

Matthew ii, 13-23.

GOLDEN TEXT: "He delivered me, because he delighted in me."—Psalms xviii, 19.

The experiences of the blessed Savior from the very moment of his birth, and scarcely without any cessation, even to the time of his cruel death upon the cross, were full of danger and persecution. There was no room for him to be born in the inn. His lowly parents were turned into a stable to seek shelter for the night. It was in such a place that the Monarch of the universe, the Savior of men, submitted to be made flesh and to dwell among men. Scarcely had his birth been heralded, and before the locality had been made known, a crafty, unprincipled prince began to plan his destruction. In the whole land of Judea, which he came to save, there was no place of safety. In the risks she ran as she took the Holy Child around, Mary began already to feel the piercing of the sword through her own soul, because of the advent of this Prince of Peace, of whom the seeming contradiction has been spoken, He "came not to send peace on earth, but a sword." Thus early she began to realize the reception which this mysterious Child of hers was to meet with in the world. A Child, yet a King; the Creator of the world, yet without a place to lay his head; the victim of an ignominious and bloody death, yet bringing life and immortality to light through the gospel; the wise men bringing gifts unto him; the kings of the earth seeking to destroy him; the pious and devout of all nations worshiping him as God; the wicked exclaiming: "Away with him, away with him; crucify him, crucify him."

FROM BETHLEHEM TO EGYPT.

Verse 13. "And when they were departed." The wise men. Their visit to the infant Savior had been in every way satisfactory. They had been convinced of his divinity. They had worshiped him and had presented offerings expressive of homage and adoration. Being warned of God not to report to Herod, they went out another way. "The angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream." Angel means messenger. This is probably the same mentioned in verse 19. The guardian care of this angel is a fulfillment of the prophecies: "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him;" "For he shall give his angels charge concerning thee to keep thee in all thy ways." "Flee into Egypt." Once Egypt was a land of bondage; now it becomes a refuge. It was a Roman province, not far from Bethlehem, and away from Herod's jurisdiction. Other Jews had fled thither to enjoy civil and religious freedom. "Till I bring thee word." The attention and care of the angel were to be unremitting, that no harm might befall the holy child, Jesus.

14. "Took the young child by night, and departed into Egypt." Joseph's own knowledge of the danger, as well as his reverent acceptance of the instruction of the messenger, caused him to render prompt obedience. He went by night, doubtless to secure secrecy and to elude pursuit.

15. "Until the death of Herod." Josephus informs us that he died of a loathsome and excruciating disease. The same power, which delivered the blessed Babe from sharing the fate of the male children of Judea, brought the bloody tyrant to his fate. "Out of Egypt have I called my Son." This is a literal quotation from Hosea xi, 1. Israel was figuratively called God's son in Exodus iv, 23, and was considered by the Jews a type of the Messiah.

16. "When Herod saw that he was mocked by the wise men." He felt that he had been trifled with by the wise men, though a higher Power had directed them. It does not appear that they had ever given him a promise, although he had charged them to bring him word. "He slew all the children in Bethlehem from two years old and under." As the exact time of Jesus' birth was not known, Herod extended the time to two years to make sure of including the infant King.

17, 18. "Then was fulfilled by Jeremiah." The quotation is from Jeremiah xxxi, 15, where the words were originally spoken of the captivity of the children of Israel, and here they are applied to the slaughter of the innocents at Bethlehem. Bethlehem is compared to Ramah, because there Rachel mourned for her children, as now the mothers in Bethlehem mourned over their slaughtered ones.

FROM EGYPT TO NAZARETH.

Verse 19. "When Herod was dead." The merciless ambition was ruthlessly disappointed. Instead of putting his dreaded rival to death, he himself paid the penalty. The same angelic guardian who gave the warning in Bethlehem now came into Egypt to give charge concerning the young child.

20. "The young child and his mother." These words are the same used in the charge to Joseph in the thirteenth verse. They seemed to convey a forcible, yet indirect suggestion that Joseph was not more than a custodian for the Holy Child. "Go into the land of Israel." The reason for the departure from his native country being removed, he was directed thither again, because there he belonged, and there he could the more easily be reared. "They are dead." The plural is used for the singular, as in other places in the Scripture. (See Exodus iv, 19.)

21. "He took the young child and his mother, and came into the land of Israel." The divine permission to return to friends and native land was doubtless received with gladness, as it was acted upon with alacrity.

22. "Archelaus did reign in Judea in the room of his father Herod." Joseph heard who had acceded to the throne while making his journey, and, as he knew Archelaus to be a cruel man and inherited the character of his father, "he turned aside" and came into parts of Galilee. This is not inconsistent with the divine command given in the twentieth verse, because Galilee was a portion of the land of Israel, and Joseph had received a second warning, which caused him thus to turn aside.

23. "Dwelt in Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled, He shall be called a Nazarene." It is not easy to tell the exact meaning of this passage. The references are to Judges xiii, 5, where Samson was to be called "a Nazarite unto God from the womb," and to I Samuel i, 11, where Samuel was promised to be consecrated to God; but neither of these seem to have any direct bearing on this prophecy. Several commentators unite in thinking that because Nazareth was an insignificant town and of mean reputation, the prophecies which related to the lowly birth and origin of the Savior were thus fulfilled. For instance (Isaiah liii): "He is as a root out of dry ground": "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." Nazareth was proverbially a mean place. Nathanael asked, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" It was a small town in the tribe of Zebulun, just north of the plain of Esdraelon, about midway between the Lake of Tiberias and the Mediterranean, and about seventy miles north of Jerusalem.

We are taught by this interesting narrative that God's watchful eye is ever over the fortunes of those whom he loves, and, though the most powerful combinations are made for their destruction, he thwarts them all, and brings his favored ones safely through all difficulties. It teaches also that we should look for the guidance of our heavenly Father; that, although nowadays there are no pillars of fire by night or clouds by day, no angel nor Shekinah, still the promise is, "He will guide you into all truth."

My Last Quarterly Conference.

The "first round" for this Conference year on the Mexico district was concluded with the quarterly meeting at Tulyehualco, a town twenty-five miles south of the City of Mexico. The manner of travel to fill the eleven appointments of the district has been quite varied. In some cases, it was by rail, through magnificent mountain scenery, under the exhilarating influence of the crisp air of ten thousand feet above sea-level; in others, through the rich valley fields of growing wheat, corn and rye, with here and there an uncultivated spot covered with waving grass and fresh, sweet flowers; then, again, it was changed to a tramp on foot over a few miles of white, dusty road in the scorching sunshine, with heat too strong and dry to allow a healthy perspiration. The last appointment furnished a ride somewhat more romantic, if not more delightful, than the others. It was over the still, smooth waters of the "canal," where the old Aztec, long before Columbus reached the shores of the new (old) world, paddled or poled his canoe—his obedient, soft, swift-gliding cha-lu-pa. The modern craft has greatly increased its dimensions, but not its speed, beauty and comfort.

Our good Bro. Higinio (Ee-hee-nee-o), the native preacher in charge, moved by Mexican politeness and kindness, came in to accompany me, and add what he could to the pleasure of the trip. We were to be at "La Viga" Landing, on the "canal," in the southern suburb of the city, by five o'clock, "en punto," to "take shipping," for Tulyehualco. The press of office business—business of the press (as the work of editor and publisher is "thrown in" to fill up the writer's spare time from field work), allowed no time for a lunch at home before starting, nor was there material for one found on board afterward. The two preachers were on time, and found the "canon" waiting—where it was still waiting two hours later.

This "canoa" was about fifty feet long, six or seven feet wide, and sixteen inches deep, with floor raised six inches in the center. Iron bows reached from side to side, three feet from the floor at the highest point, and covered with petates (pa-ta-tes), a kind of woven matting of weeds, which were evidently not serving their first season as roofing over that passenger craft.

On our arrival we moved aside one of the petates, and called out to the "trajadora," the woman in charge, who gave us permission to enter; and we crawled in, at once stretching ourselves on the floor, for there was not space under the iron bows to sit erect. The length of the boat was divided into sections, a little less than five feet long, to each of which were assigned four passengers with their traveling outfits. The division line of the sections is a pole three or four inches square, which serves as pillow for the head and stay for the feet—your head and your neighbor's feet. As the space allotted each one is shorter than the person, he is compelled to lie in an uncomfortable bundle all night, or pass his feet to the side of his neighbor's head; and if one is not well provided with flesh, the hard floor will worry him greatly before morning, and his frequent turns for relief and rest will have to be skillfully executed not to molest a neighbor in one direction or another.

As soon as the boat is fully under way, the "trajadora" goes through the cabin on hands and knees, with an old-fashioned "dip" candle in hand, to see that each man, woman and child is in his own allotted space; and in the morning this round is repeated to collect fare. The charge seems to be, not for riding, but getting off, which I paid most cheerfully, for there was more in question than the hard floor and a short bed. The atmosphere of that low, close, full cabin could have been analyzed into ninety-nine distinct odors—anyone of them sufficient to keep off sleep for twelve long hours. Most everyone had, during the day, dosed himself highly with beans (frijoles), and garlic and pulque; and the result was not a delightful entertainment. But there was also turning, talking, grunting, coughing, to say nothing of the snoring—high pressure and low pressure—ranging from the sharp snarl of a cross, vexed dog to the sound of distant, grumbling thunder. How annoying to one who never snores, and who never hears snoring at home! Our Bishop may add this to his already varied experience on his next visit to Mexico.

But our quarterly meeting services were all delightful, and, I trust, beneficial—held in our own little church on the lake-shore, in the midst of the olive groves of this old, old town of Tulyehualco. We have at this place some very substantial members, who have been true to their profession of the Christian religion through the severest persecutions. Our steward is mayor of the town, and our people are helping to build a public school-house in the community—on the lot adjoining our church, and fronting the public square. There are good signs of material and spiritual progress.

East Mississippi Female College, Meridian, Miss.

The closing exercises of East Mississippi Female College took place June 15 and 16.

On Sunday, the fourteenth instant, the Rev. Mr. Werlein, of New Orleans, preached the commencement sermon to a large and appreciative audience from Psalm viii, 3 and 4: "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visiteth him?" The sermon was replete with many beautiful thoughts, and made a fine impression on the large audience assembled to hear it.

On Wednesday night Miss Parnell, the musical directress of the college, entertained a large audience with the following programme:

1. Miss Sorintha M. McLaurin, Bastrop, La.—The Web of Life.
2. Miss Minnie Buntyn, Meridian—Life's Broad Field of Battle.
3. Miss Pattie P. Pool, Edwards, Miss.—The Overthrow of Difficulties.
4. Miss Eva Smylie, Meridian—Amiability, the Sweetest Flower of Character.
5. Miss Katie Hickman, Meridian—Light and Shadow.
6. Miss Lilly E. Smylie, Meridian—Keys Suggest Treasure.
7. Miss Fanny Taylor, Aquilla, Ala.—Yesterday, To-Day and Forever.
8. Miss Mattie Stroup, Meridian—The Call of Ages.
9. Miss Flora Little, Forest, Miss.—Do Your Best Every Day.
10. Miss Katie Coffman, Enterprise, Miss.—Booms.
11. Miss Emma Dantzler, Moss Point, Miss.—Are You Ready?
12. Miss Mattie Dunlap, New Orleans—Not the New South, but the True South.

On Thursday night the closing exercises of the college took place. The following young ladies, having stood a good examination before the Revs. L. Carley and B. S. Rayner, the Visiting Committee from the Conference, were awarded diplomas:

Miss Minnie Buntyn, Meridian, Miss.; Miss Emma A. Dantzler, Moss Point, Miss.; Miss Katie Hickman, Meridian, Miss.; Miss S. M. McLaurin, Bastrop, La.; Miss Lilly E. Smylie, Meridian, Miss.; Miss Mattie L. Stroup, Meridian, Miss.; Miss Katie N. Coffman, Enterprise, Miss.; Miss Mattie N. Dunlap, New Orleans, La.

Each young lady read her essay clearly and distinctly.

On Tuesday morning the Board of Trustees met. There was much work to be done, and they had a long, laborious session. After much deliberation, two new chairs were established—that of stenography and type-writing, and drawing and painting.

Rev. A. D. McVoy was elected president for the ensuing year; Miss Jennie Moffat, presiding teacher; Miss Alice Lusk, assistant teacher; Miss Zelle McLaurin, principal of primary department; Miss Addie Purnell, musical directress; Miss Mattie Dunlap, assistant music teacher.

The chairs of stenography and type-writing, painting and drawing will be filled by the Board of Trustees before the commencement of the next session.

There were 106 pupils matriculated during the year. The music class was larger than usual—numbering forty-five pupils.

East Mississippi Female College, though not on a boom (though we had a booming essay, and a good one), is holding its own; and the friends of the institution are requested to respond to the demand that will be made on them the ensuing scholastic year.

We want money; we want patronage. Are the friends of the institution ready to come to its aid? We hope they are. It is only by a united effort that we may expect to succeed in promoting the growth and prosperity of this institution.

E. F. MOODY,
Sec. Board of Trustees.

What about the Minutes?

Why is it that of late years the minutes of the Louisiana Annual Conference contain more pages of advertising matter than ever before? Why is it that, notwithstanding this fact, the preachers are taxed to pay for these minutes more than ever before? Will some one please explain? We have no objection to the secretary getting as many advertisements as he pleases, and charging as much as he pleases for them; but it does seem (to me, at least) that with this he should be satisfied, and not impose a tax on the preachers which oftimes they are not able to bear. And then, because they can not respond to his call for more money, refuse to send them. It can not be argued that this additional amount called for is necessary to pay for mailing expenses, for the most of our preachers live near enough to an express office to get them in that way, which is certainly cheaper.

The preacher in charge of West Monroe has only to walk across the bridge which spans the Ouachita river, and a few steps brings him to the express office; yet, because he has not responded to the call of the secretary, he has not been favored with a copy this year.

In former years we found this advertising business very profitable; so much so that we had no need to call on the preachers for any additional amount. The packages were sent out by express, the preacher paying the charges. If he could not be reached in any better way, they were sent to his presiding elder. We were well supplied with minutes in those days; now a work with a membership of 200 gets about ten or twelve copies.

We do not contend that the secretary should be denied some remuneration for his trouble; but if the amount derived from eighteen to twenty pages of advertising matter is not sufficient, the Conference should devise some means of paying the additional amount necessary. Certainly a tax of 2½ cents per copy should not be levied upon preachers who often are not able to bear it.

Respectfully submitted.

WM. HART.

From the Work.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: The Greenville district is still moving forward. We began the year with only seven hundred and thirty members, and we have paid $4,100 to the connectional interests of our church, and are well up with the collections ordered by the Conference—all of which will be paid. The preachers have been well provided for, and their salaries will be paid, which, including the presiding elder's salary, will be about $10,000. Now, Mr. Editor, let the district which is doing better than this speak out. Nearly one-fourth of the members on the district are in Greenville station; and these have paid three-fourths of the $4,100, and are now adding $1,250 to the parsonage: and, better still, we are having conversions and accessions in many places on the district. Every preacher is at his post and working as I have never seen a whole district work before. Pray for us.

Yours fraternally,

J. W. HONNOLL, P. E.

JUNE 17, 1887.

TERRY, MISS.

Mr. Editor: I am gratified to state that we are moving up in this part of the Lord's work. Have prayer and class meetings. A goodly number of accessions since Conference. Sent some missionary money to Dr. Kelley. We have three Woman's Missionary Societies. There are six regular churches, and seven Sunday-schools. Expect to build two churches and a parsonage this year.

There are a goodly number of the good old Advocate taken. I desire very much to get it into every Methodist family, at least. By the number of subscribers I have sent, and hope still to send, you see it is increasing in patronage. It is a fine sub-pastor. It makes those who take it and read it more liberal in sustaining the work of the church.

Our model presiding elder, Bro. J. M. Weems, is interesting himself in the financial part of the work. We hope to get up all the assessments.

Crops are very promising now. Yours truly,

GEO. BANCROFT.

OPELOUSAS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The best that could be said of this meeting, perhaps, is that everybody seemed to be satisfied. It was a time of social enjoyment. The refined homes of Franklin were thrown open, and their guests were entertained with a royalty and cordiality that gave us all a new relish for life and human fellowship. This was peculiarly enjoyable to this scribe, who renewed there most pleasant acquaintances of a dozen years ago.

Franklin has the name of being a hard place, religiously; but it certainly has many virtues with which to offset its want of church zeal—and shall I not say Christian virtues? If to use hospitality, to respect the ministry, to be given to works of charity are Christian virtues, then Franklin should not lose hope. It is to be hoped, also, that the District Conference, just adjourned, will have to do with the quickening of the zeal of the church there.

The meeting was a spiritual one—the spiritual was the stressed element. Bishop Keener was with us, and his preaching was most wholesome and edifying. There were some conversions, and several joined the church. The meeting is being protracted, and the pastor, Bro. Clay, may yet realize large results.

The facts elicited in regard to the progress of work on the district were, on the whole, gratifying. Some of the charges had revivals, and there had been an ingathering of souls in several places. There is a decided increase in the Sunday-school interest. The general collections are better up than at this time last year. Missions, church extension, education, etc., were discussed by chosen speakers, and deliberated upon by the Conference in general. Church and parsonage building is receiving attention, and there is fair promise that this district will keep step with the progress of population in this country.

The Advocate was not forgotten, Mr. Editor; and while we regretted your absence, we talked some about the paper, and resolved about it. We looked in vain also for Dr. Adams, from Centenary. But Bishop Keener did not neglect to give us a wholesome talk on church education.

And so, after four days of communing, worshiping and deliberating, we adjourned wiser and better, I trust, and to meet next summer, God willing, at Lafayette. Yours truly,

J. W. MEDLOCK.

NEW IBERIA, LA., June 20, 1887.

BIG CANE, LA.

Mr. Editor: I ask to speak of the flood-tide of joy which is filling my poor heart. We have had one of the greatest awakenings at Evergreen, La., that has ever been witnessed at that place. We protracted our meeting three weeks; had the assistance of Bros. J. P. Porter, Jackson, Beard, Davies, Galloway, and others. Bro. White was also aglow with the zeal of other days, and preached with power. Sixty souls were added to the church at Evergreen.

We have had one other protracted meeting, at Fairview, Bro. Alexander in charge, which resulted in thirty-one accessions to that church. We have collected $73 at Simmsport for the Sabbath-school work at that place. May great results soon follow!

We will commence a meeting at Big Cane, on July 1. Would hail a visit from you joyously. Pray for us.

S. H. WHATLEY.

JUNE 17, 1887.

ELLISVILLE, MISS.

Mr. Editor: We have a gracious meeting in progress at Ellisville. The church is wonderfully revived, and we are having accessions at every service. Two joined last night. We are advancing in all church work and interests in the Hattiesburg circuit. Pray for us.

T. W. ADAMS.

"As flowers never put on their best clothes for Sunday, but wear their spotless raiment and exhale their odor every day, so let your Christian life, free from stain, ever give forth the fragrance of the love of God." So goes this little paragraph; just now much crowded in the daily papers by news of this kind and evils of that. To be good Christians every day—such is the wisdom it teaches. If there be two places where the fragrance of a Christian life should be exhaled it is in the home and at the place of business.—Southern Churchman.

Our Contributors.

The Wheel of Wheels in Methodist Machinery.

As a church, we are prosperous. Prosperity is apparent in the increase of membership, the increase of missionary labors and the increase of contributions for all evangelical purposes. Good and wise men especially should now look forward and about, that these increasing energies may be guarded and directed—guarded, lest they should go wrong, and guided, that they may go right. Permit a plain man, who has been a watchman upon the walls of our Zion for more than fifty years, to make a few suggestions upon two points, namely: The difficulties that beset our young uneducated Conference members and probationers, and the insufficient pay and support of our preachers in charge.

In the November number of the Southern Methodist Review some sharp remarks are found upon the want of education in the Methodist ministry. I do not object to the criticisms on the ignorance of our ministry. I was not scholastically educated myself, but have always appreciated and felt the need of such an education, and, while I have been acting as chairman of committees of examination for about forty years, I have contended strenuously that our disciplinary regulations should be strictly complied with before an applicant should be admitted into our Conference. Let all of our preachers be educated, well-informed men, with good common sense at the foundation. The church now is demanding an educated ministry, and the church has it in her power to secure this demand. In my experience, in admitting young men to probationary membership in our Conference, I have found very few who were not hungry for knowledge, and who would not educate themselves if properly aided; but the difficulties they have to surmount is great, and the help they receive is small. Let me state a case that I may bring this matter clearly to view. A young man of twenty years of age feels called of God to preach; he counsels with the elder; is received on probation and sent to a four-weeks circuit, with a distance of two hundred miles to travel in getting around his circuit. He is invited to no place as a home; he spends a night here, and another there; has on the circuit only two or three places where he can have a room to himself. A quiet hour on horseback, or under the trees in summer, is his only opportunity for study. The Bible, hymn book, and the text book he is reading constitute his library; with an uncertain salary of $200, with which to furnish himself with a horse, traveling and postal expenses, clothing and means for benevolence. Now, without time, opportunity, books or means, how is a man to become scholarly?

In the "Editor's Table," in the May number of the Southern Methodist Review, there is a clear and somewhat exhaustive view given of the pay received by Southern Methodist preachers. Now, what I wish to call attention to is, that the preacher in charge, including these rural circuits, is the most important factor in Methodist economy—the most important wheel in our machinery. If the Bishop is paid, it is from the preacher's circuit that his salary is collected; if the elder's claim is met, it is the result largely of the efficiency of the preacher in charge; if missionary money, church extension money, Conference claimants' pay is obtained, he collects it. If church labor is extended into new fields, if her outer stakes are strengthened, her cords lengthened, it is the backwoods, swamp and brushy-bayou preacher that does the work. He swims the creeks, braves the cold, malaria and heat. He lives on the poorest fare, does the hardest work, and more of it, and is the poorest paid of all our workmen. I have borne in my time all this myself, and I am glad that there are still men who are willing to do and bear all this toil and hardship for Christ's sake.

Now, the question is, Is it not time to bring about a change? Every thinking man among us will see that it ought to be done. It ought to be done for the sake of justice and equality; it ought to be done in order to secure a higher standard of ministerial excellence, the blessing of God and greater rapidity in the spread of the gospel. Now, how can this be done? I answer: Let our chief pastors and our men of influence in the church—editors, elders and stewards—give their attention and efforts to the matter, and it will be done. Until it is done, by increased liberality upon the part of our membership, let us study equality in apportioning the general income between ministers of all grades. Bishop Asbury received sixty-four dollars per annum—the same amount received by his preachers. I mention this fact in support of our most important laborers. None of our ministers are paid too much; our circuit preachers are paid far too little.

The average pay last year to the preachers in the Mississippi Conference was $405 38. In looking over the last minutes of our Conference I find that Seashore pays its preachers less than any other district, though it paid its elder more than Woodville, Brandon or Brookhaven. The average pay to preachers on Seashore district is $292 96. The highest salary was $600; the lowest, $115. The circuits here are larger, the work more laborious, the importance of success greater than in any other part of the Mississippi Conference. I feel that my age and long service in the Mississippi Conference has given me the privilege of making these comments; and if the attention of men of influence and wisdom is directed by them to the important matters touched upon, my object in writing shall be accomplished. OLD 78.

Are We Jesuits?

If so, we believe the end justifies the means, and that we may do evil that good may come of it. This thought forces itself into the writer's mind, as Sunday after Sunday, the loaded cars go by, filled with church goers, and the voice of the Spirit, with groanings which can not be uttered, whispers: "My people doth not consider. Hath the Lord as much delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

"But," says one who thinks in this way to do God service, "we are told to forsake not the assembling of ourselves together: and how am I to get to church?" This question is easily answered. The Christian who attends the week-day meetings of the church to which he belongs, or who gathers his household together for worship on the Sabbath, is in no danger of transgressing this commandment. And how many, if they were willing diligently to "consider," would find within walking distance some church, weak and struggling, perhaps, for want of the support of Christians in its immediate neighborhood!—a church in helping which they would obey the command to "strengthen the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees;" a congregation where one member would be as valuable as five would be in a larger assembly; a treasury where the car fare deposited would be a needed and appreciated help. "The silver and the gold are mine," saith the Lord. If this silver be diverted from his treasury into that of the Sabbath-breaking railroad company, can we plead "not guilty" to the charge of robbing him in tithes and offerings? Is it any wonder that from so many quarters the cry goes up, "My house lieth waste," when the money which should build the walls of Zion goes to swell the gains of corporations whose God is not the Lord? We talk of "soulless corporations," and so try to shift the responsibility, forgetting that "he that hiddeth him God-speed becometh a partaker of his evil deeds." It is an awful thought that every man or woman, converted or unconverted, who bids the railroads "God-speed," by contributing to their ill-gotten gains on the Sabbath day, is held responsible for all the Sabbath breaking of the railroad companies; and not only so, but—and who can say how directly?—for all Sabbath breakers who make the cars a means to their end; for every gay party to the lake or Carrollton, for every excursion at either place, for every drunken row on an excursion train, since the principle, or want of it, which runs them is the same.

"But," objects the car rider, "the cars would run anyhow." Would they? Let all church members set their faces against this evil, and see if its hours would not be numbered! But whether or not this would be, it does not change the responsibility of the individual Christian. We can not always move a multitude to do well, but neither are we permitted to follow a multitude to do evil. On the contrary, we are commanded to "come out and be separate," to "touch no unclean thing." And will any one contend that the running of cars on Sunday is a clean—that is, a pure, a righteous—thing?—that the poor overworked driver has not an equal right with the king on his throne to this God-given day of rest?—that the loving Father, who took thought even for the beast that perisheth, will hold them guiltless who rob both man and beast of this, their inalienable right? It is written: "Thou shalt remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. In it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy manservant, nor thy cattle." Is the driver of the car not the "manservant" of the passenger because the railroad officials act as agents in hiring and paying him? Is the mule not his "cattle" because the money of a corporation bought him, when it is in the passenger's service he is forced to work? In this day of Sunday laws (for which let us thank God!) it does seem inconsistent that Christians should cling to the cars while they contend for Sabbath keeping in other directions.

More than once, when the writer has been pleading with some young man, the son of godly parents, the object of many prayers, to become a Christian, the answer has been: "I can't while I work on a railroad. I have to work on Sunday." Mentioning this to the manager of one of the largest corporations in the country, a church member and professor of religion, his answer was, "He is mistaken: he can be." But can he? Who knows best—the rich man at the head of the road or the poor lad working for daily bread? Oh! that we might consider—that we might all cry, "Lord, that our eyes may be opened!"—or, with David, pray, "Lord, lighten mine eyes that I sleep not the sleep of death!" F. M. M.

"No sleeping rooms over three flights up. Fire alarms in every room, open grates (the best ventilators) in nearly all, twelve stairways from every floor to the street." "Where?" you ask. "At the famous United States Hotel, Boston. Take it in on your vacation."

Tutt's Pills

REGULATE THE BOWELS.

Habitual Costiveness

Causes derangement of the entire system, and begets diseases that are hazardous to life. Persons of a costive habit are subject to Headache, Defective Memory, Gloomy Forebodings, Nervousness, Fevers, Drowsiness, Irritable Temper and other symptoms, which make the sufferer for business or agreeable associations. Regular habit of body alone can correct these evils, and nothing succeeds so well in restoring this condition as Tutt's Pills. By their use not only is the system renovated, but in consequence of the harmonious changes thus created, there pervades a feeling of satisfaction; the mental faculties perform their functions with vivacity, and there is an exhilaration of mind, freedom of thought, and perfect heart's ease that bespeaks the full enjoyment of health.

SECRET OF BEAUTY

Is health. The secret of health is the power to digest a proper quantity of food. This can never be done when the liver does not net its part. It is the driving wheel in the mechanism of man, and when it is out of order, the whole system becomes deranged, and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Constipation, Jaundice, Bilious Colic and General Debility ensue. To restore the functions of the Liver and impart that beauty which always attends a healthy constitution, Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills are recommended. They are not a cure-all, but are designed solely for the disordered Liver and the diseases which it produces.

MOTHER'S FRIEND

Not only shortens the time of labor and lessens the pain, but it greatly diminishes the danger to life of both mother and child, and leaves the mother in a condition more favorable to speedy recovery, and less liable to Flooding, Convulsions, and other alarming symptoms. Its efficacy in this respect entitles it to be called THE MOTHER'S FRIEND, and to rank as one of the blessing-remedies of the nineteenth century.

The Board of Missions appointed the week, beginning August 8, as a week of prayer and self-denial in the interest of our missions.

Briefs.

The Queen's Jubilee, celebrated last week, was the grandest pageant ever witnessed. It was the most magnificent tribute of respect and homage that an earthly sovereign ever received. All classes of people, all grades of society, all guilds and trade unions, lords and ladies, aristocracy and peasantry, soldiers and civilians, united in showing their appreciation of the virtues of the Queen of fifty most eventful years. All the courts of Europe had their representatives in London, paying profound respect to England's loved and venerated sovereign. Few sovereigns have reigned as long as Queen Victoria, and fewer still have reigned as well; and none have taken a deeper hold upon the affections of their people.

The President's order about the "battle flags," and the resultant demonstrations, have convinced us that we were on the eve of committing a great mistake. The Southern churches have been so assiduously and gallantly courted by the Northern churches during the past few months, and offers of marriage have been so plainly and pointedly made, that we were almost ready to conclude that the war was over and "peace was shedding her balm" over the whole land. But that well-intended order of Mr. Cleveland "raised a rumpus" which tingled Southern ears as they have not tingled in many days, and opened Southern eyes to the fact that in very many Northern hearts the war is still raging. Is there not, after all, some foundation in human nature for Mr. Haggard's "Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"? When church union is on the tapis, it is Dr. Jekyll. When the battle flags are talked about, presto, change! the grim Mr. Hyde walks out upon the stage!

> "Alas! for the rarity
> Of Christian charity
> Under the sun."

The following is the President's letter presenting his jubilee congratulations to Queen Victoria:

Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America, to Her Majesty Victoria, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland and Empress of India—

Great and Good Friend: In the name of and on behalf of the people of these United States, I present their felicitations upon the arrival of the fiftieth anniversary of your Majesty's accession to the crown of Great Britain. I but utter the great voice of my fellow-countrymen in wishing for your people the prolongation of a reign so marked with advances in popular well-being, physical, moral and intellectual. It is justice, and not adulation, to acknowledge the debt of gratitude and respect due to your personal virtues for their impartial influence in producing and causing the prosperous and well-ordered condition of affairs now generally prevailing throughout your dominions. May your life be prolonged and peace, honor and prosperity bless the people over whom you have been called to rule under just and equal laws, and your government be strong in the affections of all who live under it! And I pray God to have your Majesty in his holy keeping.

Done at Washington this twenty-seventh day of May, A. D. 1887.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

THOS. F. BAYARD,
Secretary of State.

The Week of Self-Denial.

The Board of Missions, at its session in Nashville, last May, adopted the following:

Resolved, That in view of the pressing need of our missionary work growing out of the expansion of our missionary operations in the several fields occupied by us; and believing that the blessings of the Head of the church will not be withheld when properly sought by his people, we recommend that the week beginning August 8 and ending August 14, 1887, be observed throughout the church as a week of prayer and self-denial. The money obtained by such denial and by such thank-offerings as may be made, in view of the abundant mercies of God in the large increase of membership in the church during the past year shall be applied to meet the existing exigency.

We wish to say to our readers that the "existing exigency" mentioned in this resolution is simply a debt created by the Board in "the expansion of our missionary operations." The way was opened to new fields, and the Board saw in those openings the beckonings of Providence; and in accordance with those calls new mission work was projected, and the debt created. The success of the new work has justified the officers of the Board in going ahead. Read Bro. Lambuth's letters, in another column, and they will show you that the opening of a mission in Japan is proving a wonderful success. What is true there is true in other places. If the Board had not entered these fields, it is true so much debt would not have been contracted: but it is also true that opportunities for far-reaching influences in spreading Christ's gospel would have gone from us for all time, and that would have been far worse than any amount of debt.

The object of the resolution is to get the church to pay this debt, and to pay it in the month of August. The weight ought to be lifted immediately. We don't want to wait till fall or the Conference sessions. There is no need to do so. To say that a million of Methodists can't pay $100,000 in one week is to say what very few people believe. Nobody doubts the ability of the church to meet this obligation between the eighth and fourteenth day of August. Another object of the resolution is to get the church to pay this debt in such a manner that the payment of it will be a means of grace to the whole church. Hence the appointment of a week of prayer and self-denial. The mingling together of such means of grace as prayer and self-denial and giving must produce a most profound impression upon the hearts of those engaged in it, and will most certainly react in producing the most powerful and widespread revival of religion that we have ever seen.

It does seem to us that this resolution of our Board of Missions gives our church an opportunity such as we have never had before. Paying off this debt by acts of personal self-denial, by doing without some things for the sake of the advancement of Christ's cause, will be the strongest proof that we are followers of the self-denying Nazarene; and that exhibition of self-denial before the whole country will bring the "showers of blessing" from God. It is still true that those who honor God will be honored of him. We hesitate not to say that the success of the week of self-denial depends altogether upon the preachers. If they see in it the grandest opportunity the church has yet had, and become enthused with the ambition to make it a success, they can lead the church to victory. If they are indifferent to this earnest call of the Board, the church will be listless in the matter. The two most contagious things in this world are indifference and enthusiasm. We call upon the preachers to open their eyes to see this great opportunity that is afforded us, and to open their hearts and let the divine Spirit kindle an enthusiasm for Christ. Talk this week of self-denial into a boom! Stir your members by fiery exhortations! Get out of the hum-drum! Get inspired, and put inspiration into others! Stimulate the people! Arouse the lukewarm! Agitate the stagnant! Preach self-denial as the first duty and privilege! Converse with every member of your charge on this important subject! Explain its meaning! Show its grand purpose! Push things on this line! Make earnest preparation for this week of self-denial! Let the presiding elders keep the mails busy carrying cards of exhortations to their preachers! Let the preachers cease not day or night to keep their people awake to the tremendous issues that are involved! Let every member of the church get ready to save, by self-denial, at least fifty cents, that it may go into the treasury of the Lord by the twentieth of August!

Emory and Henry Commencement.

MR. EDITOR: I went from Centenary commencement to that of Emory and Henry. Bishop McTyeire developed from the sleeper of the same train which dropped me down in that loveliest of valleys in Southwest Virginia. He went to President Jordan's; I to Prof. Davis'. Next day, June 5, he preached to some 2,000 people, upon the profane Esau. He showed that profane swearing was but the lowest and least culpable profanity. The true meaning of profanity was "disesteem of spiritual things"—a vice of incalculably wide and baleful influence just now. He enforced the Scripture lesson. He made no apology for a "long Bible lesson." If any part of the service be abbreviated, let it be what the preacher has to say—not what God has to say. The Bishop is not eloquent; but it is wonderful how much he can say that sticks. His javelins always have barbs—a bad thing to substitute for the smooth goad when plowing; splendid in war.

Monday, June 6, was the Robertson medal day. Eleven competitors—all did well. Our young North Carolinian, Frank Siler, gave us a fine philippic against that abomination of abominations—the Louisiana State Lottery. He quoted its manager as saying that there was not a man in Louisiana that he could not buy. I suppose Mr. Dauphin said it. But I could not help exclaiming, half aloud, "That's a lie!" I was asked by Judge Ingersoll if I meant Siler or Dauphin. I replied, "The man who first said it." If Mr. Dauphin said it, every honest Louisianian ought to inform him of the foul slander. But the stigma of the lottery abides as a fact, and the fact abides that the Sphinx is eating more men than Diomede's horses. Frank Siler did not get the prize because Neighbors, of Alabama, on Communism, did even better. The interest of the day was heightened by the reading of a letter from Gov. Wyndham Robertson, the founder of the medal, now in his eighty-fifth year. It was touching as well as elegantly eloquent.

The alumni held their semi-centennial on Tuesday. It was not like the alumni anniversary, which I knew to fail because none of their orators, poets and post-prandialists were there. The president was there with his address of welcome; and a good one it was. The historiographor was there; but he said his squeezer wasn't equal to the occasion of putting forty-four years into less than the same number of minutes. A paragraphist was near who made a note that at next semi-centennial a compress would be on hand to prepare the raw produce for shipment to the Liverpool of kingdom-come. The poet was there sans squeezer, too; but the Bishop improvised an instrument in his post-prandium that served the purpose as well. The orator was there in force—John Goode, M. C., of Norfolk, Va. No one limited him. He gave us heaten oil and of savory smell—that "of a field which God hath blessed." Then came Gov. Lee, and gave us Fitz. Then came lunch. I can not enter into details. Over three hundred present. Among them Bishop McTyeire, Gov. Lee, of Virginia; Hon. John L. Buchanan, Hon. John A. Buchanan, Sam Small, Judge Ingersoll, of Tennessee; Hon. John Goode, C. E. Vawter, of Miller Institute; and many others. Hon. I. E. Shumate, of Georgia, was master of ceremonies.

Wednesday was commencement day—Ehau! quantus et virus et equis erat sudor! Yesterday the pavilion had blown down, and to-day it was blazing hot; yet an audience of nearly four thousand sat for more than two hours and listened with great interest to a masterful presentation of the physical feature of human education. The speaker was Judge Ingersoll, of Tennessee, a cousin of the great infidel Bob. But the Judge is not an infidel. He took great pains to show that he did not mean to impress the idea that physical education was all that was needed—on the contrary—but man was a religious animal, and the demands of religion were as imperative as those of the flesh, and quite as real. I could extend the notice of the four days by mention of the society anniversaries, the informal receptions by the societies, the pyrotechnics and other features of the occasion. But, behold, squeezer adest, and they are written in the book of Gad the Seer.

Your scribe was on the book for Martha Washington. He attended, and delighted himself by taking an hour's revenge upon the people who took it with wonderful patience. I want to say parenthetically just here that better attention and conduct I never witnessed with such vast audiences. Martha Washington is one of the well-known institutions of our church. Well has it deserved its reputation. Among its presidents, Warren Dupre, E. E. Wiley, R. W. Jones are household names in Southern education. But Dr. Hearon, its present president, is comparatively young. His career has, however, been one of quiet, uniform and marked success. He makes no noise, but he somehow moves to the mark with wonderful directness. Good, wise, prudent, scholarly, he is a prince whose voice not often obtruded on the ear, yet ever will command attention. Seven young ladies graduated—two from Texas, and one from Idaho, the governor's daughter. I had the pleasure of meeting her father, the stanch layman of our church, at Nashville, in 1882. He has not yet forgotten this scribe's faux pas (in prudential language), on that memorable occasion when Dr. McFerrin, like taurus in the fable, didn't know the gnat was there. But the gnat was there, if the good Doctor didn't know it. Nemo omnia scit. But I must not digress too far. The remark above made as to the uniform success of Dr. Hearon is verified in one particular by the statement that he paid all expenses and reported a surplus of $800 into the treasury. This goes toward the extinguishment of an old debt—a grand old debt! Some of our people have the happy art of getting schools and churches into debt, and yet popularly they are grand men. The debts they make ought to have co-existent grandeur and immortality. There is, however, one good which our debt-makers do—they play the part of stimulators to a lazy church, like the famous chigo which, after it fills upon your blood, will make you scratch. But if our church were properly alive, there would be no need of debts or debt-makers. But Dr. Hearon is a debt-payer. May the people have some use for him after he has paid M. W.'s debts! I am not strenuous in my efforts to persuade people of the Gulf States to send so far from home. Yet some will do it. To such I would say Martha Washington is the place.

Much could be said of the country and the appearance of prosperity; but I will only say that, generally, there is every sign of prosperity and, better than that, fine morals. A friend said to me of Marion jail, "It seldom has an inmate." Happy people who need no jails! The hoodlum and communist have not come thither yet. How reluctantly I obeyed the demands of business recalling me to this latitude where my thermometer registers eighty degrees at six o'clock in the morning.

T. A. S. ADAMS.

JACKSON, LA., June 20, 1887.

Some Notes.

We had a good time at Baton Rouge, and Sunday was indeed a work day. The Quarterly Conference, held on Saturday night, was fairly attended. The report of Pastor Faunt LeRoy showed some advance and a spiritually healthy condition as to both church and Sunday-schools. The Baton Rouge school, in charge of M. C. Aldrich, Esq., is doing well, as is the case with the school at Brookstown. We preached morning and night, to good congregations in Baton Rouge, and at three in the afternoon to a packed house at Brookstown, dedicating the new and beautiful church just erected by Bro. Faunt LeRoy and his flock who live in that neighborhood. There were three additions to the church—two in town and one at Brookstown, making in all more than fifty received this year by the Baton Rouge pastor. There is in connection with our church at the capital of the State a flourishing mission in charge of a devoted layman, Bro. Fredericks. Good work is being done in Baton Rouge. We were informed that the Sabbath-breaking whites of New Orleans go excursioning to Baton Rouge on Sundays, while the Sabbath-loving blacks choose week days for their excursions. All praise to the blacks!

S.

Saturday night we went down into the Third District, and found Dr. Evans at work preaching about the "Lost Sheep" to the attentive crowd around the City Mission platform. A large number shook the preacher's hand, indicating thereby they wanted to be prayed for, and were determined to lead a new life. These meetings at the Washington Market are to be continued through this week, and an additional meeting is to be started on Claiborne street, near Gravier. Our people are becoming aroused to the blessed work; and fervent praying, with zealous laboring for souls, is sure to bring down God's rich blessings.

We found things, yesterday, at Moreau Street Church in good condition. The Sunday-school children were generally on hand in their classes, and, under the lead of Dr. J. W. Adams (Capt. Robertson is rusticating in Texas), the school has lost none of that enterprise, snap and esprit de corps for which it has been famous through the years. The congregations up-stairs at eleven in the morning, and at night were large for the hot season. We had a most delightful communion service, and at four in the afternoon was held a very profitable and spiritual love-feast. After the night sermon the church came forward, and at the altar gave themselves afresh in entire consecration to God and his service. Oh, the multitudes of the unsaved under the very shadow of the Moreau Street Church, and that of its sister, Craps Street Church! Bro. Kimball and his flock and Dr. Ahrens and his flock have just at hand, most inviting fields that are "white unto the harvest." We do believe that these brethren and their people are shaking themselves and taking hold of the might of their God with the determination, by his help, to "rescue the perishing" at their very doors. Bless God!

JUNE 27, 1887.

Notes.

Bishop Soule is reported to have said just before his death, "I have to read Wesley's sermons once a year to keep straight in doctrine." This is a good rule for every Methodist preacher to adopt. It will be especially valuable to every young itinerant. Wesley's sermons are as clear and simple a statement of Methodist doctrine as can be found. If we have any standard of doctrine, we suppose the first fifty sermons published by Mr. Wesley make that standard; and if a preacher would "keep straight in doctrine," he must be familiar with them.

The Methodist Advance, of North Carolina, has this simple, unanswerable reason for the church sustaining her schools:

> We should sustain denominational schools, for the reason, that the spiritual welfare of youth is better secured in them than in undenominational institutions. The period of education is pre-eminently auspicious for the conversion of the young. Comparatively few, who pass this period, are afterwards converted. It is, therefore, a matter of the highest moment that educators use all the gospel appliances in securing the salvation of their pupils. The school that is simply successful in mental culture, and fails to magnify and illustrate spiritual culture, falls far short of what an institution should be—it does not measure up to its great mission.

PROFIT SHARING.—Several of the great business firms of the land have been making experiments in the direction of sharing profits with their employees, and already satisfactory results have been obtained. In some cases the business itself has been enlarged, because the workers have taken a deeper interest in the work. A per cent. upon wages earned is more likely to stimulate the wage-worker than anything else. It has a fine effect upon "the spirit of labor," giving it a hope and promise of liberal reward, beside a tangible and paying interest in the business. It also has a good effect upon the quality of work done. It is thought that the prospect for a general adoption of this feature in business is encouraged by the good examples already given of its success, and that it is a solution of many of the problems at the bottom of the great strikes. It will surely bring more faithful service from the worker and largely increase his wages.

THE POWER OF THE SALOON.

The fierce forces of the saloon are up in arms everywhere. In every place the threat of defiance is heard. The most intense hatred is being nursed, that it may grow into more alarming proportions and take on fiercer aspects. The devil is roaring like a lion, but his roarings frighten only the timid. The great moral forces of the country are aroused, and a moral revolution never yet recoiled upon its abettors. The revolution is marching on, gathering its recruits as it marches, and gaining a power that in a few months more will be irresistible. In this connection the Philadelphia Press pronounces this judgment:

> The audacity of this power has been something astounding. While it filled the poor-houses and the prisons, it made and unmade mayors, governors and Congressmen. Politicians have stood in mortal terror of it, and have truckled to it as something whose favor was more valuable than the good will of respectable voters. This condition of things could not continue always. The self-respect of intelligent voters, who form a great majority of the citizens of this country, would not permit it, and sooner or later they were certain to be aroused to the peril of the situation. It is probable that that time has come, and that the liquor power is to feel the avenging heel of an outraged public for thrusting its head into politics and daring to oppose the respectable public sentiment of the country.

Will each pastor in our patronizing Conferences please send a card to the editor, stating how many conversions and how many additions to his church there have been between January 1 and July 1? The editor will take it as an especial favor. We want the good news. The account of conversions and accessions to the church is the best news that can be published.

"Like a Dove."

BY J. B. A. ARRENS, D. D.

The dove is one of the emblems of the Holy Spirit. It is beautifully expressive. "The Spirit of God, like a dove, descended on Jesus, and abode on him." The dove, like the lamb, is the symbol of innocence. The Savior exhorts us to be harmless as doves. Only one time Christ addressed God as Holy Father; but that epithet constitutes part of the very name of the third person in the blessed Trinity. Much needless discussion about sanctification. When this Spiritus Sanctus dwells within us, sanctification is an accomplished fact. Of gentleness, the dove is also an emblem. Gentle, but effectual, is the operation of the Holy Spirit—like the leaven in the meal. Disarding the arm of flesh, he stands at the heart's door, and knocks. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." When animated by this Spirit, we do not fret ourselves because of evil-doers, but have patience with them, lovingly exhorting them to turn from their sins to God. The meek, Christ assures, shall inherit the earth. Yes, success will crown our evangelistic and missionary efforts, if the Spirit of gentleness actuates us.

Before the telegraph was in operation the dove was frequently utilized for purposes of communication. The carrier-pigeon was of great benefit to our ancestors. It brought glad tidings to those in besieged cities; it conveyed comfort to sad mothers and wives at their village home. The Holy Spirit is our intermediary between earth and heaven. It is only through him that we can approach God. We know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit maketh intercession for us with groanings unutterable. Successful prayer prerequires two intercessors—Christ at the right hand of God, and the Holy Spirit at the door of our heart. More rapidly than the dove effected inter-communication between the beleaguered and their friends does the Holy Spirit institute interchange of sentiment between God and man. When filled with the Spirit, asking and receiving assume the relation of cause and effect. Our prayer is, as it were, converted into communion with God. We look into his eyes beaming with love; lean on his breast swelled with ardent affection for us. Our prayers are the angels which ascend, and the answers are the angels which descend on the Jacob's ladder. Without the intermediation of the heavenly Dove, prayer is a hollow mockery.

When the deluge had partially subsided, a dove brought to Noah an olive leaf. Now the patriarch was assured of a speedy liberation from the confines of the ark. When in the throes of repentance our agonizing soul exclaimed: Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy water-sponts! All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me! When, O Lord! will thy wrath subside? when will I reach the terra firma of acceptance with thee? It was not long until deliverance came. Soon the Holy Spirit made his appearance with the celestial olive branch, bearing witness with our spirit that we had become children of God.

David wished that he had wings like a dove, for then he would fly away and be at rest. He yearned for freedom from the cruel persecution of King Saul. But more than monomaniacal Saul—the enemy of our soul has great wrath, knowing that he hath but a short time. Like a roaring lion, he seeketh whom he may devour. Can we escape? Yes; with the wings of the heavenly Dove. We find a refuge in the clefts of the Rock of Ages. We defy thee, Satan! Thou art no more than God's shepherd dog. The holy Dove saves from the net of the diabolic fowler.

A wonderful saying that we are the sons of God, and that in due time we shall be like him. We who were formerly carnally minded, without the fear of God in our hearts, have been born again by the operation of the Holy Spirit, and read our title clear to mansions in the sky! Our experience is contained in Psalm lxviii, 13. We lay among pots, broken vessels, useless fragments. Nevertheless, we have become as wings of a dove covered with silver, and the feathers with yellow gold. Only regeneration could convert the fragments into vessels of honor. Our excellency is of the Holy Spirit. In him we spiritually live, move and have our being. Our light and glory are the reflection of his radiance. Paradise, the image of God, being restored to us, the Lover of our souls addresses us with Solomon in his songs: "O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely."

Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly Dove,
With all thy quickening power:

Homer Revival.

MR. EDITOR: A word more as to our revival. The services were continued for nearly five weeks—night and day. It was a hard-fought battle. It took hold of every class, but mainly the men of the community. Old feuds and long-standing heart-burnings were healed. All the churches dwelt together in love. Several saloon keepers were smitten, and came kneeling at the mercy-seat, and, with open confessions to the congregation, renounced and denounced their nefarious business and turned their "feet to the testimonies of the Lord." Our church has received forty-five new names; but the gracious influences can not be computed in numbers or time. There are other stricken and enquiring hearts; some of them old and almost hopeless cases. We still pray for them, and ask prayers for them by the church.

So many rich incidents made the meeting peculiarly interesting, and attested its divine power. Not much that was boisterous, but a deep, profound and earnest seeking after God. We hope our sister churches will receive additions to their membership, and will go in the strength of this revival many days.

Bro. Wycough, Presbyterian, preached for us two good sermons in the commencement of the meeting. Bro. Parvin came, and spent three days, and preached some of his camp-meeting sermons. Bro. Blocker came to my assistance, and preached in "demonstration of the Spirit, and with power." By his affable and sweet spirit and untiring zeal he grew on the people, and his ministry was owned and honored of God. I praise God, take courage, and press on. To his blessed name be all the glory! Amen!

I ought to state that our "praise meetings" were seasons of peculiar religious enjoyment and power. And our services for special prayer for individuals were signalized by answers, and the awakening and converting power of the Holy Spirit. The organ was consecrated, and used in almost every song. And what singing! I am now in favor of organs in revivals when manipulated by consecrated fingers and hearts. I am almost sick. Faint, yet pursuing.

In Christ, affectionately,

T. B. WHITE.

JUNE 21, 1887.

P. S.—Not until now could we make a certain and successful move against the strongly entrenched rum power.

Personals.

We have received the Register of Kavanaugh College, Holmesville, Miss. There are registered 50 pupils in the college and 66 in the preparatory department. We are glad to note that the Bible has a conspicuous place in every college class. Why should it ever be otherwise? Rev. H. W. Featherstun is president.

Prof. R. W. Jones, of Columbus Institute, Miss., has been elected to the chair of chemistry, mineralogy and geology in Emory and Henry College.

Bro. Sawyer, our presiding elder, dedicated a new church at Brookstown, in East Baton Rouge parish, Sunday, June 19. The erection of the church is the result of Bro. Faunt LeRoy's efforts.

Bro. Ellis, of Jackson district, gave us a call last week. He represents his work as progressing finely.

It is said that Prof. Henry Drummond, author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," is to lecture this summer at the Farmingham and Chautauqua Assemblies.

R. H. Bennett, eldest son of the late Dr. W. W. Bennett, of Virginia, will be licensed to preach at the next Quarterly Conference. The mantle of the father falls upon the son.

Our contributors will please bear in mind that the ADVOCATE will only accommodate so many per week. If you are tired waiting for your articles to appear, the editor sympathizes with you, for he has some fine articles that he has not been able to squeeze into the paper. Let us all remember the poet's line—

Learn to labor and to wait.

Be sure to read Bro. Lambuth's letters from Japan. He makes a special call upon Mississippi and Louisiana.

Rev. D. C. B. Connerly, formerly of Alabama, died in Camden, Ark., June 12, aged sixty-four years.

Rev. B. Carradine preached the baccalaureate sermon at Mansfield Female College, June 19, and Rev. S. H. Werlein preached at the East Mississippi Female College, June 12. Both sermons of these rising young ministers have been spoken of as not only good, but as promises of something far better in the future.

Bishop Hargrove has gone to Oregon, where he opens the Columbia Conference, August 10.

A card from Bro. J. L. Forsythe says that he has been confined to his room for four weeks. As we are also a sufferer for more than two months, we know how to sympathize with our brother. We pray that he may be soon able to go about "his loved employ."

Rev. A. B. Earle, a recent graduate of Wofford College, and appointed by Bishop Duncan to supply the pulpit of the Algiers Church, in this city, arrived last Saturday and entered upon his work.

Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, of Baton Rouge, was in Norfolk, Va., last, speaking to crowded houses in halls and churches on the temperance question.

The Southern Christian Advocate celebrated its jubilee last week. It is a royal number, full of reminiscences, sketches of its former editors, reproductions from the first number, etc. Whatever the paper has been in the past, we venture to say, it was never better than now. May the vigorous young editor live to see its centenary.

Whitworth College.

June 19-21 were commencement days at Whitworth. Rev. Dr. J. J. Wheat, an honored son of Copiah county, having for his theme "The Cross of Christ," and for his text Galatians vi, 14, gave a large and attentive audience a grand commencement and a glorious gospel sermon. (So I was told by a number who heard and were blessed by the sermon.)

Bishop Galloway, though enfeebled from an attack of malarial fever while in the Indian Territory, delivered a forceful and instructive address to the Young Ladies' Christian Association, Sunday night.

Monday morning eight essays were read by members of the graduating class. To Miss Rosa Cahn, of Pike county, was awarded the medal for the best essay; her subject being "Ideals." All the essays were read in a most remarkable and effective manner, the reading being characterized by clear enunciation and correct emphasis. It was a treat to hear them read.

The concert, Monday night, was pronounced, by those competent to judge, a successful exhibition of the skill of the pupils and of the faithful painstaking care of Prof. Eckhardt and his able assistants.

Tuesday morning the address was delivered by Gov. Robert Taylor, of Tennessee. It was a a new departure and was well received. It is not to be wondered at that he was elected, by such a triumphant majority, governor of the great commonwealth of Tennessee over his distinguished brother, if he made such speeches during his campaign. He captured his audience, and all were agreed that it had been many a day, if ever, since they had heard an address as witty and eloquent and able.

To Miss Willie Galloway, for proficiency in music; to Miss Annie Brekley, for excellence in elocution; and to Miss Annie Birdsong, for deportment, were presented handsome medals.

Bishop Galloway, in behalf of Mrs. Johnson, presented to the college a portrait of the late Rev. Dr. H. F. Johnson, so long the very successful president of the institution, and whose death is still deplored. The gift was gratefully accepted, and is valued beyond price.

The alumnæ meeting was held in the afternoon of Tuesday, and was addressed by the Hon. Ethel Barksdale. His theme might be called "Woman's Right to be a Bread-Winner and a Wage-Earner." It was a strong, clear and weighty argument for the complete emancipation of woman in every right direction. Maj. Barksdale planted himself on the right side of the prohibition question, and his utterances were greeted with rounds of applause. The essay read before the alumnæ association by Miss Fanny Bowen was well written and well read.

There were nineteen gradnates, sixteen of whom are church members, and converted ones at that. The religious influences at Whitworth are the very best. The faculty is strong, and a superior faculty will hardly be found in any female college in the land. Coming into office after the death of Dr. Johnson, and amid the most discouraging circumstances, President Fitzhugh has scored a most successful session and convinced everyone that the Board of Trustees were wise and judicious when they chose him for that responsible office. I know of no man who could have succeeded so well unless it be Dr. R. W. Jones, of the State Institute, at Columbus, Miss. The future of the college, under Bro. Fitzhugh, must needs be bright and prosperous. Those who wish to enter their daughters for the next session should apply at once, or they may not be able to get a place for them within the college walls.

The young ladies all speak in the highest and most affectionate terms of Mrs. Kidd, the accomplished matron of the boarding department and her discreet assistants.

This report should not close without reference to the elegant and appropriate address of President Fitzhugh in presenting the diplomas to the graduating class and the certificates of proficiency to others.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

Mr. Editor: Monday, June 13, at five A. M., I stepped off the train at Grenada. Rev. W. A. Candler got on. He had preached Bro. Newell's commencement sermon the day before. He did admirable work for the institution and town with the great gospel of love he so forcefully presented. I spent four days in closely watching and listening for facts concerning Grenada Collegiate Institute. Bro. T. W. Lewis gave vigilant attention for one day. We unhesitatingly say that it is doing excellent service for real Christian education. No sham about it. They have had on the roll this session 165 pupils; average attendance, 137. Closed out with over forty boarders.

The final exercises for the ten months' work were entirely satisfactory to every patron—as far as we gathered—to each trustee and the Visiting Committee. The examinations, private and public, were searching and readily revealed to us that there had been twoscore weeks of arduous, continued and harmonious labor puts forth by president and teacher. The papers of all the private examinations were on hand to be looked over by anybody, and an ardent solicitation made to do so. The exhibitions on Wednesday and Thursday nights were truly good.

Thursday was an instructive, touching, enjoyable day; music, charming and elevating. The address by Hon. E. Mays, of Oxford, Miss., was remarkable for its appropriateness, profundity and conciseness. It ought to be put in pamphlet form and carefully read by every citizen. Six young ladies, with no affected ostentation of voice or dress, read well-written, timely essays. Bro. Newell gave the diplomas of "M. E. L." in a way that caused thought and brought tears. Several received medals for specified proficiencies.

Many things very favorably impress the close observer of this North Mississippi Conference school. A few: 1. Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., is certainly well qualified and adapted for the position he occupies. 2. He will have only first-class teachers with him. 3. Grenada is healthy. 4. There is not a better college building in our country. 5. The food is ample and properly prepared, and rooms kept neat. 6. The girls are taught in reference to their souls, minds and bodies. What we did not of the above facts see, we authoritatively heard by parties both living out and in the city. Pray fervently for Grenada Collegiate Institute. Give money liberally to pay it out of debt; let a thousand dollars from each of a large number of persons come. Send your daughters and wards there. God bless you and our educational interest.

IMMENSE BARGAINS.—The great piano dealer, Philip Werlein, 135 Canal St., is now offering some of the greatest bargains in pianos and organs. This popular merchant means business, and he has put prices of pianos and organs down so low as to put them within the reach of all. You will be astonished to see what money can be saved by dealing at this popular house. Indeed, it is a source of pleasure to have dealings with such a house as that of Philip Werlein. Now, that the prices have been reduced, and terms offered are so convenient, every one will avail himself of the opportunity. Write to Mr. Werlein for catalogues and prices.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

Dyspepsia Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Rheumatism Is undoubtedly a blood disease caused by an excess of the lactic acid in the blood. Where there is perfect filtration of the blood there can be no rheumatism. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA will remove the poison, supply the acids and relieve the pains.

Scrofula Is caused directly by impurities in the blood, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, by purifying the blood, forces the impurities from the system.

Kidneys Through the Kidneys flow the waste fluid containing poisonous matter. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing pain in the small of the back and loins, flushes of heat, chills. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic, causing the kidneys to resume their natural functions.

The Liver By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood resolvent.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, that sparrow so frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes grating food and rolling ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in the case, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.

Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.

Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. H. HANDY, M. D.

Our Young People.

WHAT WE MAY DO.

The wise may bring their learning,
The rich may bring their wealth,
And some may bring their greatness,
And some bring strength and health:
We, too, would bring our treasures
To offer to the King;
We have no wealth or learning,
What shall we gladly bring?

We'll bring the little duties
We have to do each day;
We'll try our best to please him
At home, at school, at play,
And these shall be the treasures
We offer to our King,
And these are gifts that even
The poorest one may bring.

The editor will give the little cousins some work for the summer evenings. What words in common use contain the five vowels in alphabetical order? The editor also wants to know who of the little cousins can write the shortest sentence that will contain all the letters of the alphabet? The sentence must make sense.

MR. EDITOR: As I have seen so many nice letters from the boys and girls in your valued paper, I thought I would attempt to write one myself. My father is a farmer, and also a subscriber to your paper. I help him to work on the farm until crops are made: then I go to school until harvesting time; then I stop and help pa to gather the crop. Thus I get to go to school only three months during the summer. I love to go to school, and pa is going to send me ten months next year to a new school. The house will be completed the latter part of next month—will cost $2,500. I will close by asking the many young readers of your valuable paper a question concerning the Bible: Where is the word "bonnet" (worn by ladies) mentioned in the Bible? With much hopes to see this in print, I will close.

Yours respectfully,

EDDIE DUGGAN.

SABINE PARISH, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years old. I love to read the little children's letters. My cousin, Miss Walmsley, takes your valuable paper, and lets me read it every week. My papa is a lawyer. I have two little brothers, three and six years of age. I go to Sunday-school. We have over two hundred scholars. I learn one verse from the Bible every day, and recite the seven to my teacher on Sunday. I will answer Minnie B. Jackson's question: The word "ear-ring" is found five times in the Bible—Genesis xxiv, 22, 30, 47; Job xlii, 11; Proverbs xxv, 12. I will close by asking a question: How long was Joseph in Egypt? With good wishes to the ADVOCATE, I remain,

Your little friend,

EMMA WARBURTON.

ELKTON, Maryland.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl twelve years old. I go to school to Mr. Delhommer. My studies are grammar, history, geography and arithmetic and French. We have no Sunday-school here, which I am sorry for, as I should like so much to go to Sunday-school; but I take a good little church paper and have good little books to read. My grandmamma takes the ADVOCATE, and I love to read the children's letters. This is my first letter for publication, and I hope to see it in print. This is the year of jubilee to the Queen of England—fifty years since she began to reign. Will some of the little cousins tell me in what chapter in the Bible "jubilee" is mentioned, and how many times mentioned in the chapter?

Truly your friend,

SADIE E. NEBLETT.

BREAUX BRIDGE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: This is my first attempt to write to any paper. I am a little girl eleven years old. My father is a farmer. I have two brothers older than me, and two younger than myself, and one sister younger than myself. I will answer Label Gurry's question: Joseph was sold by his brothers to the Ishmaelites. I will close by asking the little cousins a question: Which is the longest chapter in the Bible? Yours truly,

MARY R. ANDERSON.

WOODVILLE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years old. I have a sister older than myself. I go to school to my cousin, Allen Castle. We are going to organize a Sunday-school next Sunday. I will close by asking the little cousins a question: Where is "myrrh" found in the Bible?

Your little friend,

LILLIE FRISBY.

WALTHALL, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to your valuable paper, I thought I would write; but, like the other little cousins, have a horror of the waste-basket. I am a little girl eleven years old. My younger sister and myself are raising chickens for mamma. We have been going to school since last November; but our school is out now. We go to Sunday-school every Sunday. Mr. Gould is my teacher; Mr. Dutley, the superintendent; Bro. W. C. Harris is our preacher; Bro. R. G. Porter is our presiding elder. I have read his "Book for Boys." I will answer Mamie Watts' question: "Jesus wept." I will ask a question: Who helped Joseph to bury Jesus?

LAURA ARNOLD.

A Man wants but little here below,
But wants that little strong.

This is especially true of a purge. The average man or woman does not precisely hanker for it, as a rule, but when taken, wishes it to be prompt, sure and effective. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets leave nothing to be desired in point of efficacy, and their action is totally free from any unpleasant symptoms, or disagreeable after-effects. Purely vegetable, perfectly harmless.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to the ADVOCATE in so long, I thought I would write again. I see so many letters from the little cousins. Our pastor's name is Rev. J. W. Ellison; he has been on this circuit three years. We like him very much. I will answer Sallie Seaman's question: It was Samson who slew more at his death than in his life. I will close by asking a question: Who was the son of Zernbbaal? With many good wishes to the dear old ADVOCATE.

CALICO.—Girls will be interested to know that calico claims a lineage of great antiquity. Mrs. Leonowens says in her "Travels in India," that "in the year 1498, just ten months and two days after leaving the port of Lisbon, Vasco da Gama landed on the coast of Malabar at Calicut, or more properly, Kate Rhoda, 'City of the Black Goddess.' Calicut was at that period not only a very ancient seaport, but an extensive territory, which stretching along the western coast of Southern India, reached from Bombay and the adjacent islands to Cape Comorin. It was at an early period so famous for its weaving and dyeing of cotton cloth, that its name became identified with the manufactured fabric, whence the name calico. It is now generally admitted that this ingenious art originated in India in very remote ages, and from that country found its way into Egypt. It was not until toward the middle of the seventeenth century that calico printing was introduced into Europe. A knowledge of the art was acquired by some of the servants in the service of the Dutch East India Company, and carried to Holland, whence it was introduced in London in the year 1678." Pliny, as early as the first century, mentions in his Natural History that there existed in Egypt a wonderful method of dyeing white cloth.

Its thousands of cures are the best advertisement for Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

SPECIFIC GRAVITY.—Here is another hard-sounding name for a very simple thing. Let us see what it means. When we weigh anything in water, we have seen that it loses in weight a certain amount, and this amount is equal to the weight of an equal bulk of water, or of the water displaced.

Suppose we take 38 ounces of gold and weigh it in water. It will, when immersed, weigh only 36 ounces. It has lost, therefore, 2 ounces, or one-nineteenth of its weight. So the amount of water displaced weighs only one-nineteenth as much as gold. In other words, gold is 19 times heavier than water.

Specific gravity is the name applied to this number 19. When we say that the specific gravity of any substance is 16 or 20, etc., we mean that that substance is 16 or 20 times as heavy as an equal bulk of water. This is all the mystery concealed behind those two formidable words, "specific gravity."—Our Youth.

Some Advice to Wives.

Remember that you are married to a man and not to a god; be prepared for imperfections.

Anticipate the discovery by your husband that you are "only a woman;" if you were not he would not care about you.

Once in a while let your husband have the last word; it will gratify him and be no particular loss to you.

Be reasonable; it is a great deal to ask under some circumstances, but do try; reasonable women are rare—be rare.

Remember that servants are made of the same material as you are; a little coarser grained perhaps, but the same in essentials.

Try and forget yourself; as to your husband, forget that you married him, and remember that he married you: he will probably do the reverse.

Let him read the newspaper at breakfast-table; it is unsociable, but, then, it is only a trifle after all, and he likes it.

Let him know more than you do once in awhile: it keeps up his self-respect, and you will be none the worse for admitting that you are not actually infallible.

Read something in the papers beside fashion-notes and society columns; have some knowledge of what is going on in foreign countries. Be a companion to your husband if he is a wise man; and if he is not, try to make him become your companion. Raise his standard; do not let him lower yours.

Respect your husband's relations, especially his mother—she is not the less his mother because she is your mother-in-law; she loved him before you did.—Brooklyn Magazine.

MARRIAGE.—In addition to the many rules laid down from time to time in regard to choosing a life-long friend and companion, here are two from a recent authority which are worthy of serious consideration: "First. A woman will be safe in refusing marriage with a man who is objected to by her male relatives, provided they are reasonably well acquainted with the object of her supposed affection. Second. A man should refrain from offering his hand in marriage to a woman who is not approved by his sister; or, if he has no sister, by his judicious lady friends." When it is considered that most of the ill-starred marriages are the result of self-will, and the disregard of the wishes of friends and relatives whose judgment there is every reason to trust, the importance of these two rules (really but one rule with two applications) will be seen.

TOO MUCH HIGH LIVING.—I have formed a settled conviction that the world is fed too much. Pastries, cakes, hot bread, rich gravies, pickles, and pepper sauce are all discarded from my "bill of fare," and I firmly believe that they will be from the recipes of the twentieth century. Entire wheat flour bread, vegetables, fruit, fish, with a little meat, and milk as the chief drink, will distil in the alembic of the digestive organs into pure, rich, feverless blood, electric but steady nerves, and brains that can "think God's thoughts after him," as they have never yet been thought. This is my recipe: "Plain living and high thinking:" and this is my warning: "With high living you will get exceedingly plain thinking."—Miss Frances E. Willard.

Be ever gentle with the children God has given you.—Burritt.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Reason Why

Ayer's Pills are so popular is, that while always reliable, as a cathartic medicine, they never leave any ill effects. This is because they are purely vegetable, and entirely free from calomel or any other dangerous drug. In all cases, therefore, whether the patient be old or young, they may be confidently administered.

In the Southern and Western States, where derangements of the liver are so general, Ayer's Pills have proved an inestimable blessing. D. W. Raine, New Berne, N. C., writes:

"I suffered a long time with stomach and liver troubles. I tried various remedies, but received no benefit until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. These pills benefited me at once. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored."

Throughout New England, next to lung diseases, Stomach and Bowel Complaints are the most prevalent.

Dyspepsia

and Constipation are almost universal. Mr. Gallacher, a practical chemist, of Roxbury, Mass., who was long troubled with Dyspepsia, writes:

"A friend induced me to try Ayer's Pills, and, after taking one box without much benefit, I was disposed to quit them; but he urged perseverance, and, before I had finished the second box, I began to experience relief. I continued taking them, at intervals, until I had used eleven boxes. Suffice it to say that I am now a well man, and grateful to your chemistry, which entirely mine."

The head and stomach are always in sympathy; hence the cause of most of those distressing headaches, to which so many, especially women, are subject. Mrs. Harriet A. Marble, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that for years she was a martyr to headache, and never found anything to give her more than temporary relief, until she began taking Ayer's Pills, since which she has been in the enjoyment of perfect health.

GOOCH—JEROME CHILDERS GOOCH was born August 15, 1860; died May 23, 1887. As the Sabbath-day had gently passed away, leaving its beautiful golden rays behind, so this great sufferer gently passed away from friends and loved ones, leaving the sweet remembrance of a dutiful son, loving brother, and the example of a patient sufferer. For eighteen months before his death, we might say, he was almost entirely confined to his bed by that slow and painful disease, rheumatism; scarcely a joint or muscle but what was, more or less, a point of suffering. Yet in all these eighteen months of suffering, in my visits, I never heard a murmur.

Jerome, as he was familiarly called, had every prospect before him to excite a desire to live. The only son, the joy of the household, an abundance of this world's goods; a cultivated mind, which seemed to be that of a philosopher. When the disease attacked his eyes, and he failed to see the beauties of nature, which were ever a great pleasure to him, and even when he could not recognize the face of loved ones, he still submitted without a murmur. I remember to have sat by his bed on one occasion, when it seemed life was almost extinct, yet he was calm and composed as an infant; no fear. At another time, when he thought the time for his release had come, his loving sisters being absent, he spoke calmly to his mother, and said: "Tell sisters good-bye. I should like to see them once more." So the Lord seemed to let him stand on the margin of the river for near two months longer. At last the time, the beautiful Sabbath evening day of rest, for his final departure came, loved ones looking on the weak and emaciated frame, and to all human appearance one would think, now is the time for fear; the step down into the chilly waters of death is to be taken. Father wants to know how son feels now, as the last step is being taken by the idol of his affections, and says, "My son, are you afraid to die." Calm and composed as ever, he replied, "No, father; no fear." Thus passed away the loving son and brother and grandson of Sister Maria Childers, of blessed memory.

HORN—Little ANNIE E. HORN died at the residence of her mother, near Quitman's Landing, in Adams county, Miss., August 9, 1886, aged eleven years, six months and eight days. She was born in Hinds county, Miss., February 1, 1875. Her mother moved in the neighborhood of Locust Grove Church some months before Annie's death. She was baptized by Rev. E. A. Flowers, May 16, 1886, and received into full connection July 14, 1886, by Rev. W. L. P. Hamleatt. Little Annie's sweet smiles and gentle spirit is missed in our church and Sabbath-school, when we look at the vacant seat and realize that she can be with us no more in this life. But, thanks to God, we can be with her in the life to come. She leaves a widowed mother, a brother and two sisters to mourn her departure. She often prayed for her sister and mother. Her last words were a prayer for the welfare of her soul—"Lord, have mercy on my soul."

A. C. FLOWERS, P. C.

RILEY—On June 2, 1887, HESTER ANN RILEY, aged one year and three days, infant daughter of J. H. and L. A. Riley, left us for a home in heaven. She was a dear little snowdrop; one of the sweetest and brightest ever sent to gladden an earthly home. The little chair is empty now, the little clothes laid by; and father's and mother's hearts are desolate. But God is good, and we must believe "that he doeth all things well;" and while your hearts, fond parents, seem breaking "for the sound of a voice that is hushed," ask for grace to kiss the rod with which he smites you, and he who seeth the sparrow when it falls, will comfort and uld you. Think of your precious little one, not as lying in the cold, dark grave, but as one of God's chosen; now walking the streets of the beautiful city above.

AUNTIE.

ADAIR—NONA ERNESTINE, daughter of W. F. and Rosa Adair, died November 10, 1886, near Union Church, Mississippi. This sweet little Christian was a little more than six years of age when she died. She was bright, intelligent and pious. When she was on her death-bed she talked of dying and told her parents not to grieve for her; for she would be better off. Jesus said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." But, notwithstanding the forbidding by parental affection and tears, and the skillful treatment of the physician and loving friends, dear little Nona went straight to Jesus and, "at the beautiful gate," she is "watching and waiting" to welcome the loved ones home.

W. B. HINES.

BAYER—Died May 19, 1887, in the thirty-second year of his age, H. C. BAYER. In his death the church has lost a bright and shining light; the cause of Christianity, an earnest and energetic advocate; the community in which he lived, an honest, upright, influential citizen; and his wife, a fond and faithful husband. It is with profound gratitude and pleasure that we recall his many virtues and self-sacrificing spirit which made him respected and admired by those who knew him best; his untiring zeal and faithfulness in everything that would promote his Master's cause in the church to which he gave his best energies. We commend his Christian character and fidelity to his church; his chaste and zealous conduct, and the interest he maintained toward the various enterprises of Christianity, as being worthy the imitation of us all. We commend his wife, in this, her sad bereavement, to her heavenly Father whom our departed brother loved to honor and obey, whose care is so complete that not a sparrow falls to the ground without his knowledge, whose eyes are always upon us, and whose ears are ever open to the supplications of all his people who seek in him a comforter.

F. C. SIMS.

RICHMOND—CAROLINE RICHMOND died in Monroe, La., on December 21, 1886, in her seventy-third year. She was born in this—Ouachita parish and spent her entire life here. Her parents were among the first settlers from France. She was brought up in the faith of the Roman Church, but for many years held no fellowship with that church. She was, however, a woman of godly character—gentle, patient, retiring and conscientious. In 1885 she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in this place, and lived a most exemplary life, ever full of love to God and his people. She was a sufferer many months before she died, but endured all with Christian fortitude and submission to the will of God. One of the greatest trials of her life was the death of her only son, Tom, whose manly arm had been her support for some time during her widowhood. He died September 12, 1886. A little more than three months later she followed. For several days before her death she seemed to be blessed with glorious visions of that celestial kingdom into which she was so soon to enter. There she now awaits the coming of her two bereaved daughters who remain a while longer on this side.

SHARP—FRED HAMPTON, youngest child of M. H. Sharp and Jennie Sharp, was born May 23, 1885, and died April 26, 1887, aged one year, eleven months and three days.

A FRIEND.

SUCCESSFUL MEN.—Who are they? They are those men who, when boys, were compelled to work, to help either themselves or their parents, and who, when a little older, were under the stern necessity of doing more than their legitimate share of labor; who, as young men, developed their minds and wits by persistent study, in moments that are ordinarily wasted. Hence, in reading the lives of eminent men who have greatly distinguished themselves, we find their youth passed in self-denials. They sat up late, rose early to the performance of imperative duties, doing by daylight the work of one man and by night that of another.

A banker of high integrity and who started in life without a shilling, said the other day: "For years I was in my place of business at sunrise, and often did not leave it for fifteen or eighteen hours." "What is your secret?" asked a lady of Turner, the distinguished painter. He replied: "I have no secret, madame, but hard work." Says Dr. Arnold: "The difference between one man and another is not so much in talent as in energy." "Nothing," says Reynolds, "is denied well-directed labor, and nothing is to be attained without it." "Excellence in any department," says Johnson, "can now be attained by the labor of a lifetime, but is not to be purchased at a lesser price." "There is but one way to succeed," said Sidney Smith, "and that is by hard labor, and the man who will not pay that price for distinction had better at once dedicate himself to the pursuit of a fox." "Step by step," reads the French proverb, "one goes very far." "Nothing," says Mirabeau, "is impossible to a man who can and will. This is the only law of success."—Exchange.

Happy Homes.

Much has been written and said about how to make home happy. The moralist and the preacher have hackneyed this theme until it would seem nothing more remained to be said. But the philosophers have gone far out of their way to account for the prevalence of ill-assorted couples and unhappy homes, and have over-looked the chief cause. Most of the unhappiness of married life can be traced directly to those functional derangements to which women are subject. In nine cases out of ten the irritable, dissatisfied and unhappy wife is a sufferer from some "female complaint." It cures all those peculiar weaknesses and ailments incident to women. It is the only medicine sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. See guarantee printed on wrapper enclosing bottles.

It is well to think well; it is divine to act well.—Horace Mann.

The Evening Bells.

In one of his books Rev. Dr. Adams gives the following beautiful incident:

"In the Cathedral at Limerick there hangs a chime of bells, which were cast in Italy by an enthusiast in his trade, who fixed his home near the monastery where they were first hung that he might daily enjoy their sweet and solemn music. In some political revolution the bells were taken away to some distant land, and the maker himself became a refugee and exile. His wanderings brought him, after many years, to Ireland. On a calm and beautiful evening, as the vessel which bore him floated on the placid bosom of the Shannon, suddenly the evening chimes pealed from the cathedral tower. His practiced ears caught the sweet sound, and he knew that his lost treasures were found. His early home, his old friends, his beloved native land, all the best associations of his life were in those sounds. He laid himself back in the boat, crossed his arms upon his breast, and listened to the music. The boat reached the wharf, but still he lay there silent and motionless. They spoke to him, but he did not answer. They went to him, but his spirit had fled. The tide of memories that came vibrating through his heart at that well-known chime had snapped its strings!"

It was this incident which suggested to Moore his song of "The Evening Bells." As Moore is not so much read as he used to be, we reprint the lines, as they may not be familiar to some of our readers:

"Those evening bells! Those evening bells!
How many a tale their music tells,
Of youth, and home, and that sweet time
When last I heard their soothing chime!

Those joyous hours have passed away,
And many a heart that then was gay,
Within the tomb now darkly dwells,
And hears no more those evening bells!

And thus 'twill be when I am gone,
That tuneful peal shall still ring on,
And other bards shall walk these dells,
And sing thy praise, sweet evening bells!"

THE FOE OF QUACKS AND FRAUDS.

An Editor with Plenty of Nerve Who constantly Gets More by a New Method.

Amid luxurious surroundings, L. Lum Smith, editor and proprietor of The Philadelphia Public Herald, sat in his office, No 706 Chestnut street, when the reporter of a city journal called upon him. Mr. Smith is one of the best known men in the country, for he has devoted years to the exposure of commercial and literary frauds. Nothing intimidates him—neither libel suits by the dozen, nor attempts upon his life. A typical Southerner of the best class, Lum Smith is genial in manners and cosmopolitan in mind.

"Take care, don't sit down in that chair!" exclaimed Lum Smith.

"What's the matter with it?"

"That's my reception-chair, with invalid back, for frauds," was the prompt reply.

"You know something of the practical effects of Compound Oxygen treatment, do you not, Mr. Smith?" was asked.

"I have been taking it regularly for several months, and have been greatly benefited by its use," replied Mr. Smith.

"Did you take it for any specific malady, or as a general invigorator?"

"I had been worn out with over-work and forty odd vexations, and costly, but successful, legal contests with fraud perpetrators. Insomnia, or sleeplessness, attacked me. My brain refused to rest. To produce sleep I contracted the abominable habit of taking chloroform. Of course I could not continue that remedy long. All ordinary medicines failed, and I was in a most deplorable condition of health. Hearing of Drs. Starkey and Palen's Compound Oxygen, I hastened to try it. I knew it could not possibly harm me, because Oxygen is the life-giving principle of the earth's atmosphere, and I soon discovered that the Compound Oxygen, in which ozone is developed by Dr. Starkey's system of magnetization, built me up rapidly and restored to me the night's rest I so greatly needed."

"How often do you take it?"

"Every day, if possible. I stop on my way to dinner at Drs. Starkey & Palen's, 1529 Arch street, and inhale the Compound Oxygen. It has an excellent effect on the digestion. How do I explain that? I don't; I only state a fact. Probably the blood is rapidly purified by this operation, and as the blood is the life current in the human body, the whole man is strengthened. I never lie down immediately after taking the Compound Oxygen. I do my sleeping between one and seven o'clock in the morning, the remainder of my time is occupied with incessant business cares. The best indorsement I can give of Drs. Starkey and Palen's Compound Oxygen is that I use it continually myself. You doubtless noticed what Canon Farrar said about Oxygen as a curative agent when he made his recent address at the John Hopkins University? He declared that its practical application to the relief of suffering was the greatest discovery of the Nineteenth Century. The success of Drs. Starkey and Palen's Compound Oxygen is very largely due to the scientific methods employed in its manufacture. The process by which the ozone is developed is one of the most intricate and beautiful imaginable. Its effects upon me have been remarkable, and it is with a grateful sense of its benefits that I commend it as I do."

For full information about Compound Oxygen and what it has done for others address Drs. Starkey and Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE JURY SYSTEM.

—The experience of the New York courts in endeavoring to secure fit juries in some recent public trials shows the urgent need of reform in the administration of the jury system. It would almost seem as if the jury panels had become receptacles for the intellectually lame, halt and blind of the city. They show a great preponderance of illiterate and disqualified jurors. Foreigners who do not understand the English language, deaf persons, others over age, exempt persons, and persons painfully deficient in intelligence and otherwise disqualified, have crowded the lists. At the same time the burden of jury service is made heavier upon others. The fault seems to lie with the local administration of the jury system. A suggestion looking to a remedy, which has been made by Judge Barrett, one of the ablest and most experienced judges of the Supreme Court, is deserving of attention. He recommends the taking of a complete jury census, in which all the properly qualified jurors in the city should be enrolled. Materials to form the basis of such a census are at hand. They can be found, as Judge Barrett suggests, in the tax books, the lists of electors, the registers of the commercial exchanges and other organizations, and the books of the mercantile agencies. Such a census would supply a sufficient number of qualified jurors to make the burden of service on the individual juror slight. Something of this sort must be done. It is a disgrace that in a great commercial metropolis like New York, where complicated mercantile questions are so often before the courts, the quality of the jury service should be so low as it is.—Bradstreet's.

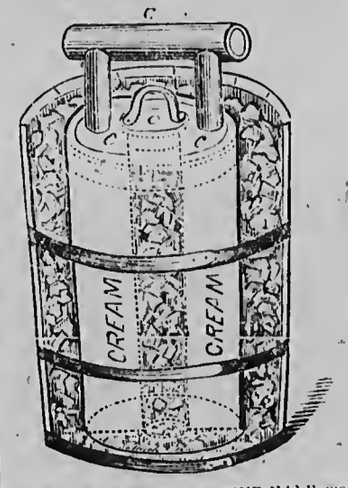
ROGERS & MAHER'S

Original Automatic Ice Cream Freezer

Saves Time, Labor and Ice.



In its construction we gain ONE-HALF more freezing capacity over the old style of crank and paddle, besides the labor of turning and repacking. The tight-fitting covers—C—preventing any possibility of the salt or water mixing with the cream, besides avoiding (as in other freezers) the labor of unpacking the whole bucket, when an examination of the cream is desired. In our freezers, access to the cream is at all times convenient, by simply removing the cover, C, without any way disturbing the ice or freezer.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

June 21, the day set apart for the inauguration of the Queen's Jubilee, being the first day of the fifty-first year of her reign, will long be remembered as one of the most remarkable epochs of England's history. Never has such a large crowd been seen in London. So great was the desire to get a view of the royal procession, thousands remained in the streets all night. Religious services were conducted in Westminster Abbey by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Dean of Westminster, in the presence of 10,000 people. The streets, through which the pageant passed, were lined with people, who cheered the Queen enthusiastically as she passed. Nothing happened to mar the pleasure of the occasion.

On the twenty-second three hundred thousand little children gathered in Hyde Park to do honor to the Queen.

The Emperor William's health is now in its normal state.

The Russian and French ambassadors, respectively, have addressed a note to the Porte on the subject of the Egyptian Convention. It is reported that their communication contained a threat that war would ensue should the Convention be ratified.

Mr. Platt, member of Dominion Parliament for Prince Edward County, gave notice that he would make a motion that free trade be established between Canada and the United States.

The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Kings of Greece, Denmark, Belgium and Saxony, and the Crown Prince of Germany, and Lord Wolsley and the Duke of Cambridge reviewed 12,000 troops at Aldershot, Thursday.

The Queen expressed herself as being highly pleased with the success of the jubilee celebrations.

The Cabinet has decided to prorogue Parliament about the middle of August.

In the French Senate, on Friday, the report of the Committee on Consumption of Spirits reported that the committee had come to the conclusion that the drinking of spirits in France has reached such a height as to be a social danger.

Up to date, the number of cases of cholera at Quilbta, Argentine Republic, is 1,959; deaths, 1,002.

By the action of the French and Russian ambassadors the Porte is placed in a predicament, from which it hardly knows how to escape. France threatens to break off diplomatic relations with the Porte, and reasserts its claims to the right of the oriental holy places, if the convention be ratified; while Russia demands recompense in the direction of Erzeroum. If Turkey does not sign the treaty, it is asserted, the special British envoy will depart from Constantinople instantly.

It is said that the absence of English Catholics from the jubilee celebration was due to the attendance being prohibited by the propaganda.

England has granted the request of the Porte in regard to an extension of time in which to ratify the Egyptian Convention. Time is extended to July 4.

Justin McCarthy writes that there is not the slightest truth in any report about Mr. Parnell's retiring from public life.

DOMESTIC.

The Fidelity National Bank of Cincinnati was closed by order of the government, through its representative, Mr. Eugene Parnell.

A solemn requiem mass was celebrated in the Church of the Holy Innocents, New York, on the thirty-first, for the repose of the souls of 500,000 Irish, who died of starvation, during Queen Victoria's reign.

Reports from the Treasury show a prosperous state of affairs; the cost of oleomargarine cheapened by the tax; a decided increase in the imports at New Orleans.

The Executive Committee of the Southern Railroad and Steamship Association is in session at Washington.

The estimated loss in wages by the strike of the Chicago bricklayers, which was declared off Thursday night, is $2,500,000.

Gov. Hill has signed the bill passed by the State Legislature, extending local option throughout New York, to an extent, permitting communities which have prohibited retail liquor selling to also prohibit its sale at wholesale.

On Friday, there was quite a flurry in stocks in Wall street, which threatened to be a panic. Leading operators came to the rescue and the market recovered. Despite the great decline in stocks no failures were announced; this is explained by the reports that Gould, Field, Vanderbilt and Philadelphia capitalists have taken the stocks which were in weak hands, and relieved the holders of the necessity of sacrificing them. One report said Field had taken up $7,000,000 Manhatten stock.

The period of grace granted Dr. McGlynn, of New York, is about to expire. He has made no sign of submission, and it is stated that the Pope will without further delay formally excommunicate him.

The fever record at Key West now stands, June 26: total cases to date, 42; total deaths, 18; sick now, 14; discharged cured, 10.

A great fire broke out in the tobacco quarters in Louisville, on the twenty-fifth, and destroyed properly to the value of $500,000.

Jacksonville had a fifty thousand dollar fire last week, by which three men lost their lives.

Gov. Hill has just signed the bill passed by the last Legislature, which makes it a penalty, punishable by a fine and imprisonment, for any one to practice medicine in that State who has not a diploma from an incorporated medical school or college.

During a riot in Rochester, N. Y., caused by the interference of union strikers with non-union laborers, three officers were severely injured by stones, three strikers were clubbed and arrested and one man was shot through the upper part of his head.

BOOKS.

THE STORY OF METLAKAHTLA. By Henry S. Welcome. Saxon & Co., 39 Chambers street, New York.

This is a story of a missionary work among the Talmshean Indians, in British Columbia, on the North Pacific Coast, near Alaska, by Mr. William Duncan, under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society of England. It relates the toil and sacrifices undergone to recover a most barbarous tribe of cannibals, and to teach them by personal example the arts and trades of Christian civilization, and infuse into their heathenish hearts the doctrines and facts of the true religion. It further relates how the faithful missionary plodded his way to success, and then how he was dealt with in such a manner by the home society as to make him resolve to remove his little community off British soil into American Alaska. The story is well told, and there are some heavy blows against the methods of the Church Missionary Society in maunging foreign missions.

WORD-STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT. By Marvin R. Vincent, D. D. Vol. I. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. For sale here by George Wharton & Bro., 5 Carondelet street. Price, $1.

This book is what the title intimates. It is not a commentary. It is not exactly a lexicon. Nor is it a Greek concordance, and yet it in some degree partakes of the nature of each of them. It is not intended specially for the Greek scholar, nor entirely for the English student, but for both. The man who understands the Greek language will find this book a valuable help to understand the words of the New Testament. The preacher who don't know one Greek letter from another will receive assistance in acquiring a knowledge of the truth which he will find hardly anywhere else. This volume comprises the words in the synoptic gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, and the Epistles of James, Peter and Jude. We recommend the book heartily to all our preachers. It is well worth its price.

PERIODICALS.

The monthlies, for June, received since last issue are: Vicks' Illustrated, Sidereal Messenger, Cosmopolitan, Galaxy of Music, Outing, The Writer.

Hay Presses.

In another column will be seen the advertisement of the Mississippi Hay Press Company, who are prepared to furnish parties in need of Hay Presses with Hamilton's Patent, reverse cam (packing both ways), continuous (one bale following another), making a beautiful merchantable bale weighing about 100 pounds, in layers, size 16in x 18in x 36 long.

These presses can be bought for about one-half of what a Northern or Western press is sold for; will do the same or more work in ten hours than any other, and for ease on horses, simplicity and speed, they are unequaled. They are made of good white oak neatly painted.

Mr. Hamilton has issued a neat pamphlet, of sixteen pages, on hay culture, giving many suggestive points for the guidance of the hay producer, which will be mailed with full information, prices, etc., by addressing Mississippi Hay Press Company, Meridian, Miss.

"Life and Labors of William H. Watkins, D. D.," will be sent to any address as a premium for two new subscribers accompanied by the cash, or for four renewals with cash.

For Rickets, Marasmus, and Wasting Disorders of Children,

Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is unequaled. The rapidity with which children gain flesh and strength upon it is very wonderful. Read the following: "I have used Scott's Emulsion in cases of Rickets and Marasmus of long standing, and have been more than pleased with the results, as in every case the improvement was marked."—J. M. MAIN, M. D., New York.

Throughout the North and West there is an organization among the churches known as "The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor." This is an organized effort to make Christian workers of our young people. As the great want of many churches is workers, it would be well for our pastors to look into this organization and see if it can not be adapted to the needs of our churches in Mississippi and Louisiana.

Change of Base.

On and after June 1, 1887, the office of the Kennesaw Route will be at 146 Common street, next door to ladies' entrance of St. Charles Hotel. This is the only line running Pullman Buffet Cars from New Orleans to Washington without change, passing the numerous springs and summer resorts of East Tennessee and Virginia. Low rate excursion tickets to all points.

Notice.

The City Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will hold its bi-monthly meeting on Tuesday, July 5, at eight P. M., in Carondelet Street Church. By order of the president, the meeting occurs on the first instead of the second Tuesday, to avoid conflicting with the Seashore Camp Meeting.

F. S. PARKER, Sec.

RUMORS OF WAR.—The war-cloud seems again to be rising in Europe. Russia, France, England and Turkey have begun a squabble about Egypt. The English treaty with Turkey, in regard to the protectorate of Egypt, whereby England is to gain control of the Suez Canal, is naturally objected to by Russia, and she has influenced France to protest against any such arrangement. The latest news is that Turkey has earnestly asked England to consent to a postponement of its ratification of the treaty until July 4, and England has consented. It is said that England has offered Germany the protection of Syria in return for Germany's support of England on the Egyptian question. England and Germany on one side, and France and Russia on the other, fighting over Turkey and Egypt, will change the whole aspect of European affairs.

A fire almost entirely consumed the town of Marshfield, Wis., on the twenty-seventh. 2,000 people are homeless; loss, $1,000,000.

CAMP-MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1887, on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (thirteenth), July, 1887.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds. Several distinguished preachers invited from a distance will be in attendance and will conduct the services of the meeting, and a large gathering is expected. A very general expression having been made to continue the meeting for a longer session than usual, it has been determined to extend the time of the services of the camp meeting to two weeks.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.; W. Otis, W. J. Hearin, R. E. Jones, Mobile, Ala.; J. J. Flowers, Hollins, Ala.; Dr. E. F. Griffin, Moss Point; J. P. Carter, Hattiesburg, Miss.; W. H. Foster, E. P. Mackie, J. H. Campman, H. O. L. Rayne, T. J. Carver, H. Jamieson, jr., P. Werlein, H. Haag, New Orleans, La.; or R. E. Price, the keeper of the camp ground, near Biloxi, Miss.

Round-trip rates, over Louisville and Nashville road, from Athens, Ala., $10 25; Birmingham, $9 25; Montgomery, $6 50; Greenville, $5 90; Evergreen, $1 80; Pollard, $4 80; Bay Minette, $2 60; and all stations between these points at corresponding rates. Tickets will be on sale from July 11 to 23. Mobile, $2; St. Elmo, $1 70; Grand Bay, $1 50; Scranton, 90 cents; Pass Christian, 80 cents; Bay St. Louis, $1; New Orleans, $2 50. Tickets on sale from July 12 to 27; good to return to July 31.

The rates for the round trip over the Illinois Central from all stations as far north as Canton will be four cents per mile. Tickets on sale July 12 to 21, and limited to July 31.

The rates over the Mobile and Ohio from all stations as far north as Corinth will be four cents per mile for the round trip. Tickets on sale from the eleventh to the twenty-third; good to return to thirty-first.

The public are invited to attend.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. R. J. ENOCHS.
(Late President of W. M. S. at Bethesda.)

BY R. M. D.

Mournful thoughts come crowding round us;
Thoughts that will not be repressed.
But why should we indulge in sorrow?
She has entered into rest.

While she lived, her lamp was burning,
And its light shone bright and clear;
Ever working for the Master,
And his service holding dear.

May her shining, bright example
Shed its influence all abroad,
Helping those she loved so dearly
On their journey home to God.

May her missionary spirit
Stimulate us, one and all,
Now with loving hearts to hearken
To the Macedonian call.

June Days Abroad.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTRELL, D. D.

From Cadiz, Ky., to Mansfield, La., via Memphis, Little Rock, Ark., Marshall, Texas, and Shreveport, is not quite so long a trip as if it were 'round through Mexico and Cuba; but, oh! the dust and soot through the weary hours. From Cadiz to Hopkinsville it is twenty miles, and in an open carriage the trip is made in the afternoon of June —, through a cloud of dust; and then a lecture, immediately on arrival, of one hour and a half—the thermometer at about one hundred. At Memphis, Tenn., Dr. Mahon has it in the papers that I'm to preach in his church, morning and night, on Sunday; so, notwithstanding the thermometer is at one hundred and two, I must sweat through an hour (and my clothes), morning and night. On Monday, seventeen hours from Memphis to Marshall, Texas, via Little Rock, and at the Capitol House, from eleven to five at night, sleep has me. It is better for sleep to get us than for us to get sleep. In the morning (Tuesday) I walk 'round to the parsonage, and Bro. J. B. Campbell greets me with: "You are just in time. I have a meeting at 9:30, and my preacher, who has been helping me in my meeting, is down with fever. You must preach for me." So I preach, for the first time, in Texas. Bro. Campbell is big up and high around, a la Morton—church extension. A most genial gentleman he is, too. Four hours' run, via Shreveport, brings me to Mansfield, and the arms of Grace are around me, as I step from the train. What experiences since we were together last! The commencement day follows the sweet repose and slumber of that night, and ten young ladies read addresses—compositions—to a hall crowded to its utmost capacity—scores of people crowding about the windows. Four hours of exercises preceded the commencement address—the readings, interspersed with music, and then the presentation of diplomas. Of the address, of course, others will have to speak; but, for an hour and a quarter, the people who had listened to the compositions and other entertainments, endured with respectfulness characteristic of a Southern audience. The young lady who read the first composition among the graduates was a Miss Capers, daughter of Col. Capers, and was, therefore, of special interest to me, as I had known her kindred in South Carolina and Alabama. What was my surprise, after speaking, to be summoned to the side of an elegant lady in the audience, who asked me if I recognized her. After looking carefully, I answered, "No." "Fannie Hines." She is now Mrs. Col. Capers, and the mother of the young lady graduate to whom President Grace had just presented a diploma. Forty-three years ago I had witnessed the mother's graduation in my brother's academy, and seen him hang a gold medal around her neck, and now here I am to witness the graduation of her youngest child—the eleventh! Fannie Hines! The radiant, jovial, genial, fascinating girl that boarded over two years in my brother's house, and for whom I carried love letters on the sly! Forty-three years since last I saw her, at old Sylvestria, five miles north of Holly Springs, Miss. The reader can imagine how we talked and laughed and wept. So few, now, can we name as among the talkers and laughers and weepers of earth. She had with her the gold medal, and showed it to me.

Of the brethren of the Louisiana Conference in attendance on the commencement—Isbell, Alexander, Cassity, Beard (the pastor there), and others—I would like to speak; all genial, cordial gentlemen. The trustees and other friends of the college are bent on pressing its claims and securing improvements. Grace has, under peculiar embarrassments, brought the college along to rising ground, and may be denominated its savior. He told me much of the venerable Pipes, who is now abroad, whose counsel and aid have been most effective. Of Grace I can say, he is one of two men I've known in the ministry who have impressed me with the conviction, beyond any doubt, that in honor they preferred others. Yea, three; he, Father Stephen Pilley, and Walter C. Harris. If ever one of these was on a strut, I never knew it.

A lecture on "Ingersollism," on Thursday night following, and then I came up to Shreveport, at earnest invitation of gentlemen and ladies, to lecture. Yesterday I preached for Dr. Scruggs here, at 10:30, and at night at the Baptist Church to a large audience composed of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist congregations. Attended the preachers' meeting this morning. The Episcopal pastor, Dr. Dalsell, was with us. He was in Europe with the family of my brother-in-law, Dr. J. Marion Sims, and, of course, was all the more interesting to me on that account. We passed in review all the doxies in the three hours we talked, and it gratifies me to say that they all are orthodox. In these days of so-called advanced thinking and new theology, when men claim to sail by sky-marks rather than by land-marks, it may be allowed me thus to note the fact that these elegant ministers, on Red river, are secure against any voyage up Salt river. Now abideth * * * these three; and the greatest of these is—orthodoxy.

Humor aside, we had a delightful interview. Dr. Penick, the Baptist, is from Virginia, and is an elegant gentleman, with a commanding presence. Dr. Vaulear, the Presbyterian, is solid and forceful. The Episcopal gentleman, Dr. Dalsell, is the embodiment of refinement. Dr. Scruggs has won his spurs in a successful pastorate in North Mississippi, and here there grows to completion a most elegant new church—as tasteful as any in the South.

I'm the guest of Capt. George E. Thatcher, of the Thatcher Institute, which is growing apace under his presidency—a school under military discipline that is an ornament to Louisiana.

I omitted to state, in speaking of my lady friend, Mrs. Col. Capers, that forty-three years ago she and I made a profession of religion at the same altar, in old Sylvestria Church, five miles north of Holly Springs, Miss. Morgan, the little black-eyed preacher, led the meeting, and Mrs. Capers speaks with enthusiasm of a sermon he preached on the Judgment at that meeting.

The elegant people of Shreveport have been demonstrative to a gratifying degree towards this scribe, and, in spite of the imminence of a storm last night, a large audience assembled to hear his "hour's talk about boys and girls." It was here at Shreveport that my boy, who had been shot through twice during the war, was paroled, when Kirby Smith surrendered the very last of the Confederate soldiers, and, with two hundred other soldiers, he was put on an old condemned boat—the Kentucky—and sent down Red river. Eight miles below here the boat went down, and nearly all were drowned. He put off coat and boots, as he saw the boat was sinking, and plunged into the river, and swam ashore. He is now a leading member of the Florida Legislature.

SHREVEPORT, La., June 28, 1887.

A Bible and Pious Professors.

MR. EDITOR: Your editorial upon the Bible as a text-book in our church schools is very timely. In answer to your question as to whether any of our Methodist colleges use the Bible in its regular course, I would refer to Wofford College, Spartanburg, S. C. When I graduated there in 1876 the Bible was studied by every class in the college. There was a four years' course in the Bible, as in mathematics or the languages. It may be since the introduction of new professors (Ph. D.'s) from Germany, the home of materialism and rationalism, that this most praiseworthy course has been voted down in the faculty. There are colleges in our Methodism who not only do not study the Bible in their course, but absolutely have materialists, skeptics, rationalists, and sometimes infidels among their faculty. Not long ago a father told me of the ruin of his son, and dated the beginning when he studied in a Methodist college under the personal influence of its infidel professor. Having graduated, he went forth an arrant doubter. There is much of rationalism imbibed in the German universities, and many of the brilliant graduates of our colleges are ruined by finishing their education in Leipsic and other German universities. Is the sterling piety, as well as the brilliancy and thoroughness of mental development, taken into account when a professor is elected by the trustees or faculties of our colleges? Frequently there is no piety accompanying these honors won in some beer-drinking universities of Germany, and less brilliancy and more piety would be preferable.

The greatness of Dr. Carlisle, of Wofford College, is in the fact that in his searches for truth he is lead by the Holy Spirit, and in his class-room is the atmosphere of a pure and godly man. Every boy feels and knows when he enters that door that he is in the presence of a choice spirit which controls and utilizes all his wisdom for God and heaven. What our professors need is to teach, control and lead the boys in the fields of truth, for the Holy Spirit in the professor's heart will surely bring out the boy if there is any chance to develop the possibilities in him. Give us, Mr. Editor, now an editorial on the necessity for real godly, pious men for our professors, not merely nominal, religiously inclined church members.

AMANDALE.

In Memoriam.

William Graves was born in South Carolina, June 26, 1802, and died in Hazlehurst, Miss., June 3, 1887, aged eighty-five years, lacking twenty-three days. In childhood he came with his parents to Alabama, and, after a short stay there, removed to Copiah county, Miss., where he grew up to manhood. November 26, 1829, he married Miss Mary Wade, with whom he lived "in perfect love and peace" fifty-six years, nine months and twenty-nine days. Their union was a remarkably congenial and happy one. They blended together like two kindred water-drops, and were always a comfort and help to each other, and by united industry and economy soon had a home of plenty. Bro. Graves was brought up by religious parents; but, while he had great respect for religion and religious people, in his hurry to provide for a growing family, he postponed seeking a personal interest in Christ until he was forty years old, when he was thoroughly awakened to a fearful sense of his exposure to the wrath of God as a sinner of long standing against him. His penitence was overwhelming; his repentance sincere and universal. He felt that nothing in the universe could satisfy his troubled soul but a demonstrative assurance of the pardon of his sins. With this heavy burden upon his soul he went to camp meeting in October, 1843, at old Crystal Springs, where, with others, he knelt in deep penitence at the altar to crave an interest in the prayers of the church, and where, to use the nomenclature of the Methodist, he was "powerfully converted." His consciousness of the pardon of his sins was so great that he never had those shades of doubt and fear which so often troubled the "babes in Christ." His good wife, of course, was in full sympathy with all his religious movements, and united heartily with him in a joint pilgrimage for heaven. Bro. Graves, having entered the church in due form, soon put on the whole armor of Methodism, and established all our usual forms of worship in his family, and became an active working member of the church. Both physically and intellectually he was somewhat above the common grade. By a persistent study of the Bible and our standard books, he soon placed himself among our most intelligent laymen, and was ready for every good word and work. He filled all the offices allotted to laymen, acceptably and usefully, as steward, class leader, prayer-meeting leader, trustee, Sabbath-school worker, and lay delegate to the District and Annual Conferences. He was also conspicuous as a citizen of the country. He was the only Whig ever elected to the Legislature from Copiah county; but, after serving out his term, he ever after declined being a candidate for civil office. When the California gold fever began to prevail in Mississippi, he concluded to try his fortune there for a year, but determined to take his religion with him and keep it all the time. Soon after his arrival in California he fell in with a Rev. Mr. Taylor, who was evangelizing among the gold hunters, and who, I think, is now a missionary Bishop in some foreign field, and was so well pleased with him that he neglected the gold mines to unite with Mr. Taylor in his rousing evangelistic meetings. He preferred being in a happy meeting, where he was often called on to lead in prayer, than digging for gold. The result was, his year ended and he came home happy in communion with God, but with little gold. He often said, however, that, spiritually, it was one of the happiest years of his life. After our country was so completely impoverished by the war, he was selected by some of our best citizens to look out a country outside of the United States, where they could do better than to remain here amidst such desolation. He made the pilgrimage, but returned, and said to those whose agent he was, that it was his honest conviction that Mississippi, with all her faults and misfortunes, was the best place to live in of which he had any knowledge. They were all satisfied with his judgment, and remained in Copiah. When beyond the middle of life, Bro. Graves sold his farming interests and settled in Hazlehurst, where, by his usual industry and economy, he lived in peace and plenty his remaining days. He had become quite enfeebled by age and palsy, when, last year, his beloved wife, after their long and happy pilgrimage together, went gracefully and joyfully down to the tomb. At her death he allowed himself to feel that he had nothing more to live for, and desired to depart and be with Christ. I have never been associated with a holier and happier Christian than this old patriarch was during the last months and days of his life. It was a benediction for me to be with him.

Hiwassee's Curriculum.

MR. EDITOR: Your appreciative notices of Hiwassee College provoke our gratitude. We have no better helping friend than the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Thanks.

In a notice, under date of June 23, you say: "We notice also the Greek New Testament in the course of study. Why not have the English Bible in the course?"

Perhaps we ought. But it is by no means excluded. A chapter is read by a professor to the whole school at the most auspicious assembling every week—Wednesday morning roll-call. The Word is expounded in the Sunday-school each Sabbath morning, and from the pulpit the same day. Then comes the Young Men's Christian Association service Sunday night, and one other night in the middle of the week, at which the Bible is made the theme of investigation. With us it is the book of books; the king in the literary camp. The celebrated declaration of Chillingworth, with a little variation, may apply to Hiwassee, to wit: "The Bible, the Bible is the religion of Protestants."

Very truly,

J. H. BRUNNER.

Seashore Camp Ground.

There will be a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Seashore Camp Ground, in Felicity Hall of Prayer, at ten o'clock A. M., on Tuesday, July 12, for transaction of business. All persons having business with the trustees, or connected with the interests of the camp ground or camp meeting, are invited to be present.

It is most desirable that all the trustees be on the camp ground on Monday, July 11, so as to get the various departments all in good running order, and that nothing be lacking to secure complete success at every point.

(Evangelical Messenger.)

Because it is an enemy of all good, an inciter and promoter of all evil, an incendiary, a robber, a murderer; because it stands as a defiant law breaker, as an armed bandit, in the path of progress, lifting bloody hands against law and order, and destroying the fruits of Christian civilization, the saloon must go! The murder mills must be stopped! So the people are beginning to say with the terrible emphasis of white-heat earnestness. And when the people once say so, it must be done!

(Advance, Chicago.)

As to the idea put forth by some that in the case of prohibition the State ought to compensate saloon keepers and distillers for loss of property, the matter is deserving of candid consideration. No good cause can be aided by wrong doing. But let this fact be noted: the State has no right to prohibit a business at all, except on the ground that it is intrinsically a bad business, and one fraught with damage to society. The fundamental justification for meddling summarily with this liquor business is, that it is a business found to be so essentially and continuously, always and everywhere, injurious to society and ruinous to otherwise happy homes, as to prove itself to be an incomputable damage to the commonwealth, amounting to a horrible nuisance and curse. It will be time enough for the prohibited nuisance to demand compensation for its abatement, when some compensation shall begin to be made for the merciless misery and loss it has already occasioned. The liquor business is so essentially injurious, its prosecution is, in fact, even if not yet so denominated in the law: a crime.

(Christian at Work.)

We have no desire to restore the whipping-post in this State; but we have sometimes thought if the drunkards could be soundly whipped they would be cured of their drunkenness. We are not among those who believe in the right of those drunkards to "plead the baby act," and say, "O, we are very sorry, but we can't help it." The law recognizes no such plea (except for drunkards!), and we can not but think a good flogging administered to the blear-faced, leer-eyed, tipsy drunkard who reels about the streets would do as much to make him walk along straight lines as anything. Or if there be those who are really incurable, their fitting place is the asylum, and not a home where they can make everyone unhappy, and everything unlovely about them. Anyway, it does not seem right to put the Christian Church under bondage to a few weak brethren who have lost their manhood by abolishing one-half of the Holy Communion instituted under ever memorable circumstances by our blessed Lord himself. If professing Christians can not "drink the cup worthily," let them obey St. Paul's injunction and "stay at home," and leave others to celebrate that blessed ordinance in precisely the way our Lord instituted it and enjoined its observance upon his disciples.

(Petroleum V. Nasby.)

The retailer is no longer the quiet man engaged in a disreputable business, but he is a missionary for the diffusion of alcohol, and an urgent, indefatigable fastener of the alcoholic appetite upon just as many as he can get his unclean hands upon. He goes out in search of customers, and by his efforts liquor is no longer a passive nuisance, but an active, aggressive evil. He makes his premises as pleasant as possible; he takes the daily newspapers, which are free to his customers; he hangs cheap, but attractive pictures, upon his walls—always of a demoralizing nature, for his business is to demoralize; he provides games of chance and skill for his customers, the stake being always beer; he invites workingmen to sit in his place, where there is a warm stove in the winter, and artificially cooled air in the summer; he spreads a cheap lunch which is free to all comers, the viands being invariably thirst-provoking. The business is, in itself, an organized hunt after weak men and children. If a druggist should entice boys into his store and feed them with opium, that after the habit was fixed, he might make money by selling them the drug, there would be no question as to what the community would do with him. If there should be found no law upon the statute-books to meet his case, one would be made immediately. Wherein is the difference? The beer-shop keeper makes it his business to entice boys and weak men into his place, and lures them on to an appetite more destructive than opium. He uses every artifice to fix the alcohol habit upon them, to their destruction and his profit.

Our harp-notes should be sweeter, our trumpet-tones more clear,
Our anthems ring so grandly, that all the world must hear!
Oh, royal be our music, for who has cause to sing,
Like the chorus of redeemed ones, the children of the King?

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

THURSDAY, JULY 7, 1887.

I was made to be eaten,
And not to be drank;
To be thrashed in a barn,
Not soaked in a tank.

I come as a blessing
When put in a mill:
As a blight and a curse
When run through a still

Make me up into loaves,
And your children are fed;
But if into a drink,
I will starve them instead.

In bread I'm servant,
The eater shall rule:
In drink I am master,
The drinker a fool.

Then remember the warning—
My strength I'll employ,
If eaten, to strengthen;
If drunk, to destroy.

JOHN THE BAPTIST.

Matthew iii, 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance."—Matthew iii, 8.

INTRODUCTORY.

The inspired record joins the lesson of to-day with that of last week, making no other reference to the lapse of time than simply prefacing this narrative with the expression, "In those days." In the last lesson we were studying the advent of a wonderful Child; in this we have made to us the announcement that this Child, now grown to be a man of thirty years, is about to enter upon his public ministry. Only once during this period is there any reference to this divine personage, and that was when, during his twelfth year, he was found in the temple astonishing every hearer by questions and answers as he sat among the learned doctors of the law. All other incidents of this incomparable history are left in profound silence. Many conjectures have been made in regard to them, and some apocryphal gospels have been written; but they are at such variance with the pure and perfect characteristics belonging to the inspired record that one turns away from them as from sacrilege. It is enough to know that "Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." Meantime, expectations of the coming Messiah were growing more and more confident. Those learned in the prophecies said that the time was about fulfilled. Suddenly a strange man in a strange garb appeared in the wilderness of Judea, who claimed simply to be "the voice of one crying in the wilderness." Great crowds are attracted by his rugged eloquence and his intense earnestness. They were convinced of his divine appointment and submitted to his baptism.

THE PREACHER.

Verse 1. "In those days." The date of this lesson, A. D. 26, the opening of Christ's public life. Really Christ was thirty years old at this time. Those who fixed the date of the years and centuries were mistaken in the data upon which they based their calculations. So the strange inconsistency appears, that men say Christ was born 4 B. C. "John the Baptist," the harbinger of the mediatorial reign, who was predicted by Isaiah xl, 3-8; Malachi iii, 1, now entered upon his ministry. His preaching was begun in the wilderness—an indication that it was to be untrammeled by conventionalities, primitive in its simplicity, natural, bold and strong. As he was to be the forerunner of that Being who stood alone in the universe—God-man—it was fitting that he should be unique and peculiar in his character.

2. "Repent." Literally, change your mind. A change of mind will surely be followed by a change of life, "for as" a man "thinketh in his heart, so is he." "Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." "Kingdom of God" is the phrase of similar import used almost altogether by Mark and Luke. It means the reign of God or of Heaven—the Messianic reign—or, as we would say, the Christian dispensation. "Is at hand." It is now offered to all; anyone can come just for the asking and obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need.

3. "Esaias"—the Greek form of Isaiah. In Isaiah xl, 3, almost the identical words here used are found. So the coming of the forerunner was accurately announced, as well as that of the Messiah himself. "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." It was the custom in ancient times to send forward persons whose duty it was to prepare the way for the coming of the sovereign. Particularly was this the case in unsettled, rude countries. Similarly, in these days pioneer corps are sent in advance of the regular army to make a way of passage. A graphic picture of leveling hills, smoothing the rough places and straightening the crooked is given by Isaiah. The spiritual application of this can be found in another expression of Isaiah: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts."

4. "His raiment." This was a sort of coarse or rough covering made of camels' hair, which was common to prophets. (Zechariah xiii, 4; II Kings i, 8.) "His meat." Locusts were prescribed by the Levitical code as lawful food, and they are still used in Asia and Africa, roasted while fresh, or salted away for future use. Honey abounded in Palestine, and was found deposited by bees in hollow trees and rocks.

THE HEARERS.

Verse 5. "Jerusalem and all Judea." Of course, this is not to be taken literally; it is only a common figure of speech intimating that great numbers of people attended John's ministry.

6. "Were baptized." Baptism is spoken of as a well-known rite, washings by water being common among the Greeks and Romans as well as the Jews. "In Jordan." The Greek preposition means in, within, at, on, with, by, etc., according to the connection and construction. Here, doubtless, it means "at." Baptize does not specify any mode; its meaning here is undoubtedly determined by the custom then in vogue among the Jews, viz: washing. It would have been a physical impossibility for John to baptize such numbers by putting them under the water. "Confessing their sins." John had faithfully and boldly denounced their sins, and now they were acknowledging them and preparing to turn away from them.

7. "Pharisees and Sadducees." The principal sects in Jerusalem. The former originally a pure and holy people, but now lapsed into hypocritical keeping of the law and a life of arrogant assumptions and fleshly gratifications. The latter believed in no hereafter, and might be called materialists and deists, their moral life being not so good as the former. "O generation of vipers." The bold and faithful preacher knew that all application for religious benefit was more than useless while they were leading lives so grossly inconsistent, and hence he denounced them and their mode of living in the most scathing terms.

THE SERMON.

Verse 8. "Bring forth fruits meet for repentance." Lead such a life as would indicate that you had really changed your mind; then you can consistently come and put on this outward sign of an inward grace.

9. "We have Abraham to our father." The Jews are not alone in this world in priding themselves upon their ancestry. While it is desirable to have pious progenitors, it is, nevertheless, true that, "every one of us must give account of himself to God." Ezekiel has it (xiv, 20): "Though Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither son nor daughter; they shall but deliver their own souls by their righteousness." God showed his withering condemnation of such an expectation in saying that he was able to raise up children to Abraham out of the very stones.

10. "Now the ax is laid at the root of the trees." There is not a moment to spare. Let the change of mind be speedy, or "every tree that beareth not good fruit shall be hewn down and cast into the fire." Everyone who does not reform shall be destroyed.

11. "He that cometh after me." The Savior entered upon his ministry when he was thirty years of age, and John commenced about six months before. John acknowledged that his baptism was but typical, and that of the Savior was the only one which could bring benefit. The mere baptism of water by John or anyone else, no matter what the mode may be, can do no good, unless there be a baptism of the Holy Ghost. "With fire." Fire is symbolic of the cleansing, sanctifying influences of the Holy Ghost.

12. "Whose fan is in his hand." The winnowing fan of the Hindoos is square, made of split bamboo, and the wheat is winnowed by waving the fan back and forth. "His floor." The raised place upon which the grain was placed here represents the people of the Jews, and after them the whole race of man. "Gather the wheat." Save the righteous in the everlasting kingdom. "Burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." The wicked shall be severed from the just and subjected to torment which shall never cease.

John was said to be a burning and shining light. He declared the whole counsel of God. He sought not to daub with untempered mortar. Sin is just as deadly now as it was then; hypocrisy just as damning to every spiritual prospect. Oh! for a generation of men of God like John the Baptist, whose business it is to "cry aloud and spare not, and shew the people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins."

Aberdeen District Conference.

The eighteenth session of the Aberdeen District Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened at Tupelo, on Friday, May 27, 1887, at nine A. M., Rev. Amos Kendall, presiding elder, in the chair.

Almost a full membership was present, and business was conducted harmoniously and speedily.

The reports of the preachers showed that the charges were in good spiritual condition and that finances were progressing satisfactorily.

Sermons were delivered by the presiding elder and Bros. T. W. Dye, J. R. Roberson, H. R. Tucker, John Ritchey and R. A. Ellis, the last named being from the Corinth district.

Bro. G. W. Bachman, colporteur of the North Mississippi Conference, was present, and succeeded in introducing some valuable church literature.

The Sunday-school Conference, which met the day before the District Conference, was one of the most successful and enjoyable of its kind, and revealed the fact that Aberdeen district is thoroughly alive to this important work.

The various committees appointed by the chair brought in acceptable reports which were adopted by the Conference, and that on temperance was ordered to be published in the Tupelo Journal, Lee County Standard, and other papers friendly to the cause.

The minutes of the Conference not being before me, I can only repeat substance. The committee approved the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of the State of Mississippi, extending sympathy to the bereaved relatives of R. D. Gambrell, late editor of Sword and Shield, affirmed that the evils of intemperance were beyond computation, and placed the district in the front ranks of the opposition to this monster iniquity of the age.

Mrs. Dr. Word, of the Okolona circuit, representing the Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi Conference, addressed the Conference upon the subject of "Woman's Work for Woman" in a chaste, scriptural and effective manner, after which she organized an auxiliary society for Tupelo, with eighteen members. At the request of this elect lady, a resolution was passed pledging every preacher of our denomination in the district to do all in his power to further the work of woman for woman in his respective bounds.

Pontotoc was chosen as the place for holding the next District Conference, and the following Annual Conference delegates elected: J. A. Blair, F. J. McDonald, M. C. Shell and John A. Trice.

A resolution, thanking the citizens of Tupelo for their elegant and cordial entertainment of the Conference, was adopted by a unanimous and hearty vote, after which an adjournment was ordered; and, altogether, I may say it was the most spiritual and encouraging District Conference I have ever attended.

An Inquiry.

MR. EDITOR: Please inform me, through your paper, who originated Children's Day. I was ignorant enough to suppose the Methodists did; but I understand that the Baptists in our town claim that it originated in the Baptist Church. I know our ministers have been for years in the habit of appointing a day to preach or talk to the children during our protracted and camp meetings, or at any other time they thought proper; but I have very seldom heard of a Baptist minister doing so—consequently I supposed the Methodists originated it.

CHURCH DEDICATION AT LAKE PROVIDENCE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: It is with mingled feelings of pleasure and gratitude to the great Author of all good that I undertake the delightful duty of giving you a short account of the dedication of our new church in the town of Lake Providence, on Sunday, June 19.

Barring the exceedingly warm weather, the day was everything that could be desired. The house was filled to its utmost capacity with an intelligent and highly appreciative audience. In addition to the seats proper attached, chairs had been brought in and placed inside and outside the altar and along the aisles—in fact, in every place where room for one could be found; but still some persons had to leave for want of a seat—many remained standing.

The dedication sermon was preached by Rev. C. K. Marshall, his text consisting of two words taken from Revelation xxii, 9: "Worship God;" and rarely has it fallen to our lot to hear a sermon of such power and eloquence. He preached again with power at night, the house being crowded about as full as it was in the morning. Bro. Harper, a true man of God, was with us, and has rendered most efficient service during the meeting. We trust that, under God, the services of this meeting have left a lasting impression for good upon this community.

The good people of this neighborhood have been exceedingly liberal in their contributions to our church; yet, when after the sermon on Sunday morning an additional call was made upon them for help, they readily responded, and a collection, in good subscriptions and cash, was taken up, amounting to three hundred and sixty-five dollars.

Our thanks are especially due to our pastor, Rev. T. J. Upton, for the great tact, earnest zeal and ceaseless energy he has displayed in erecting the beautiful edifice we now have, in which to worship the great God of heaven and earth.

Our church is, indeed, a gem of beauty inside and out. It is 30x50 feet. Its furniture and all its appointments, as well as its acoustic properties, are excellent. If you could just see it and compare it with the miserable, rickety affair—hardly fit to be called a house at all—in which we have been compelled to worship ever since the war, you would unite with us in profoundest gratitude to our heavenly Father for his great goodness in having put it into the hearts of this people to provide for us such an house. God grant that its members may be "living epistles," and that it may prove to be indeed the house of God and the gate of heaven to those who shall, from time to time, worship within its sacred precincts! Yours truly,

F. H. G. TAYLOR.

EAST BATON ROUGE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: There is a general moving up in church work on all its lines on this old circuit. Bro. Anders reports some accessions and some conversions; four live Sunday-schools; large congregations, and a deep interest manifested by the membership as well as by many who are not members. Finances are well up. A new church in process of building will be large and commodious—namely, Deerford; one church (Davis' Chapel) repaired, with new organ paid for. Bro. Anders was soon here after his appointment to this work stirring up parents and children, young and old, on the subject of his mission to them. We are all moving on now towards the promised land.

WILEY BROWN.

JUNE 23, 1887.

LAKE PROVIDENCE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Our new church in this place is completed, and was dedicated by Dr. C. K. Marshall, on Sunday, the nineteenth of June. To those who know the Doctor it is not necessary to say more than that the sermon was one of his best, and fully equal to the occasion and expectations of his vast audience. Rev. J. D. Harper, our worthy presiding elder, was with us, and assisted in the services.

We now have one of the neatest and most comfortable churches in North Louisiana, and to which we are not ashamed to invite visitors.

I think, Mr. Editor, that the seeds sown by Dr. Marshall and Bro. Harper while here will spring up and produce much fruit. THOS. J. UPTON.

REVIVAL IN ACKERMAN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: This town is situated on the Illinois Central railroad, midway between Kosciusko and West Point, Miss.; and is quite a [illegible] town. It is about four years of age.

Now this has been called a very hard place—that is, very wicked. It is true there are some wicked people there; but, while this is the case, Ackerman has many good people. Methodism has never been sufficiently tried as a means of deliverance from sin; but the above caption shows that a reformation has taken place.

The Baptists have a very unique little church, and they have given us the privilege of using it until we build. We have one in course of erection which will be finished in the near future.

We commenced a meeting there the second Sunday in June, which continued eight days and nights in a perfect blaze. We continued from Sunday until Tuesday without any ministerial help, when Rev. B. F. Phillips, of Columbus circuit, came to our relief. He came with the Spirit of his Master, and preached six sermons in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. He endeared himself to those people very much, and when he left, he carried with him their prayers and best wishes. As the result of our labors, the Christians of all denominations were wonderfully revived, and fourteen precious souls professed faith in Christ, and twenty-five added to our church. And at the conclusion of the last service we called on all who would erect family altars to manifest it publicly, and ten responded. The good work goes on. Pray for us.

W. T. BARNETT, P. C.

ADA CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We are moving up. We have had but one protracted meeting up to date, and that was of short duration, lasting but five days. Visible results: twelve accessions, and the church at that particular point greatly revived. We have been receiving members all along at our regular services. Total number received to date, twenty-two. We have several regular prayer meetings on the circuit, and nine organized Sunday-schools; and there is a decided improvement in regard to home religion—such as family worship, reading the Bible, etc.

Financially: taking into consideration the almost total failure of crops in this entire section of country last year, owing to the destructive rainfall of June last, our finances are doing well. We have received up to date, as quarterage, over one hundred dollars. Mr. Editor, if you knew exactly the condition of the people, you would think this was something after all. When I serve a people, and, by going amongst them, observe that they are really in want, and yet they see that the preacher and his family are abundantly supplied, I can but be satisfied.

Crop prospects are flattering, and if the season continues a little longer, "plenty" will crown the year; and with the spirit of liberality that is now manifest among the people, and by the grace of God, we expect to report Ada circuit assessments paid in full.

I have several promises of subscription to the ADVOCATE "when they get the money." I shall remind them of this later on. J. I. HOFFPAUIR, P. C.

JUNE 22, 1887.

GRENADA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Grenada District Conference was held at Charleston, Miss., June 2 on to the seventh. The Conference was in many respects a success, though the attendance was small. The brethren present seemed filled with the Spirit of the Master, and did good heart-searching preaching which did our souls good, revived and encouraged the Christians, and made us feel "that it was good to be there." Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D., and Rev. G. W. Bachman gave us some telling missionary addresses, which resulted in a contribution of $37 50, which makes about $60 for that cause for this year, which is evidence of a lively growth in this cause. We protracted the meeting a few days with good results. There were some eight or ten professions and four additions to the church. Rev. G. W. Bachman was here in the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Publishing House, South, and was not neglectful of the interests of the ADVOCATE. This work is developing, and will at no distant day expand into two. Pray for us and our work.

Most sincerely yours,

J. W. KILLOUGH.

LAUDERDALE CIRCUIT.

Our second quarterly meeting was held at Union, in Kemper county. Attendance of the church officials rather small. Finances rather low. In other respects the meeting was interesting and profitable. Our presiding elder, Bro. Norsworthy, was present in fine trim. He gave us two good sermons, which, I trust, will do good. We have on this circuit seven Sunday-schools, most of them doing well. Some of them are not immediately under our supervision; yet they are largely controlled by our Methodist people, and use our literature mostly. We also have five or six weekly prayer meetings, some of which are doing good work.

We have recently organized a class meeting here in Lauderdale, which bids fair to be a grand success. There are some old Methodist people here who never attended class meeting before. They rather like it.

We have had, up to date, by letter and otherwise, seven additions to the church. Two of our members have died. Among them Rev. J. M. Hitt, a local deacon, and old Mother Jemison. All things considered, we are moving on very well.

Crops are splendid, corn especially. The oat crop, while it suffered from the dry weather, turned out much better than farmers anticipated. We anticipate better times in the future.

Prohibition does really prohibit here. Lauderdale is the most quiet town I ever saw. It has not always been so.

About one-third of our foreign missionary assessment has been collected and forwarded. Most of the other two-thirds are secured by subscription. We hope to make a better showing, financially, this year than we did last. H. P. LEWIS.

FRANKLINTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: It is a source of no mean pleasure to write you that this circuit is slowly, but surely, improving. Increased attendance on the ordinances of the church, good behavior, careful attention, and an addition of nine to the membership. Finances better, and spirituality much better. Brotherly love more general, and purer. Kindness to the pastor and family continues to abound more and more. Presents, thoughtful and valuable, make our hearts rejoice.

Sabbath-schools have increased in number, and the attendance is better. Prayer meetings are in operation where there were none, and family altars have been multiplied. We expect to soon have a good house of worship in a community where a short time since there was no religious service of any kind.

Crops are very fine; health is usually good, and everything promises a prosperous year.

Judging from all visible signs, we are soon to have a gracious revival of religion on this charge. God grant it! We thank God for what he has done for us, and plunge afresh into the "work of faith and labor of love."

Yours,

J. G. SIBLEY, P. C.

Is Sabbath Keeping a Test of Membership in Our Church?

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of May 5 there is a letter from Japan, by J. W. Lambuth, in which he gives an account of some persons on probation for membership in the church. He says: "We began at the head of the list to ask them questions in regard to their present state, and their determination for the future in their profession of faith in Christ." Among these questions, they were asked if they were willing to observe the Sabbath. Some three or four are mentioned by name who at first said they could not do so, but afterwards, under the influence of exhortation, prayer and the Spirit's power, yielded "and said they were willing to give up all for Christ."

Now, in this there are two gratifying facts. The first is that the observance of the Sabbath is enforced as a condition of membership in the church; the second is that the grace of God enables the converts, in the face of formidable obstacles, to comply with this test of membership. But while that letter is so full of encouragement, it reminds us of a most humiliating fact at home. We do not require the observance of the Sabbath as a condition of membership in our home churches. A postmaster, who, in accordance with law, keeps open certain hours on Sunday, applies for membership in the church. Who would expect him to be required to leave his business, or observe the Sabbath, for the sake of Christ? A station agent, who sells tickets and transacts the usual business of his office on the Sabbath, is received into the church without ever being reminded that he is living in open violation of God's law. And so of other classes of Sabbath laborers.

Now, if this is right and proper in the United States, is it not also right in Japan? If our plea of necessity is admissible here, does not the same plea hold good in Japan? And would it not be well for our Bishops, or the Board or Missions, to inform the missionaries that they are carrying matters a little too far? Perhaps it would be well for the Bishops to write our missionaries a pastoral letter, telling them that the enforcement of that part of the moral law may prove a hindrance in the conversion of the heathen, and that they had better relax their disciplinary requirements in regard to it. They could tell the missionaries that the Fourth Commandment is quite obnoxious to our advancing civilization, and that it is very inconvenient to enforce it at home; and yet, in spite of our connivance at Sabbath desecration, we gained over seventy-five thousand members last year. Many of these were employees of men and corporations that require labor on the Sabbath, and none of them were required to submit to the trying ordeal of saying whether they would observe the Sabbath for the sake of Christ. I have no doubt such a letter would have the approbation of a large number of our preachers and people. It would be a day's march in the line of "progressive thought," and would do more towards bringing the world into the church than a year's effort at the enforcement of the Sabbath. It would relieve the missionaries of a very severe task, and by its reflex influence it would silence the troublesome conscientious scruples of our preachers and people who find it inconvenient to observe the day. Many of our preachers have their appointments so arranged as to preach at the next station on Sunday night: and, although the train runs that day for nobody's convenience, but to make money, they buy their tickets, get aboard and in due time make their appearance in the pulpit, and announce for their text, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Multitudes of our laymen, encouraged by the examples of their pastors, do a great part of their business traveling on the Sabbath. And, if they do not travel on the Sabbath, what harm is there in adjusting their books to the incoming week's transactions? So they feel; and the day, set apart by God himself to be a day of rest from secular employments, is spent in rebellion against his law.

In all seriousness, I would ask if, in our hurry to catch the world, we have not run a little too fast? That the Fourth Commandment is a part of the moral law need not be argued; that the moral law is obligatory upon us to-day need not be argued. What is wanted is for the moral conscience of the church to be aroused on this important question. We all view with dread the signs of the approaching "continental Sunday;" yet how few comparatively are holding themselves in an attitude to resist its coming!

Let us fight for prohibition, let us press the missionary cause; but let us not forget that without the Christian Sabbath we can not gain the victory in either of these great wars. All honor to the missionary who is not in so great a hurry to convert the heathen, or too lethargic in his own religious life, as to mutilate the Word of God!

Woman's Work in War.

A CHARACTERISTIC LETTER FROM FRANCES E. WILLARD.

MR. EDITOR: The following interesting letter from our large-hearted president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet with a hearty response from every man, woman and child in the South. It was written to our national superintendent of evangelistic work among soldiers and sailors, and is a timely and generous expression of the kind and friendly feelings fostered and cherished by this, the largest organization of women in the world.

CAROLINE E. MERRICK,
Pres. W. C. T. U. of Louisiana.

REST COTTAGE,
Evanston, Ill., May 25, 1887.

Dear Mrs. McClees: It is high time we had a woman's celebration of "Decoration Day."

There is hardly a richer or fresher theme than woman's work in the war. It has never been adequately set forth; but it was vast and heroic as the war itself. I doubt not we have reached a point of observation, from which we can at last do justice to those Spartan women of the South whose hardships were so much greater than our own. As they have told me of what the war meant to them, coming, as it did, into their very houses and pulverizing their hearthstones as well as their hearts, I have felt that their annals of heroism and martyrdom ought not to be lost with the "lost cause." Some day they will be written, and I could wish Charles Egbert Craddock, that gifted daughter of Tennessee, might lend her choice pen to such a sacred task as giving us the historical novels of the war, showing the wonderful drama of a woman's devotion and the faithfulness even unto death of that downtrodden colored race, whose steadfast protection of their masters' homes is the brightest ray that gleams across the black cloud of slavery, and the highest tribute those masters will ever have accorded them.

Happy are all who participate in the pageants that celebrate the era of reconciliation, and forever grateful ought the white ribbon army to be that our well-beloved W. C. T. U. has linked so many women's hearts together across the "bloody chasm," and joined in tender clasp the hands of Southern with those of Northern daughters to fight for home protection and saloon destruction, in the name of God and home and native land.

Yours, for the really re-United States, which shall have a "school-house on every hilltop and no saloon in the valley."

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Methodist High School.

MR. EDITOR: The Methodist people some years ago talked of establishing a high school in the bounds of the Brandon district; for the purpose of giving our boys a better chance to educate themselves—a school to be under the supervision and control of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. I think the time has come when such a school is really a necessity; that is, if we, as a church, expect to have any degree of success or prosperity.

Other churches have their schools and patronize them, and they are right and will succeed. So we think the time has fully come to pass when we must move up on this line, or give place to those who do.

We have good schools for our daughters. East Mississippi and Whitworth Female College offer fine facilities for educating our daughters. We also have a fine school for our girls at Brandon, and, while it is not a denominational school, we do not hesitate in recommending it to all who wish to give their daughters a first-class education. Hence we think we have enough female schools, and would not recommend multiplying them.

But we do think the Methodists ought to have a high school for the better education of our boys and young men—and especially our young men studying for the ministry—somewhere in this section of the State. Centenary College is a fine school, and deserves the patronage of our people, and, if accessible, would answer. But it is not accessible; that is, it is too far away and costs too much for the average young men of our country. Very few of them ever go to any of our colleges, and we do not believe that a high school somewhere in this part of the State would injure any of our colleges, but might be a training-ground, say, for the colleges.

So let us have a high school for our boys and young men where they can have facilities for educating themselves, and at a less cost, and not so far away from home.

I suggest, too, that this school be located at Brandon.

We have a good church at Brandon, always served by our best preachers; preaching twice every Sunday, Sunday-school, prayer meeting, etc. Our district parsonage is to be located there, and hence the boys would have pastoral oversight of both preacher and presiding elder. Brandon has as refined, intelligent and religious people as any other town of its size anywhere. It will be free from the curse of alcohol, as prohibition will take effect next spring, and the boys will not have that temptation. It is not far from the center between Vicksburg and Meridian, on the V. and M. road, and will be accessible to almost all parts of the State, making it possible to build up a fine school or college there. Last, but not least, I suppose Brandon is as healthy as any other place we could possibly find; high and dry, and free from malarial poisons, and will probably soon be one of the summer resorts for health.

So let us have a Methodist high school or college at Brandon, and let us go to work at once. Who will say amen?

A. D. MILLER.

In the course of an editorial life of years, queer things will happen to the conductors of journals. Men seldom forgive you for withholding their articles. One in a thousand may thank you for suppressing a contribution; that has happened to us. It has occurred that the editor yielded and printed a paper which hurt the writer, and that very writer has a secret antipathy to the editor because the article was not thrown out. One was known to have said, "He ought to have had sense enough to decline my piece." And if you had, he would have hated you the more. Pity and pray for the editors.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Why Don't You Write.

To procure a faithful medical opinion as to whether or not you can probably be cured will cost you nothing if you write to Drs. Starkey and Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa. For over sixteen years the wonderful triumphs of their Compound Oxygen have been going on, giving new health and renovated life to many who had never expected to be well again.

Perhaps your case is an old and troublesome chronic affection, which has carried you so far down that you almost despair of getting up again. No matter; many who had entirely given up all hope are now enjoying good health. Compound Oxygen did it. The Treatise pamphlet which Drs. Starkey and Palen will mail free on request gives the whole history. Send for it and you will find something of vital personal interest.

ARTIFICIAL EYES

ARE NOW SO PERFECTLY MADE THAT NO ONE CAN DISTINGUISH THEM FROM THE NATURAL EYE.

The Artificial Eye is not only a beautifier, but it serves other excellent purposes.
It enables the eyelids to move as freely as ever.
It restores the functions of the tear passages.
It prevents the eyelashes from turning within, causing inflammation.
It prevents distortion of features, as happens always in case of a young person who has the misfortune to lose an eye—and sometimes in the case of older persons.

Bishops' Meeting.

The college of Bishops will meet in Nashville, July 13. Their principal business will be to confer with reference to the new hymn book as submitted by the Committee of Revision. Their concurrent action is also required in the choice of a Book Agent by the Book Committee, which meets for that purpose, July 11.

Briefs.

President Cleveland's last order about the "battle flags" gives us another view of his character. He is generally represented as a man very firm in adhering to his opinions and almost dogged in carrying out his purposes. But this order revoking the former one shows that he believes he can make a mistake, and that he has the grace to acknowledge it. The hardest thing for any man to do is publicly to confess that he made a mistake in a line of public policy. There is always hope for a man who can do this. Goldsmith asserted that the greatest thing Frederick the Great ever did, was done when he wrote home to his government: "I have lost a great battle; and it was my own fault."

The fifth annual report of the Board of Church Extension has come to hand. From it we learn that the Board received last year from all sources $52,440. Help was afforded to 232 churches by loans and donations—the Conference Boards helping 181 churches, and the General Board helping fifty-one; and eight churches were helped by both Boards. The large majority of the churches assisted are in the older Conferences. The map shows but few dots—indicating churches helped—in the great and growing West. This report shows that twenty-one more churches were assisted and $10,952 more paid out than last report. This is evidence of growth that is encouraging. The church extension work is that which gives permanent value to missionary effort, and should be encouraged and assisted by all our members.

The proposition of Bishop Potter, of New York, to the different denominations of Christians to join with the Episcopalians in erecting a magnificent cathedral in New York City, has created quite a sensation in religious circles. Coming, as it does, immediately upon the heels of the proposition for church unity, it is the more interesting. There are various opinions in regard to this matter. Some think it wrong to use vast sums of money for the erection of one great church when the same amount could be scattered in such a way as to build a thousand neat and beautiful houses of worship in the waste places of the land. Others think it rather an impertinence that the "sects" should be asked to contribute to a house of worship by a denomination whose universal practice has been to exclude all preachers "not in the succession" from its pulpits. These great cathedrals may be a good thing when there is an established religion of State, but in this country they are out of place.

Address of the Bishops.

To the Preachers and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—

DEAR BRETHREN: We, as your chief pastors, are called to address you on a subject affecting alike the good name of our beloved church and the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Board of Missions, after a careful study of the needs of our mission fields and the resources of the church, the pressing demands of the one and the inadequate supply of the other furnished to meet those demands, requested the Bishops to prepare and publish an address to the church to inform our people more fully, and to incite them to larger liberality to the cause of missions. That in many sections of the church there has been a growing missionary spirit, born of an intelligent view of Christian obligation and of an acquaintance with what is being done in mission fields, is a cause for devout gratitude. The last decade has shown a remarkable increase in the contributions of the church and in the Christian zeal which has prompted them. The noble women of the church have done much to foster the active love for Christ, and the contributions of the church at large have been greatly increased as the result of the example and influence of those worthy women who have labored with us in the gospel. While our offerings for missions have shown a healthy advance with successive years, and have afforded a somewhat reliable basis of appropriations, they are far from measuring either the ability of the church or the pressing demands from our mission fields, arising from the growth and expansion of our work under the divine blessing. In short, our sowing has resulted in harvests that require more laborers and more appliances to save and render most efficient the results of our toil, and the church is not supplying the necessary means. The harvest is great, and the laborers are few. We must at once send forth more laborers, or lose from overwork those we already have in the field, and the harvest as well.

During the past year we have visited each of our mission fields, and nearly every mission station in each of them. We have studied in person the progress of the gospel in Japan, in China, in Brazil, and in Mexico, as well as in the Mission Conferences of our own land. After the fullest information as to the methods and work of other missionaries as well as our own, the work being done by our church commends itself to our judgment and confidence as being wisely and conscientiously done. Our property is wisely located. Clothed with authority to dispose of any property not suitably located or adapted to our use, we find the expenditures to have been judiciously made and necessary to the efficiency of our work. The titles to our property have been carefully examined, and the interests of the church fully protected. We have found in all these fields that the Holy Spirit had prepared hearts to receive the Word, no less than moved men to go forth and preach it. The church has long prayed for open doors; we found some actually lifted from their hinges. During the last few months the Emperor of China, hitherto the most exclusive of nations, has by formal proclamation opened the empire to Christian missionaries and demanded for them protection at the hands of his subjects. Our recent attempt at planting a mission in Japan has met with such marvelous success that we should promptly double our forces there. The work of the Lord continues to prosper in Mexico and Brazil. In all our mission fields we found consecrated and untiring laborers vainly endeavoring to meet demands which come from the open doors and enlarged opportunities on every side. To respond to these calls they have endangered health and risked life itself. The graves of Peckham, in Mexico; of Koger, in Brazil, and of Dora Rankin, in China, cry aloud for re-enforcements for those who are still pressing the battle to the gates. Is the church deaf, or has she forgotten the war which she has undertaken to wage for the conquest of the world? Missionary laborers in considerable number are being moved by the Holy Ghost to take the places of the fallen and enter these whitening fields. The Holy Spirit is calling unto the church as of old, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." And in the grave exigency, when our diminished force in mission fields is threatening to fall under the multiplied labors that increase upon them, and when, as for two years, the church fails to provide the necessary means to send out the needed re-enforcements, we deem it our duty to call you to heart-searching, self-denial and prayer, that on our knees we may confess and respond to the call of God.

The one supreme object for which the church exists is the spread of the gospel—the extension of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. All other objects inconsistent with and not subordinate to this are of the spirit of anti-Christ. She can never afford to forget for a single moment that this is the chief end of her existence. To this end she has a mission to found schools where mind and heart may be trained for the great work. To this end the church-press must address itself, if it would justify its existence. To this end all the Christian graces look which preacher and pastor aim to develop, for the Spirit of Christ best appears in his mission to seek and to save the lost. To this end must be consecrated the substance of the church, if the consuming sin of covetousness would be kept from corrupting and polluting her resources. A church that fails to realize the supreme end of her existence is herself an object of missionary labor. We are unfit to preach a pure gospel at home, if the love of Christ does not constrain us to preach it to all the world.

In view of the pressing demands which have come up from our expanding work, the Board of Missions have ventured once or twice to anticipate an increased liberality on the part of the church; but in the failure of an adequate response they dare do so no more, and must deny the needed re-enforcements until the church furnishes the necessary means. In any one year the small sum of $250,000 from a million of members would have enabled the Board to meet every appropriation and outstanding obligation. In the absence of a prompt response to this reasonable demand, the whole church is to blame. She has not honored the faith of her chosen representatives in the Board of Missions; and yet, after the painstaking investigation of the late General Conference, asks substantially the same Board to direct the missionary interests of the church. They can do nothing more than witness the wasting away of what we have unless there be a prompt and liberal response from the whole church. Surely our devotion to the cause of Christ is lukewarm when we are indifferent to his last and supreme command.

We beseech you, therefore, brethren, by all the temporal and spiritual blessings of our heavenly Father, that you heed the call of the Holy Spirit to send forth more laborers. Large special contributions there have been during the past few years, but these are inadequate to meet the pressing needs that are now upon us. Our work is suffering much from lack of re-enforcements. The men are offering for the work, but the money is wanting. Heroic men and women are willing to deny themselves the pleasant associations of home and native land, but professed followers of Christ are slow to contribute of their means to send forth those noble laborers. Our people are not lacking in money for costly entertainments, for investments, for travel, for luxurious living. Can they withhold it from the altar of God and be guiltless? Dares the church bare her bosom to the all-searching eye of God, and with her knowledge of her duty and her resources say, "We have done what we could"? If individual Christians have themselves made the largest possible sacrifice, have they sought to enlist others to do likewise? Can the seventy-five thousand souls added to the church the last year impress the world that they are in earnest in their new faith if they do nothing to spread the gospel which they have embraced? The great need of the church, as we see it, is a more widespread interest in missions among our entire membership. To this end let our preachers have monthly missionary prayer meetings in all their charges, and seek in every proper way to reach the consciences of our people. Let there be a more systematic effort to publish missionary intelligence among our people and to secure a missionary contribution from every disciple of Christ. Let our children be more largely taught the nature and obligation of Christian giving. Let our contributions be not simply out of our abundance, but out of our want as well; often representing some postponed comfort, some denied self-indulgence. When an agony of prayer comes in the church as she sees the heathen perishing without the gospel; when at the family altar our missionaries are daily remembered and the Lord of the harvest is besought to send out more laborers; when in every home there is laid aside weekly a piece of money to aid in spreading the gospel, a constant reminder of the supreme end for which the church exists, then we will both look forward to and hasten the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. To this end we join in the request of the Board of Missions that the week, beginning August 8 and closing on the fourteenth, be one of prayer and self-denial, of fervent and constant prayer for the cause of missions, and of offerings for that cause which may represent thought and self-denial on the part of each worshiper. Let all our preachers call their congregations to earnest prayer and liberal giving, regardless of any assessment which may have been made upon their charges or of contributions already made during the year. A general and hearty response to this call will, under God, enable us to respond to the cry for re-enforcements which comes up from each of our mission fields.

Grace, mercy and peace be unto you from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ!

We remain your affectionate brethren and pastors, who labor night and day, both in public and in private, for your good.

The Question of Romanism—Dr. Abbey's Little Book.

It is an unseemly thing for Christians to have pretensions against each other. It was ever so, but is more so now than formerly, because men's conceptions of charity are growing clearer with the lapse of time. Many horrible things were done in the name of Christ during the long night of the dark ages and the misty morning that followed. The battle for truth is not ended. We must yet earnestly contend for the faith, and no maudlin sentimentality should prevent us. It is quite too late for Protestants to apologize for protesting against the errors of Romanism. Their very name and character require them unwaveringly to oppose and, with brotherly kindness, to correct the errors of Romanism. This is the calling and work of Protestants as such. "Thou shalt in anywise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him," says the old law which is still in force. If any think our opposition to Romanism unnecessary, we reply that the world is in greatest danger from those evils which are compounded with good. No man would knowingly take poison. But, if his water is impure, his bread corrupted, or his meat tainted, his health and his life are in jeopardy. If the doctor's medicine is poisonous in its effects, then is the patient in more danger than from the disease. So in spiritual things. Only when Satan is transformed into an angel of light is he apt to deceive even the elect.

Nothing is so harmful as a false religion, unless it be one which is partly false. In the latter, the truth conceals and propagates error. If the church teach lies, the world shall be misguided and ruined. Hence the church must keep her doctrines pure; and if one part fall into error, the others must correct it. As all men are liable to err, God has given us an infallible standard of truth in his revealed Word. Now, the Romanist takes the Bible from the people and claims infallibility for the Pope. No such office as that of Pope is mentioned or authorized in the Bible. History shows many of them to have been the most wicked and erring of men, and reason teaches us to expect that with universal authority they would become as ambitious and tyrannical as other men. Many of the tenets of the Church of Rome, such as auricular confession, the invocation of saints, the worship of images, the celibacy of the priesthood, the sale of indulgences, the granting of absolution, the immaculate conception of Mary, the infallibility of the Pope, and a number of others, Protestants do wholly repudiate and condemn as both false and injurious to men. Her claims to universal political supremacy all Protestants, and especially the people of the United States, deny and abhor, as not only subversive of democratic institutions, but as in stark contravention of Christ's declaration that his kingdom is not of this world.

Nothing at this time so stealthily and powerfully threatens the stability of our free institutions as this same treasonable doctrine of Romanists, that the Pope is or ought to be the civil ruler of all nations. Be it remembered that Romanism is not only foreign in its origin, but is alien in its allegiance. Every true Roman Catholic owes civil, as well as ecclesiastical, obedience to a trans-Atlantic sovereign. At this very time a citizen of the United States is under summons to go to Rome to answer for offenses committed in this country. He does not go against his will, only because the Pope has not power to force him. The spirit of Romanism is inconsistent with republicanism. It is monarchical to the core. Why should the Church of England have ceased at once, at the close of the Revolutionary War, to exercise authority in this country, while the Church of Rome holds increasing power here until this day?

The Rev. R. Abbey has recently published a little book—"The Priest and the Preacher"—which is full of timely information on the subject of this article. The author has published a goodly number of books. This is among his shortest and best. He grows in wisdom with his years. We hope this little book will be extensively read. It is high time Protestants were becoming protestant. His argument against infallibility is unique. He maintains that nothing short of an infallible witness, testifying before an infallible judge, could prove the doctrine. As we have neither of these, of course, we can not have the doctrine proven. This reminds one of the ancient skeptic's saying—"That no man can know anything to be true." The reply was: "If so, you ought not to say so, as you can not know your saying to be true." Bro. Abbey has culled some facts from the history of Romanism, which the people ought certainly to think about.

SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.—Before our next issue the Seashore Camp Meeting will have begun. Ample preparations have been made for the accommodation of all who may come. We wish to say to them, Be sure to bring your working-tools. From what we have heard, this is to be a special working-time for every Christian who attends. Therefore, we say, Bring your tools—your Bible and hymn book. We understand that there will be a special effort on the part of the managers of the exercises to have a great deal of "button-hole preaching" done. That is a part of preaching that every Christian can do. Private admonitions and exhortations re-enforce the public proclamations of the gospel in a way that renders the calls of God most efficacious. Come, Christians, with the determination of doing one solid week's work for the Master, and great will be your reward.

Items of Interest.

Remember to get ready for the week of prayer and self-denial, to begin August 8. The Mission Board expects to pay off the debt by what we save in self-denial. Let everybody get ready to save at least one dollar.

Rev. T. C. Bradford has resigned the presidency of Port Gibson Female College, and Rev. E. H. Monnger has been elected to fill that position. Miss Mary Compton takes charge of the boarding department of the college, and also continues to occupy a place in the faculty of the institution. These excellent teachers, with a full corps of assistants, will certainly merit and are confidently expected to receive a full share of the public patronage.

Mansfield Female College.

Mr. Editor: This has been one of the most prosperous and successful sessions in the history of Mansfield Female College, and President Grace and the faculty deserve great credit for the splendid record made by the pupils during the past scholastic year.

On Sunday, June 19, at eleven A. M., Rev. B. Carradine, of Carondelet Street Church, New Orleans, preached to one of the largest audiences ever assembled in the church at Mansfield, a most appropriate and soul-stirring commencement sermon from the text, "For what is your life?" The divisions of his subject were so clear, and the impressions made so vivid, that all felt they had received food upon which the soul might feed in time to come; and the young ladies of the graduating class, for whose especial benefit it was preached, were greatly edified, and thanked the speaker for his timely words. At eight P. M. Bro. Carradine again preached to the satisfaction and edification of all, from the text, "Be sure your sins will find you out." The church was crowded, and the most intense interest was elicited as the speaker eloquently portrayed the results of sin and the love of God in opening a fountain to the house of David for sin and uncleanness. Bro. Carradine's presence was a benediction to all.

On Monday, June 20, at eight P. M., we witnessed the prize medal contest between ten young ladies in the department of elocution, and four in the department of composition. The contest was very lively from the beginning, and it was evident the victors would gain no easy victory. In the department of elocution the medal was awarded to Miss Alice Williams, of Mansfield. In the department of composition the medal was awarded to Miss Bettie Hunt, of Mansfield. For excellence in the department of music a medal was awarded to Miss Marie Lou Moore, of Caddo.

The exercises of the Alumnæ Society, at the college hall, Tuesday, June 21, at ten A. M., were witnessed by an immense audience. An essay, on "The Study of the Classics, in Relation to Woman's Education and Position," delivered on this occasion by Mrs. James M. Foster, of Shreveport, was one of the best I have ever heard, and the author was congratulated by a host of admirers. Just after the address of Mrs. Foster, an original poem, on "The Power of Music," by Miss Clara Lee Puckette, of Waco, Texas, was beautifully rendered, and received unstinted applause. Next in order, the Hon. Robert P. Hunter, of Alexandria, La., delivered a very appropriate address on "Woman as a Factor in Modern Progress." His discourse showed deep research, close observation, and proved to the society that no mistake was made in his selection. The applause he received was confirmatory of his success.

The concert, on Tuesday night, evinced the most careful training on the part of their teachers, and received the most flattering commendation from the public.

Wednesday, June 22, was the great day of the feast. Promptly at ten A. M. the audience assembled and filled to overflowing the large college hall, and a few minutes thereafter the senior class took their seats upon the rostrum. Their names are as follows: Misses Marie Capers, Lula Dubois, Bessie Erwin, Eva McCain, Marie Lou Moore, Lelia Simpson, Lee Smith, Annie Lee Walker, Willie Walker, Ida L. Weber. Each of these young ladies read very gracefully a well-conceived and carefully prepared essay. A degree was then conferred upon each one, according to attainment, by President Grace, and evidenced by a diploma.

And now comes the baccalaureate address by Dr. J. B. Cottrell, of the Kentucky Conference. He was introduced to the audience by President Grace, as a beloved friend and brother, whom he had known long and well. The doctor began his address with some facetious remarks that immediately riveted the attention of the audience, and then proceeded to discuss "The Possibilities of Educating Woman as Fully, and for as Varied Services as Men." He said "that there is no sex in mind; that many women had, in spite of the limitations and obstructions hindering them, fully attested the fact; that the sex is capable of the highest culture. They had prophesied in Israel, and had over nations wielded the sceptre of authority as queens. There had never been a failure where woman had been trusted." He said that the writer who had, in our day, produced the most powerful impression on the world of mind was a woman; but she had to assume a masculine nom de plume to get a hearing, viz: George Elliott. He said that the average womanhood of the world is dwarfed now by the emphasis being put upon what is termed gallantry. Her study was very naturally so to dress and so to behave as to meet this requirement. Like begets like. When woman is educated for affairs, and comes into co-ordination all along the line with man, preoccupied with else than what pertains to her person, a higher style of womanhood will be produced. The nearer a woman approximates masculinity, and is executive in affairs, the more she is praised. And, on the [illegible] men are great as they approach the feminine type. He spoke of the need of considering the whole life time as a term of tuition. The text-book learning gotten in colleges was important. An ax or a hatchet must be helved for use; and so the mind furnished by the teacher in lesson-getting and recitations is as if helved for being wielded. He spoke of the power of general reading, noting the power of the poets and philosophers all along the ages. Philosophy—divine philosophy—he declared to be above science. Whilst allowing that through Israel had come a revelation from God whereof the church is predicated, there is an inspiration from God to every human soul, and thus we have the wonderful utterances of those of every nation and of every age, whose thought and sentiment are the riches of the world of mind. Wonderful man! I proclaim him one of the most popular and fluent speakers I have ever heard. This splendid address was a fitting close to the commencement exercises of Mansfield Female College.

Another department—that of art—has been added to the course of study, to be presided over by Miss Vallie Williams, specimens of whose skill in this line were exhibited in the college hall during the commencement exercises, and attest great efficiency. Two more officers have been added to the roster of the college: Prof. David F. Hoddle, principal of the Mansfield Male School, and Rev. Morton S. Watts, of the Holston Conference. Bro. Watts has had much experience and success in teaching, and comes highly recommended. Rev. F. M. Grace, D. D. was re-elected president, and I can say here no man ever presided over this institution more beloved.

In closing this report, candor compels me to say that during the past session there was cause of complaint, and very justly so, on the part of the patrons in regard to the management of the college. These complaints were laid before the college authorities and the Board of Managers. They all declared that these things ought to be and shall be corrected. With these complaints out of the way, the future of the college is assured. With a large and able faculty, and everything else conducive to a first-class education, there is no reason why the public, especially the Methodist public of Louisiana, should not rally to its support.

R. S. ISBELL.

Gleanings.

The Independent: We have noticed the remarkable fact that old folks are generally more interested in a sermon addressed to children than in one addressed to themselves and will remember it better. This fact has a moral for ministers rather than for their people.

The moral we suppose to be about this: If we preach the gospel in words intelligible to children, we shall attract and interest the old people as well. "Men are but children of a larger growth." The glory of the gospel is that even a child by it may be "made wise unto salvation."

President J. H. Seelye: "The life of Jesus Christ has proved itself the life of men, and is sufficient to lift human life everywhere to love and duty. Why should it not enter into all our processes of education? Is there any reason why we should teach the life of Julius Cæsar in our schools, and should not teach the life of Jesus Christ? Why are not the gospels as proper a text-book in our schools as are Cæsar's Commentaries?" These questions were asked in the Forum for July, 1886, and we have been watching for an answer, but have not seen it!

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, editor of the Methodist Times, London: "While it is extremely desirable that the ablest men should put forth the Christian arguments in the most exact and scientific form for thoughtful men to consider, the very best evidence of Christianity is six feet of living Christianity." Two thoughts of great importance are here set forth. In the field of apologetics, march the trained warriors to the front. In all places "let him that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity," and "show out of a good conversation that he has been with Jesus."

Dr. Abbey has our thanks for a copy of his tract, "The Priest and the Preacher." This last from the doctor's pen has been very highly commended in our columns by competent judges, and we add our judgment that it is circulated where needed, it will do good.

In dyspepsia and indigestion the use of Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier strengthens the exhausted coats of the stomach, promotes a healthy flow of gastric juice, which is the solvent of the food, and impels the organs which secrete it to perform their functions vigorously and with regularity.

The degree of doctor of divinity has been conferred upon Rev. W. H. Lewis, of the Missouri Conference, by St. Charles College.

Dr. Haygood has been invited to make twenty speeches in Texas, during July, and will make them. We warrant the saloonists will feel such hot and heavy shot they will think it the hottest July ever known in Texas.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, Sam Jones, and Dr. Fairbairn are among the selected preachers for Chautauqua.

Dr. Potter is in error in supposing that the editor of this paper attended the International Sunday-school Convention, recently, in Chicago. The editor has been held here, since the adjournment of the Hymn Book Committee, in the firm grip of what the doctor says is sciatica!

Rev. A. M. Shipp, D. D., of South Carolina Conference, died, June 27, at Cleveland Springs, N. C. Dr. Shipp was one of the foremost men in his Conference, and for quite a number of years was connected with the Theological Department, in Vanderbilt University.

Rev. H. B. Frazee, presiding elder of the Jacksonville district, Florida Conference, gladdened us with his presence last week. Bro. Frazee began his itinerant life in the Louisiana Conference, and after all his wanderings still cherishes a tender love for the old mother. His friends rejoice to see that time and work have dealt leniently with him.

The Board of Trust of the Alabama State University has conferred the degree of doctor of divinity on Rev. A. Monk, of the North Alabama Conference.

A private note from Bro. Blocker, of the Louisiana Conference, contains the sad news that he has been bereaved of his little daughter, Mattie. May the consolations of the gospel abound in the hearts of the stricken parents!

Dr. Young, after nearly a year's travel abroad, reached home last week, and found a warm welcome from old friends.

Our thanks are hereby rendered to Bro. J. W. McNeil, of Crystal Springs, Miss., for a box of delicious peaches. The wife and little ones especially join in this thanksgiving.

Our open-air meeting on Claiborne street was interrupted last Monday night by some hoodlum or hoodlums throwing rotten eggs at the preacher, Bro. Carradine. They did not strike the preacher; one striking the organ. One of the offenders was captured by the police. This is the old story. Whenever there are "open doors," there are also "many adversaries." Victories are only won when there are enemies. The meetings will continue. We understand the man who created the disturbance has been sentenced by the court to pay $25 fine, or thirty days in the Workhouse.

Sickness comes unbidden, and strong men and women are forced to employ means to restore their health and strength. The most successful of all known remedies for weakness, the origin of all disease, is Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier.

The Judicial District Teachers' Association will meet at the courthouse, in Amite City, Saturday, July 2.

Crops in Lincoln parish are exceptionally fine.

Natchitoches is to have a special election on August 23, to determine the question of levying an annual tax of five mills for ten years, in aid of the tap railroad from that place to Prudhomme Station, on the Texas and Pacific railroad.

While officers were attempting to arrest a negro criminal, at Oak Ridge, Morehouse parish, on the twenty-seventh, they were fired upon by the criminal and some of his friends, killing one white man and wounding several others. The officers returned the fire and killed six negroes. One of the wounded whites has since died. Quiet is restored.

Alexandria has voted a five mill tax for ten years to the Louisiana and Arkansas railroad, overwhelmingly, both in number of tax payers and valuation of property. Not a single ballot cast against the tax.

St. Mary parish is on a sound financial footing. The Review says that she has $11,266 31 in her general fund; $2,374 in road fund, and $6,763 in her school fund.

Mississippi Notes.

The grand jury returned into court, on the twenty-ninth, at Jackson, Miss., an "indictment" for the murder of Gambrell against Jones S. Hamilton and L. M. Eubanks, jointly.

At a meeting of the State Prohibition Executive Committee, held at Brookhaven on the twenty-first, Bishop Galloway presiding, the date for holding the next State Convention was changed from Thursday, July 21, to Wednesday, July 27.

The charter of the Greenwood Building and Loan Association has been signed by the governor. A Board of Directors were chosen and officers elected. Shares of stock placed at $100, with payments of one dollar monthly.

At Meridian, on the twenty-second ultimo, the formal test of the water works was made before the city fathers and a large crowd of citizens. There is a general expression of approval of the test.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

Dyspepsia Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Rheumatism is undoubtedly a blood disease caused by an excess of the lactic acid in the blood. Where there is perfect filtration of the blood there can be no rheumatism. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA will remove the poison, supply the acids and relieve the pains.

Scrofula is caused directly by impurities in the blood, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, by purifying the blood, forces the impurities from the system.

Kidneys Through the Kidneys flow the waste fluid containing poisonous matter. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing pain in the small of the back and loins; flushes of heat, chills. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic, causing the kidneys to resume their natural functions.

The Liver By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood resolvent.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country, but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden suppers and inmers. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely unsuspected, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy; therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in the case, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.

Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. H. HANDY, M. D.

Our Young People.

MY LITTLE ONE'S HYMN.

Oh, take my heart, dear Savior,
And seal it wholly thine!
It turns at Satan's bidding—
Oh, help, with grace divine!

Oh, take my hands and cleanse them:
Lord, make them pure and white,
And fit them for thy service
To labor with my might.

Oh, make me patient, gentle,
Content to work thy will,
And when dark doubts assail me,
Oh, be my Shepherd still!

Whatever time may bring me
Of home, wealth, or fame,
Be this my proudest boasting—
I bear my Savior's name!

Oh, lead and guide me always;
Be thou my sure defense!
And when death's chill is o'er me,
Do thou sweet peace dispense.

—Child's Paper.

MR. EDITOR: I am very glad to think that you are so kind as to let the little people have a column in your paper. I have made several attempts to write, but have never succeeded. The ADVOCATE is a welcome guest, in our house every week. We were very much pleased with your address to the children on Children's Day, and sincerely hope that you will come again soon and preach to us. We like our preacher very much indeed, and think that he will do a great work here. Our church has improved a great deal since Bro. Dominick took hold of the work. We now have a young men's prayer meeting, and a Wesleyan Society for the ladies. I am so glad that the young men of the place take so much interest in the church. I have something nice to tell you—that is, every night we have family prayers in our house. I know you are glad to hear that. I hope all the rest of the little cousins can say the same that I can on that subject. All of our family belong to the Methodist Church. Mamma has seven children, and all are members of the church but two, and they are too small yet. We go to Sunday-school every Sunday, and prayer meeting every Sunday and Wednesday nights. Well, I think my letter is long enough, so I will close.

Your little friend,

WEDIE BROWN.

PEARLINGTON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am going to day-school now, and my two brothers. Mr. Collins is our teacher. We have a nice Sabbath-school now. I have missed one Sunday. We have a little pony; its name is Susie; we can all ride it. My aunt Clara is over here with us; she is going to stay awhile this year. We have preaching once a month. We will have preaching by Bro. Johns, Sunday. We have a nice orchard. We have no pet. I am ten years old. We have two grape vines. My mamma and papa are both members of the Methodist Church. I will answer Mamie Watt's question: "Jesus wept" is the shortest verse in the Bible. (St. John xi. 35.) I will ask a question and close: What was the first miracle Jesus did? With many good wishes,

Your little friend,

MARY S. HODGES.

COTTON VALLEY, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: Mamma takes your paper, and I love to read the children's letters; and, as so many write to the ADVOCATE, I thought I would write to it also. I am a little boy eleven years old. I go to school. Dr. Sullivan is our pastor this year, and we all like him very much. Mr. Jones is our Sunday-school superintendent. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. I will answer Charlie Jones' question: It was Shimei who cursed David. It is found in II Samuel xvi, 5. I will answer Annie Faison's question: It was Elisha who made iron swim. It is found in II Kings vi, 6. I will now ask an easy question: Where in the Bible are we told that there is a time to sew?

Your little friend,

HARVEY J. MUFFF.

GRENADA, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As I seldom ever see a letter from Bellevue, I thought I would write one. I was delighted to see my last letter in print. I have several pets. I think more of my little pet canary than I do of any of the rest. I have such a sweet little niece; her name is Jessie Wyche. I do know she is one of the smartest children that ever lived. I would like for some of the little cousins to answer this question: How many words does the Bible contain?

Your little friend,

JOSIE WYCHE.

BELLEVUE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy nine years old, and as I enjoy reading the letters in the children's column, I thought I would write one myself. We are all devoted to our preacher, Mr. Shamleter, and wish that this was his first year with us instead of the last. My papa is superintendent of our Sunday-school. There is a missionary society here, and I am a member of it. Our society is named after some of our most beautiful flowers, the "Swamp Lilies." We have made $128 this year besides the dues. One hundred of this we gave to the China work, as a memorial to Miss Dora Rankin; the rest we used otherwise. I have a greyhound puppy, and his name is Tasso. Now, I will ask a question: Who was Tasso, and when and where did he live? Your little friend,

THOS. K. TRIGG.

"Golden at morning, silver at noon, and lead at night," is the old saying about eating oranges. But there is something that is rightly named Golden, and can be taken with benefit at any hour of the day. This is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, literally worth its weight in gold to anyone suffering with scrofulous affections, impurities of the blood, or diseases of the liver and lungs. It is unfailing. By druggists.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old. I go to school. Papa takes the ADVOCATE. I love to read the little cousins' letters. I have two sisters and two brothers; my brothers are twins. I am the oldest. My sister and I go to school to Mr. Dickson. Mamma belongs to the Presbyterian Church, and papa belongs to the Methodist Church. I don't know what I will be. I will close by answering Charlie Jones' question: It was Shimei that cursed David when he was fleeing from his son, Absalom.

"I have used Darbys Prophylactic Fluid in hospital and practice for ten years, and know of nothing better for contused and lacerated wounds, foul and indolent ulcers and as a disinfectant."—J. F. HEUSTIS, Professor Mobile Med. College.

MR. EDITOR: We have class meeting every Tuesday night, and Thursday night prayer meeting. I have three little sisters and three brothers. I will answer Fannie Hussey's question: The children of Israel wept for Moses after his death thirty days. It is found in Deuteronomy xxxiv, 8. I will close by asking the little cousins a question: Where is "footstool" found in the Bible. Your friend.

Col. W. H. Sinclair, president Galveston Railway Company, says he believes a man can do an incredible amount of overwork while taking Moxie, and not break down. Mrs. A. Carusteins, proprietress of Washington Hotel, Galveston, speaks of it in the same terms; says it gives her extraordinary powers of endurance.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old. I love to read the little folks' letters. Father has been taking the ADVOCATE ever since I can remember. I go to Sunday-school. Rev. K. A. Borroughs is our pastor. We like him very much. I will answer Annie Faison's question: Elisha made iron swim. (II Kings vi, 6.) I will close by asking a question: Who was Elisha's father?

Your little friend,

CARROLLTON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I will answer some of the little cousins' questions: Annie Faison, "grandmother" is found in II Timothy i, 5. Elisha made iron swim. (II King vi, 6.) Stella Harkness' question: "Cistern" is found in Ecclesiastes xii, 6. I have three little brothers. I have no sisters and no pets. I will close by asking a question: Where is "viol" found in the Bible? Your little friend,

EDNA FERGUSON.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years old. I have never written to the dear old ADVOCATE. I thought I would write, as you are so kind as to publish the little folks' letters. I live in the country. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. I will close by asking a question: Where in the Bible is "reverend" found.

PEARL MIDDLETON.

Farm and Home.

To Mothers.

"I try so hard to make my [illegible]" she exclaimed with a sigh, one day, in despair at her efforts. "Stop trying," exclaimed a practical friend at her elbow, "and do as a neighbor of mine does." "And how is that?" she asked dolefully. "Why, she simply lets her children grow and develop naturally, only directing their growth properly. She has always thrown them, as far as practicable, upon their own resources, taught them to wait upon themselves, no matter how many servants she had, and to construct their own playthings. When she returns home from an absence, they await but one thing—their mother's kiss. Whatever has been bought for them is bestowed when the needed time comes. Nothing exciting is allowed to them at night, and they go to bed and to sleep in a wholesome mental state, that insures restful slumber. They are taught to love nature, and to feel that there is nothing arrayed so finely as the lily of the field, the bees, and the butterflies; that there is nothing so mean as a lie, nor anything so miserable as disobedience; that it is a disgrace to be sick, and that good health, good teeth, and good temper come from plain food, plenty of sleep, and being good." In order to thrive, children require a certain amount of "letting alone." Supreme faith in the mother, few toys, no finery, plain food, no drugs, and early to bed are the best things for making them happy.—Exchange.

One Sunday evening, I was staying at home with a little maiden of some six or seven years, and, as we sat cosily over the fire, I began to tell her some of the Old Testament stories: then I talked about Jesus, and looking into her fair, little face, I said, "Mamma tells you about him, does she not, darling?" She answered, quickly, "No, she has no time to tell me."

I thought of other busy mothers, and wondered if they, too, had "no time" to tell of Jesus. Dear, busy mothers! do the little garments take so much making, and the little mouths so much feeding, that you have "no time" to let the children nestle round you, and tell them about Jesus? Talk to them while they are young—make time to do it. Then, when they grow older there will not be that painful reserve between you and your grown-up sons and daughters in everything touching their spiritual life; but, better still, I believe you will have the joy of leading your little children to the Savior.—A. E. M., in London Christian.

HEALTH HINTS FOR CHILDREN.—Let children romp in the dirt out of doors. They need the vigor of the outer world. Don't send children to school, unless they are robust, before they are seven years of age, and then for not more than two or three hours a day. Never deprive a child of sleep or food, as punishment. Always let a child sleep as long as it desires to, if the sleep be natural. Fathers and mothers, as you value the physical, moral and spiritual welfare of your sons and daughters, tell them "what they ought to know" concerning those duties to themselves and to others which they do not understand, unless you tell them, can not find out except from depraved and demoralizing persons or literature! Secret uncleanliness and self-excitement do infinite injury to health. It is the parent's solemn duty to instruct the child. If he can not do it, then let him hire a physician to do it for him!

Martyrs to Headache

Seek relief in vain, until they begin to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Then they regret the years of suffering they might have escaped had they tried this remedy earlier. The trouble was constitutional, not local; and, until Ayer's Sarsaparilla did its effective work as an Alterative and Blood Purifier, they were compelled to suffer.

The wife of Samuel Page, 21 Austin st., Lowell, Mass., was, for a long time, subject to severe headaches, the result of stomach and liver disorders. A perfect cure has been effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Frank Roberts, 727 Washington st., Boston, says that he formerly had terrible headaches, and until he took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, never found any medicine that would give Permanent Relief.

"Every Spring, for years," writes Lizzie W. DeVeau, 262 Fifteenth st., Brooklyn, N. Y., "I have had intolerable headaches. I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla last March, and have not had a headache since that time."

"I suffered from headache, indigestion, and debility, and was hardly able to drag myself about the house," writes Mrs. M. M. Lewis, of 9 St., Lowell, Mass. "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has worked a marvelous change in my case. I now feel strong and well as ever."

Jonas Garman, Esq., of Lykins, Pa., writes: "For years I have suffered dreadfully, every Spring, from headache, caused by impurity of the blood and biliousness. It seemed for days and weeks that my head would split open. Nothing relieved me till I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has cured me completely."

When Mrs. Genevra Belanger, of 24 Bridge st., Springfield, Mass., began to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, she had suffered for some years from a serious affection of the kidneys. Every Spring, also, she was afflicted with headache, loss of appetite, and indigestion. A friend persuaded her to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which benefited her wonderfully. Her health is now perfect. Martyrs to headache should try DEWEES—On May 19, 1887, Sister WILMUTH DEWEES departed this life. Sister Dewees was born in Carroll county, Miss., January 12, 1841. She was united in matrimony to F. B. Dewees, March 12, 1864. She joined the Missionary Baptist Church when quite young. After her marriage, she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, after which she lived a devoted Christian until her death. She was a model to her church and vicinity; she was always ready to lend a helping hand to the sick and poor; always seeking an opportunity to do good. Sister Dewees was never known to speak evil of anyone; she always had a kind word for all. This writer visited her while she was sick, and sang and prayed with her. Her home was the preachers' home. She always met them with a cheerful face. She never retired to her bed without reading her Bible; then going in the little room for prayer. Her seat at the church was never vacant, only when providentially hindered. She was speechless twenty-four hours before her death. While she was breathing her last, her husband kneeled by her head to catch her last whisper. She raised her hand, and shouted out, "Glory! angels! white angels;" and breathed her life out sweetly there." Her remains were buried at the new church, (Mars Hill) to await for the call of the Master in that great day.

J. N. WARE, P. C.

MORRIS—Mrs. HATTIE REBECCA MORRIS (nee Smith) was born in Sabine parish, La., April 25, 1866, and died at the home of her parents, in the same parish, April 29, 1887. Another Christian spirit has gone to its reward. She was united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and professed conversion, August 12, 1878, under the ministry of Rev. J. B. Cassity. A little more than five months before her death, she was happily united in matrimony with Mr. J. M. Morris, of Sabine parish, La. Perhaps the future was never more brightly pictured for any couple, than for them. But, alas! the brittle thread of life was soon broken. Hattie was a true and faithful Christian, and loved by all who knew her for the kind and beautiful Christian spirit which was always so prominent in her life. She was a devoted Sunday-school worker. During her long illness she was never heard to utter a word of complaint, but bore her afflictions with Christian fortitude, until her pure soul took its flight to heaven. She was perfectly resigned to death. A few minutes before her death she called the family to her bedside and kissed each one good-bye, with the promise to meet her in heaven.

WEAVER—Died at our home, near Centerville, Newton county, Miss., on March 30, 1887, SALLIE MAY WEAVER, wife of F. B. Weaver, and daughter of J. J. Langford and Jennie Langford (deceased). Sallie May was born May 1, 1866, and died March 30, 1887, her age being twenty years, ten months and twenty-nine days. She had been in feeble health for seven months, three of which she was confined to bed more than half the time. She was afflicted with a very ulcerous sore throat and a serious lung trouble for four months, which reduced her to almost a skeleton. In addition to this her infant babe was buried nine days preceding her—all of the above preying on her system at the same time, she breathed her last breaths in weakness. She was a loving daughter, an affectionate and devoted wife, and kind and social with all. "God's ways are not ours." Unheeding our grief, he loves to take the rarest flowers to adorn his heavenly home, before the stem be rudely broken by the stormy breeze of life.

F. R. WEAVER.

BARKER—On Wednesday, April 20, 1887, MATILDA BARKER, daughter of Captain S. D. and Lydia Brellen, of Jefferson county, Miss., after a long and painful illness, passed into death's long and dreamless sleep; her sunny, trusting eyes closed on earth forever, to open in paradise. Sister Barker was the child of affliction, having suffered intensely several years prior to her death. In affliction she learned in patience to possess her soul, and feel "that all things worked together for good to them that love God." Sister Barker was a faithful wife and affectionate mother. She leaves two brothers, four sisters—all who were with her in her last hours except Sister Alexander, who lives off in Yazoo, and was not able to attend. She also leaves four children who will miss her greatly. We miss her, but sorrow not as those who have no hope, for she was resigned and willing to depart and be with those gone before.

J. A.

WRIGHT—Died in Vernon parish, La., June 2, 1887, REV. ABSALOM WRIGHT, in his eightieth year. Father Wright was born in Catahoula parish, April 1, 1808. His parents moved to Ouachita parish when he was quite young. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, under the administration of Rev. J. G. Jones. He was married to Miss Louisa Long in the year 1834. He moved from Ouachita parish to Sabine parish, about the year 1842. He was licensed to preach under the administration of Rev. Daniel Watkins, in the year 1850; was ordained deacon, in the year 18—; ordained elder in 1865. In 1852, his wife died, leaving him with one only daughter to raise. He remained a widower for about three years, and in 1855 he was again married to Mrs. Elizabeth Conerly, and moved to the waters of the Anacoco; at which place he spent the remainder of his life. Father Wright was a man of more than ordinary intellect. The time was when he was a power in the pulpit; but for many years his age and health would not admit of his doing much preaching. During his sickness he sang, "How firm a foundation," and, "Come, let us join our friends above." Two days before he died he became speechless—but he gave signs that all was well.

JOHN FRANKLIN.

BARTON—ELVIRETTA BARTON, born September 10, 1870, in New Orleans, and remained there until three years of age. Since that time her home has been in Algiers. Was lost April 13, 1887. She was sixteen years old, seven months and four days. It is our loss, but her gain. She had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, since seven years of age; was converted, November, 1885. Bro. Scurlock was preacher at that time. Bro. Walker was preaching the night she received the great prize. He announced that she was converted coming from her seat to the altar. I had the honor of being her Sunday-school teacher at the time. Meet her where I would, at home or on the street, she had always a pleasant smile and a kind word for me. Her mother says, as a child, she was obedient and of a quiet temperament; impulsive in forming her likes and dislikes. She had been requested, not urged, by her mother, to attend the revival; consequently her conversion was an unexpected and joyous surprise. When asked at home, what prompted her to go forward, she replied, that "she could not stay away." It was on the succeeding night that she united herself with the church.

MRS. SALLIE DAVIS.

PARK—Died at his home, near Provencal, La., March 2, 1887, JOSEPH PARK. He was born June 28, 1818. Bro. Park was a native of Illinois. He moved to Louisiana in 1858, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, June, 1859, and lived a faithful Christian. He loved the church, and his house was a house of prayer and a home for the preachers. He was a Christian at home and abroad, and it could be said of him by all who knew him. He was twice married; first to Susan R. L. Woody, 1836. He was married to Margaret Bell in 1874. He leaves a wife and six children and many friends to mourn his loss. His last words were: "Meet me at home; let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." May God's blessing rest upon Sister Park and the children!

J. P. CARNLINE.

GOOD LOOKS.—There are faces that might be beautiful were they not empty, telling of a starved soul as plainly that he who runs may read. There are other faces that might be beautiful were they not written all over with discontent and selfishness. An artist who had secured an unwilling Chinaman to sit as a model, said to him, "John, if you don't look pleasanter, I won't pay you." "No use," said John, "when Chinaman feelee ugly, he lookee ugly."

This, then, is the secret of an attractive personal appearance: high thinking and pure hearts, that shall shine out through the human face and transfigure it. Do not forget that bright eyes, rounded cheeks, are among the good and perfect gifts not to be lightly esteemed. But only when the beautiful face is the outshining of a beautiful soul, has the world found its ideal.

$500 Reward.

If you suffer from dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucuous, purulent, bloody and putrid; if the eyes are weak, watery and inflamed; and there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice being changed, and having a nasal twang; the breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; experience a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough, and general debility, then you are suffering from chronic nasal catarrh. Only a few of the above named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case at one time, or in one stage of the disease. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, less understood or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians. The manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy offer, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of catarrh which they can not cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents.

Some men are fated to do things the wrong way, and spend their lives in grumbling at their hard luck. They always try to split wood against the grain.

Church Festivals.

On this subject the Southwestern Methodist speaks on this wise:

"But as to raising money by [illegible] wise or profitable. The claim of sociability and a desire to draw others within the circle of church acquaintance is discounted and contradicted by the effort to make money by the social entertainment.

"The effort to raise money leads to objectionable measures, or to exorbitant prices for that which is served.

"The money, if raised by fair means, costs more than it is worth; the same labor and expense directly bestowed would be more profitable to the church.

"But the greatest objection to this method of raising money is that it breaks down the very sentiment and principle upon which the church rests for support—a conscientious consecration of temporal things to the service of God and systematic giving to the church. Get the members of the church to depend upon such means of raising money, and the sense of duty to give directly to the church is broken down. Let your people get the idea that when any special demand for money is upon the church, the ladies will get up a festival to raise the money, and the church is ruined."

THE SPHINX.—The riddle of the sphinx is at length on the point of being solved. The great man-headed, lion-bodied monument, which has for ages been more than half-buried by the accumulating sands of the desert, is now being rapidly brought to light, and ere long one of the most extraordinary relics of Egyptian civilization will be once more visible in its entirety. The work has been going on since January last, when—at the suggestion of M. Maspero, the chief director of the department of antiquities in Egypt—the French public, in the course of a few hours, subscribed sufficient funds to enable the work of excavation to be carried to completion. The interest of such news for Egyptologists may be conceived, when it is remembered that the last time the Sphinx was dug out of the sands was by King Thothmes IV., fifteen centuries before Christ, or about thirty-four hundred years ago. Scholars, in fact, are of the opinion that the Sphinx is the oldest monument in the world. In the opinion of some, it was erected or chiseled out of rock more than forty-five centuries before the Christian era. The body is more than one hundred and eighty feet long. The ears of the human-shaped head are about six feet in length, the other features being in proportion. The learned explorers who are engaged in the work of excavation hold it probable that when the statue is fully brought to light, a number of other important discoveries will be made.—Selected.

Beautiful woman, from whence came thy bloom,
Thy beaming eye, thy features fair?
What kindly hand on thee was laid—
Endowing thee with beauty rare?
"'Twas not ever thus," the dame replied,
"Once pale this face, these features bold,
The 'Favorite Prescription' of Dr. Pierce
Wrought the wondrous change which you behold."

Here is a sentence from Douglass Jerrold, worth the attention of young men who want to take a "short cut" into the ministry: "Do not take down the shutters until you have something to put in the windows."

Original Automatic Ice Cream Freezer

Saves Time, Labor and Ice.

In its construction we gain ONE-HALF more freezing capacity over the old style of crank and paddle, besides the labor of unpacking and repacking. The tight-fitting covers—C—preventing any possibility of the salt or water mixing with the cream, besides avoiding (as in other freezers) the labor of unpacking the whole bucket, when an examination of the cream is desired. In our freezers, access to the cream is at all times convenient, by simply removing the cover, C, without any way disturbing the ice or freezer.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

Gen. Boulanger's corps is stationed at Clermont-Ferrand, 250 miles from Paris. The Cabinet, it is said, decided upon this disposition of Gen. Boulanger's case in order to secure his absence from Paris during the July fetes.

The French Chamber of Deputies, by a vote of 273 to 240, has agreed to a clause of the Army Bill, which provides that students of the Normal School may be drilled at school, and that the time thus spent shall be considered equivalent to military service.

Twenty-one persons were tried at St. Petersburg between the seventh and sixteenth of June on the charge of being active members of the society called the "Will of the People," and of complicity in several murders, of participating in a number of robberies, of having assisted in several dynamite outrages. Three were acquitted, and the rest found guilty, and sentenced—two to Siberia, the rest to imprisonment at labor.

It was announced to the Italian Chamber of Deputies by Signor Mancini that the alliance between Italy, Germany and Austria had been concluded with the sole idea of securing the peace of Europe by purely defensive means.

In the House of Lords, on the first, in the report of the stage of the Irish Land Bill, the Earl of Dunraven said that there were 300 amendments waiting which might almost recast the bill. Many were provisions which derogated from the main object of the measure. Earl Spencer declared that the bill would fail to bring about a settlement of the Irish question, and was not worth considering as it would not relieve the tenants. He did not think the government understood some of the clauses, because in some cases the clauses would injure the tenants, and in others would injure the landlords. Tenants might be ordered to pay arrears in small installments, but the payment of rent was not provided for, and, therefore, the tenants might continue paying the installments and allow the rent to accumulate. Directly the bill passed, the courts would be crowded with applicants whose cases would not be settled for years. The report of the bill was agreed to, and the third reading fixed for Monday, the fourth.

M. Ristles, the new Servian Prime Minister, has sent circulars to the various representatives of Servia abroad, stating that the chief points of the policy of his government are to improve the financial condition of the country, reform the constitution, maintain an entente with all the powers, including Austria, and to improve the relation with Russia. The circular concludes as follows: "We desire to become supporters of peace and order in the Balkan Peninsula."

Le Nord, the Russian organ, published at Brussels, says: "Russia, Germany and Austria are friendly. If they do not agree on the Egyptian question, it will simply result in liberty of action for each power, and Germany, Austria and Italy will not espouse England's interest to the extent of affording her material assistance."

DOMESTIC.

It was reported in Chicago on June 28 that a majority of the judges of the Supreme Court of Illinois have decided to grant a new trial to the condemned anarchists.

In the Sharp case the jury, after being out thirteen minutes, returned a verdict of guilty with a recommendation of mercy.

The national debt decreased $16,852,725 17 during the month of June; amount of cash in Treasury as shown by Treasurer's general account, June 30, $182,433,917 21.

The sheriff took possession of the property of the Knights of Labor Publishing Company, Chicago, June 30, on a confession of judgment in favor of George E. Deldler, for $8,133. A receiver has been appointed, and the publication of the Evening Star will be continued.

The new postal treaty between the United States and Mexico went into operation on the first of July. The provisions can be summarized as follows: Ounce letters go to Mexico for two cents; newspapers, from the office of publication, one cent per pound; third-class matter, one cent for two ounces, and fourth-class matter, not exceeding seventy ounces, at one cent per ounce. Mexico, so far as our postal facilities are concerned, is placed upon precisely the same footing as any State of the United States. Of course, dutiable articles will be subjected to the same custom-house arrangements in Mexico that dutiable articles now brought to New York from foreign countries are subject to in our post-offices.

The Mississippi River Commission, at its sitting in New York on July 2, allotted $116,140 for levees, distributed as follows: For the Tensas front, $321,140, which line extends from Amos Bayon ridge, in Southern Arkansas, to the mouth of Red river, in Louisiana, a distance of about 315 miles of river front, which protects the entire alluvial portions of Desha and Chicot counties, in Arkansas, and the Fifth Louisiana Levee District, which is composed of the parishes of East Carroll, Madison, Tensas and Concordia; also the entire alluvial portion of the Tensas basin levee district, composed of the parishes of Ouachita, Morehouse, Richland, Franklin, West Carroll, Caldwell and Ottahoula. For closing the gap in the Yazoo front, at Robinsville, Miss., a point thirty-three miles above the mouth of White river, $60,000. For the White river front, in Arkansas, the commission allotted $75,000.

Hon. Duncan F. Kenner died quite suddenly, in this city, July 3. The Picayune says: "There have been few Louisianians more conspicuous in public affairs of State, or more closely identified with its political, agricultural, social and financial history for the past fifty years than Duncan F. Kenner."

BOOKS.

THE NEW BIRTH: WITH A CHAPTER ON SPIRIT-CURE. By L. P. Mercer. Publishers, Charles H. Kerr & Co., 175 Dearborn street, Chicago. For sale by George Wharton, 5 Carondelet street. Price, fifty cents.

This is the Swedenborgian doctrine of the new birth. We have read Swedenborg's statement of this doctrine, and can say that there is much of it which we do not understand; and what we understand we do not believe at all. These new church people have a zeal in spreading their literature which is worthy of a better cause.

THE CAPTAIN OF THE JANIZARIES. By James M. Ludlow, D. D. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York.

This is an historic novel of the time preceding and immediately following the fall of Constantinople, in which the exploits of a most extraordinary character—Scanderbeg—are set forth in glowing colors. The author has set the story with skill, and crowded it with thrilling incidents.

IN OLE VIRGINIA. By Thomas Nelson Page. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. For sale here by George Wharton & Bro., 5 Carondelet street. Price, $1 25.

The book consists of stories of Southern life, character and scenes. They are exquisite stories, and will be read and appreciated and enjoyed by all. Mr. Page is such a delineator of the Southern negro as to cause us to think that he must have "growed up" among them.

PERIODICALS.

—St. Nicholas will delight all the young folks with its bright pictures and interesting stories. It is crowded from beginning to end with the very best of various kinds.

—The Homiletic Magazine has its usual budget of substantial matter for preachers and Christians at work.

—The Magazine of Art not only sustains, but increases the reputation of this superb monthly. Accompanying this number is the "Jubilee Number:" the Queen's pictures, portraits and reading-matter, illustrating the chief events of her Majesty's life. This is a beautiful number, which everybody can procure for fifty cents. Cassell & Co., 739 Broadway.

—Peterson's Magazine has plates illustrating the lastest fashions, stories, poetry, music, etc.; and all for $2 a year. C. J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

—The Quiver opens with an interesting account of Miss Leigh's Home for English and American Girls in Paris. There is a continuation of several serial stories, all illustrated. Bible Lore, Bible Scholars, Poetry and Anecdote hold an important place in this number. Cassell & Co., New York. Fifteen cents a number. $1 50 a year in advance.

—Educational Notes, published by D. Appleton & Co., New York, is an educational paper intended to guide those in search of good books to the place where they can be found. It is "published occasionally."

—The American Magazine has 125 pages of good summer reading. The supplement is especially good. B. T. Bush & Son, 130 Pearl street, New York. Price, $3 per annum.

For Rickets, Marasmus, and Wasting Disorders of Children,

Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is unequaled. The rapidity with which children gain flesh and strength upon it is very wonderful. Read the following: "I have used Scott's Emulsion in cases of Rickets and Marasmus of long standing, and have been more than pleased with the results, as in every case the improvement was marked."—J. M. MAIN, M. D., New York.

Persons living north of Jackson, on the L. C. R. R., or east or west, on the V. and M. R. R., and wishing to attend the Seashore Camp Meeting, should meet the excursion train leaving Jackson at 8:30 A. M., Friday, July 15.

Low railroad fare there and return, with good board and lodging either at the camp grounds, Biloxi or Mississippi City from $1 25 to $1 50 per day, ought to be sufficient inducement for everybody to attend the Seashore Camp Meeting. Tickets being good for fifteen days, to return on any regular passenger train, excursionists will, therefore, have ample time to visit all the prominent watering-places on Mississippi Sound.

Washington and Lee University.

We call attention to the advertisement, in another column, of Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va. The Academic Departments, as well as the professional schools of Law and Engineering, open September 15.

Seventy-five graded Jersey cows were shipped from Starkville to Texas, last week.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

HUGH JAMIESON, JR.,
Publisher.

We call attention to the advertisement of University School, Petersburg, Va., in another column. The twenty-third annual session of this School for Boys begins the first Monday in October. For catalogue address W. Gordon McCabe, Head Master.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1887 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (thirteenth) July, 1887.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds. Several distinguished preachers invited from a distance will be in attendance and will conduct the services of the meetings and a large gathering is expected. A very general expression having been made to continue the meeting for a longer session than usual, it has been determined to extend the time of the services of the camp meeting to two weeks.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on.

For further information address any of the trustees, namely: J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.; W. Otis, W. J. Hearin, R. E. Jones, Mobile, Ala.; J. J. Flowers, Rolling, Ala.; Dr. E. F. Grifin, Moss Point; J. P. Carter, Hattiesburg, Miss.; W. H. Foster, E. P. Mackie, J. H. Campman, B. O. L. Rayne, T. J. Carver, H. Jamieson, jr., P. Werlein, H. Haag, New Orleans, La.; or B. E. Price, the keeper of the camp ground, near Biloxi, Miss.

Round-trip rates, over Louisville and Nashville road, from Athens, Ala., $10 25; Birmingham, $9 25; Montgomery, $6 50; Greenville, $5 90; Evergreen, $4 80; Pollard, $4 80; Bay Minette, $2 60; and all stations between these points at corresponding rates. Tickets will be on sale from July 11 to 23. Mobile, $2; St. Elmo, $1 70; Grand Bay, $1 50; Scranton, 90 cents; Pass Christian, 80 cents; Bay St. Louis, $1; New Orleans, $2 50. Tickets on sale from July 12 to 27; good to return to July 31.

The rates for the round trip over the Illinois Central from all stations as far north as Canton will be four cents per mile. Tickets on sale July 12 to 21, and limited to July 21.

The rates over the Mobile and Ohio from all stations as far north as Corinth will be four cents per mile for the round trip. Tickets on sale from the eleventh to the twenty-third; good to return to thirty-first.

Special freight rate to camp ground will be given by the Louisville and Nashville road from Montgomery, Mobile and New Orleans.

The Louisville, New Orleans and Texas road will give special round trip tickets to camp ground.

The public are invited to attend.

The Board of Missions appointed the week, beginning August 8, as a week of prayer and self-denial in the interest of our missions.

IT IS WELL.

Yes, it is well: the evening shadows lengthen;
Home's golden gates shine on our ravished sight;
And though the tender ties we try to strengthen Break one by one—at evening time 'tis light.

'Tis well! The way was often dull and weary;
The spirit fainted oft beneath its load;
No sunshine came from skies all gray and dreary;
And yet our feet were bound to tread that road.

'Tis well that not again our hearts shall shiver
Beneath old sorrows once so hard to bear;
That not again beside death's darksome river
Shall we deplore the good, the loved, the fair.

No more with tears wrought from deep inner anguish,
Shall we bewail the dear hopes crushed and gone;
No more need we in doubt or fear to languish,
So far the day is past, the journey done.

As voyagers, by fierce winds beat and broken,
Come into port beneath the calmer sky;
So we, still bearing on our brows the token
Of tempest past, draw to our haven nigh.

A sweeter air comes from the shores immortal,
Inviting homeward at the day's decline;
Almost we see where from the open portal
Fair forms stand beckoning with their smiles divine.

'Tis well! The earth with all her myriad voices,
Has lost the power our senses to enthrall.
We hear, above the tumult and the noises,
Soft tones of music, like an angel's call.

'Tis well, O friends! We should not turn—recalling
The long vain years, nor call our lost youth back;
Gladly, with spirits braced, the future facing,
We leave behind the dusty, foot-worn track.

The Cry from Japan.

We are permitted to print a letter of Mrs. Daisy Kelley Lambuth to her parents, Dr. and Mrs. D. C. Kelley. The letter is dated Kobe, April 4, 1887, and reads as follows:

DEAR PAPA AND MAMMA: We had a good many out yesterday to Sunday-school. Before we finished, three teachers from the Normal School came to talk to Walter about Christianity. They talked until our dinner-time; then, as they were not nearly through, I asked them all in to dinner. They left about half-past two, and then Walter spent half an hour praying with Mr. Adachi, who joined the church yesterday, making three members. In the afternoon he preached and administered sacrament. After tea he went up to mother's to hold father's Bible class; so you see that from 9 A. M. until 9:30 P. M. he did nothing but preach. Is it not good for us that they come to ask questions and talk about Christianity? Surely, good will come from the three who were here yesterday. All were thoroughly educated men, in English, Japanese, and Chinese.

April 6.—Miss Haygood arrived from China yesterday. Her health is not very good. She will remain here for a week or two.

April 7.—Mrs. Campbell and Miss Roberts passed through today. We would have liked to have kept them for work here in Kobe—we do need a woman so very much. A self-supporting girls' school could be had for the asking. A class, or two classes, of over forty women could be gotten up in a week. I have five women every afternoon, from three to five o'clock. I could not do justice to a class, as I have not the time to give to them. These same women come to me from eleven to twelve. Mother and Mrs. Dukes have them all the rest of the time, and yet one of them complained to me yesterday that she was not getting enough Christianity!

April 8.—Mr. Dishi, one of the Sunday gentlemen, was here again last night to ask some explanations between the Bible and science. Walter gave him a copy of your "Modern Doubt"—the other copy Mr. Sato has, and we hope much good from them.

April 10.—Four of our reading-room boys put their names down last night as probationers. Walter was up until twelve talking to Mr. Sato. Poor man! He says: "I want to believe—will you study with me? will you reason with me? I have a little faith, but when I reason by myself it seems as if I would lose that." What are we to do with such m[illegible]? Japan is full of them. Out on their infidel foreign professors! Must we reason with them, or shall we only pray with them? Prayer is to them a farce. I will keep on trying to do my little. Mr. Oker is just back from his home at Bungo. They want a foreign teacher there—$120 a month, a house, and $100 paid toward his coming out. Of course, by the time may one could come from home the place will be taken; we have no one to put there. Just opposite, at Eyon, they send to us for a missionary—no one to send. O papa, just for ten years Japan begs our church for help—after that she will help herself. I get so impatient I feel as though I would burn up. I can't bear to see the needs, and my hands tied. They are begging for light, and we can not give it. I tell myself, over and over again, that it is God's work, he will take care of it; but I can not be still—I can not be calm. Father's work in Hiroshima is grand—he never tires. I feel, as I never felt before, what a failure my life has been. If God will help me, I will try henceforth to do something for him. We know that the church is doing all it can for missions; so, while we are not afraid to trust the spiritual training of our children to God, we are not afraid to trust him, for them or ourselves, as far as our temporal welfare goes; so we have decided to give baby's and David's $100 ($200), and our $100 of mission money, making $300 a year, toward the support of another missionary. We will board him for nothing; therefore, the $300 will meet all necessary demands. Now, papa, find us a young man who will come on these conditions. We will support him, say for four or five years, until the Board can take him up. We want some one who will work, even when he is so tired that he is ready to drop in his tracks. When he does drop, he must be willing to work sitting, and when he is worked out sitting, then he might rest a little. Would to God that I could work like that!

They have begun a railroad to Hiroshima, and now I can go, for there will be no long ride in a jinrick. I had given up all hope of ever getting to Hiroshima, but the railroad! Is it not too good to be true?

April 11.—Two more applications for foreign teachers—one from Osaka, and another from a village a mile or two from here. O papa, we are in earnest about this work. Help us, O help us! for God's sake, help us! I wish we could live on Japanese food—that would reduce our board from $25 to $10 a month. Mr. Sato was in again last night, begging for help. Are you all dead in America? don't you hear us crying for help? don't you hear the Japanese crying and pleading for a Savior? Pray the Board to help us, or recall us.

April 14.—Two more private schools want English teachers—so it goes.

Your loving daughter,
DAISY LAMBUTH.

MR. EDITOR: By the last mail I sent you a hurried note, as the mail was just about to leave when I arrived from a visit to some people on the south side of the great island of Shikoku, who sent us urgent appeals to come and help them, and bring the light of Christianity to them. Two Sabbaths before this I had visited a people far away upon the mountains of Japan, in the province of Bingo, to preach to them the blessed gospel of Christ our Savior. They had written twice, earnestly entreating us to come and help them. We felt it was a true "Macedonian cry," and we could not refuse to take to them the knowledge of salvation through Christ. I found there about twenty persons, meeting twice a week—Wednesday evening and Sabbath evening—reading together out of two or three New Testaments, and praying for God to give them light. They earnestly implored us to send them some Bibles. The trustees of the school wish to make the Bible one of the text-books in the school, and they desire it to be a Christian school. Before leaving the town I received the names of seventeen persons who desire to become Christians. When I told this to our native congregation in Kobe, they contributed at once about thirty New Testaments to send to them. I take them with me to-day to Hiroshima. They asked me repeatedly to come again soon, and tell them of the way of salvation more plainly. Our hearts were cheered and strengthened by such encouragements, and we praised God that our steps had been directed to these people imploring Christian people to bring to them the light of the gospel. Here were a people being taught of the Spirit of God. No missionary had ever visited them, but they were searching the Scriptures and praying for light.

When I reached Kobe on May 22, I had only a short time to rest, for we had another earnest "Macedonian call" from a few persons in the town of Moajima, at the lower end of the great island of Shikoku. They had written to us, earnestly imploring us to go and preach the gospel of Christ to them. In this letter they earnestly begged us to give to them the light which the gospel brings to man. After this letter came these words, wired over the land and under the sea, "When are you coming?" Can we doubt of their earnestness? As soon as I could, I started with Bibles, tracts and hymn books. We were two nights and a day upon the little steamer, during which time we called in at eight ports before reaching the town of Moajima. When we arrived we were met by several gentlemen who came to the steamer for us. When we reached the shore, I was greatly surprised to find fifty young men drawn up in line to welcome us to their town. Soon after our arrival others came to welcome us, which they did in the kindest manner, all of whom were perfect strangers to us. These were the persons from whom the Macedonian call came, and we felt truly thankful to God we had been led to go and tell them of the love of Jesus and of his willingness to save. For about four days we met them three times a day, and at night to read to them from the Bible, and tell to them the story of the cross. Moajima is a large town of some twenty thousand people, and not one Christian among them that I could hear of. But there were a few persons hungering for the bread of life. They had no Bibles, for no missionary had ever been among them. All they knew of Christianity was what a lawyer had told them. He had heard the preaching of the gospel in another place, and his wife and daughter had professed faith in Christ, but had not yet moved to the town with him. He had told them of salvation through Christ, and he also had written us that he, too, wanted to be a Christian. Here were a people being led and taught by the Spirit of God. Shut in by the great mountains on one side and by the sea on the other, they had but little communication with the outside world, and yet they wanted the light of the gospel of Christ to shine in their hearts. On the last night I addressed an audience of one thousand persons, men and women, old and young, and for more than an hour they gave the most perfect attention to what was said. They clapped their hands when I entered and ascended the platform, but when requested not to do so, I had the most order. There is living at this town a "live Dimeo," more than a hundred years old (one of the old feudal kings). I was in his garden and the grounds which surround his palace, but I did not see the exking. I could see the faces of many women and servants peeping from the windows to get a sight of the foreigner. Before leaving the town I received the names of twenty-eight persons who expressed a desire to become the followers of Christ. They promised to meet together twice a week and read the Word of God.

On my return to Kobe we stopped a short time at a town called Oita, in Bungo, where the people are anxious to have a missionary come and live among them, and they will pay him $125 per month, find him a house, and pay one hundred dollars towards his passage to Japan. They want him to teach in the school where there are four hundred young men. Who will come and help us? Who will answer such a call? Here in Japan are many thousands of perishing souls, hungering for the bread of life, stretching out their hands to Christian people and imploring them to bring them the gospel. Can not the subscribers to your excellent paper send us a missionary and support him? One dollar a year from one thousand subscribers will send and support a man. Let the churches respond everywhere to the Macedonian calls, and may God help them. I leave to-night, with Mrs. Lambuth and Mrs. Park, for Hiroshima. Pray for us.

Your brother in Christ,
J. W. LAMBUTH.

KOBE, JAPAN, June 7, 1887.

The Week of Self-Denial and Prayer.

A SERMON.

TEXT: Daniel ix. 3.

The prophet's prayer, accompanied by self-denial, was answered—Israel was liberated and Jerusalem rebuilt.

I. The heavy debt of our Mission Board proves to be a great affliction. We owe not much less than a hundred thousand dollars.

1. Its creation does not charge culpability on the part of the Board. The president, Col. Cole, is a skillful and prudent financier. Dr. Kelley, always correct, prevents possible leakages. Dr. John neglected not to beget the necessary esprit de corps.

2. The entire church is responsible for the debt. The Mission Board appropriated amounts which were based on precise calculations on the church's ability and presumable willingness to contribute to foreign missions.

3. The collections fell short of reasonable assessment. Various causes contributed to effect this shortage. Among them a prominent one is, that you and I have not given enough for missions.

4. A debt operates very injuriously. It deprives the debtor of the necessary courage for legitimate business. It paralyzes his energy. Often odium is attached to it. The credit is impaired. It is even true: "Whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken that which he hath."

5. The interest paid on the debt will engulf the debtor. It is only a question of time. Besides, in our case, the money which should be used in sending out more missionaries is being buried by paying the accumulating interest.

II. Our only remedy. The entire debt must be paid, must be paid at once. To do this the week of self-denial and prayer has been ordered.

1. Self-denial is faith-food. The exercise of faith often difficult. Yearned for more faith in prayer; but disappointment filled my eyes with tears. Self-denial, such as fasting, works wonders in such emergency. Though with the lust of appetite, breakfast and dinner are neglected. Notwithstanding gnawing hunger, I eat not; eat not from love to God, eat not to get my body under. Lo! ere I know it, my faith mounts on wings as eagles; my prayer has become a prayer of faith.

2. Self-denial would secure largely increased contributions for missions. We are spendthrifts. Abstain from tobacco during the stated week. Our bill of fare should be reduced at least one-half of its usual value. Away with all superfluities!

3. Self-denial would teach our preachers and people a very important lesson, namely: not to look so exclusively to the rich in securing our collections. Cease belaboring the few opulent members in manner sarcastic and repulsive. Systematically secure the gifts of all; the poor, middle classes and rich. This entails great labor, but the result will be abundantly satisfactory.

4. Withal, pray, that the debt be obliterated; pray, but not until you have yourself handed in your contribution; pray, and after prayer you will give more; pray, and your prayers will avail; pray, that others, too, will open their hearts and purses for the Lord's cause. Amen.

J. B. A. AIRENS.

Some Notes.

The love-feast at Louisiana Avenue, last Wednesday night, was a precious meeting, and, no doubt, all who attended were greatly benefited. Friday night we preached at Parker Chapel, afterwards holding the Quarterly Conference for the Carrollton circuit. The reports of the pastor, Rev. Fitzgerald S. Parker, showed increase and steady growth, especially in the matter of Sunday-schools. There are two flourishing schools—one at Carrollton and one at Parker Chapel, and a very promising mission school in Carrollton. Preaching and administering the sacrament at Carrollton, Sunday morning, we had the pleasure and profit of listening to Bro. Marcy Lyons at the chapel, at 4 P. M. "Wilt thou be made whole?" was the question he pressed upon the attention of his audience. Marcy and Bro. Dunstan will come before the next Carondelet Street Quarterly Conference for license to preach. We learn that our young brother, Schule, formerly of Arcadia, and converted under the ministry of Rev. John A. Miller, has been licensed at Shreveport. May the Lord of the harvest call many others from the ranks of our young men into his glorious ministry. We have need for numbers of consecrated, zealous workers in the vineyard. We had the pleasure of administering the sacrament to the Parker Chapel people. Rev. J. D. Parker, honored and dearly beloved, is the superintendent of the school there, and a large and interesting school it is. This church, catching the spirit now abroad in New Orleans Methodism, will, we think, have a mission school of their own before long. The section towards the river, and stretching to Carrollton, is a good field for them. We learn, by the way, that several new and numerously attended mission schools were started yesterday in the neighborhood of our out-door meetings. Something is being done, and more will be, looking to the saving of the old and young who do not attend church. Dr. Trippett preached an edifying sermon last night at Carondelet Street. He is on his way to the Seashore Camp Meeting, and reports that others are coming. Let all who possibly can, preachers and laymen, attend the camp meeting, full of prayer, faith, and the Holy Ghost, bent on the one thing of soul-saving. S.

"Reserved."

We have often wondered what was the meaning of this word, as used in the last clause of the Eighteenth Article of our religion. The following from Dr. Daniel Steele, in New York Advocate, seems to be a satisfactory explanation:

The following quotation from Coleman's Christian Antiquities (page 323) gives the true explanation of the word "reserved" in the Eighteenth Article of Religion: "Hence, also, the custom of many religious persons carrying a portion of the consecrated bread from the church to their homes, and reserving it for future use among their most precious and valuable treasures. In a chest appropriated to the purpose this sacred deposit was laid, and when no opportunity was afforded of attending the morning service, every time they rose from bed, and before engaging in any worldly business, they were accustomed to consecrate the day by the solemn act of participating of the sacrament; or, when a Christian stranger came to their houses for their hospitality, ere ever he tasted of the viands that were produced for their refreshment, the morsel of the consecrated bread was broken between them, and their social intercourse hallowed by the preliminary rite of communion." The ecclesiastical authorities finally forbade this practice in the words found at the close of the twenty-eighth of the thirty-nine Articles of the Anglican Church; and copied in the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Consuming the Juices of Life.

It was with pain, if not surprise, we saw at the recent meeting of the trustees of Randolph-Macon the Rev. Dr. Boyle, infirm in one foot, forced to use a cane, and the motor nerves languid in the leg. He was the most stalwart of the conductors of the Southern Methodist press, commencing some years ago, in robust health, to edit the Episcopal Methodist, of Baltimore. It is another chapter of overwork. The Conference organs put to proof the firmest fibre of mind and body. The means at command are so limited by the small patronage of a single Conference that the work of a dozen men fall upon the manager of a local religious paper. He is editor, proof-reader, bookkeeper, burdened with business of advertising, paper, ink, type, mails, press-work, besides bushels of letters. He is a canvasser for subscribers up and down the Conference bounds. He preaches, lectures, and attends colleges, District Conferences, Sunday-school celebrations. Who wonders that men get withered and prematurely gray, or in middle life tumble to pieces?

At the last General Conference the chief church editor, Dr. Fitzgerald, showed marks of weariness and exhaustion. That body gave him a young, stout and able coadjutor, and ten thousand dollars in addition to pay editorial writers and contributors. He has been all the while free from concern about the business department of the Nashville Advocate—that galling yoke of the Conference paper never touches him. There is no call, of course, for him to spend days and nights every month in rushing from district to district. And yet when we saw him in May his eyes were hollow, and the cares of his position were cutting gashes in his forehead. How hard, indeed, is the lot of the Annual Conference drudge!

There is a certain voracious and winged creature in the African wilds that feeds on the antlered van of the herd. It fastens on the neck, and makes incision with hard beak into the skull, and feasts only upon the brain, pecking, crumb by crumb, till the noble animal falls dead. The press diets on living marrow.

The gladiators exhibited by Claudius on Lake Fucinus in the sea fight, drawing the blades, lowered their arms before the Emperor. "Hail, Cæsar, they that are ready to die salute thee." And so the doomed swordsmen of the church move forward, knowing their certain fate. God has set them forth as appointed to death.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Notice.

The Vicksburg District Conference will meet at Fayette, July 28 instead of the twenty-seventh. The district stewards will also meet at the same time and place. Bishop Galloway is expected to be present.

ABIDING IN CHRIST.

BY M. S. THOMAS.

A wondrous river flows in my breast,
Down from God's throne of everlasting rest;
A sunlit river, peaceful in its flow,
Though round me earthly winds and tempests blow.

Within my soul a fountain ever springs;
Sparkling and fresh, its tinkling music brings
Thoughts of the upper world; while in its spray
A rainbow hangs through all the gladsome day.

Upon his throne in my surrendered soul,
My Savior reigns, whose will is my control;
His love, the sunshine of this happy life,
Makes all things sweet, and banishes all strife.

The glory of the Lord, from day to day,
Crowneth with light the footsteps of my way;
Thus peace and joy and love and glory shine,
In blessed fullness in this heart of mine.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS.

Matthew iii, 13-17.

GOLDEN TEXT: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—Matthew iii. 17.

THE FORERUNNER'S MISSION ENDED.

The divine biographies are unlike human in that they give only those points in the history and character of the individual which are pertinent to the narrative and needed to enforce the moral. No laudation is used, no irrelevant incident mentioned. Of this man whom the Savior called a burning and a shining light, of whom he further said, "There hath not risen a greater," but little is said. His birth, his preaching in the wilderness, his baptism of the Savior, his imprisonment, his sending messengers to Jesus, the Savior's estimate of his character, his beheading and burial, are the only mention made of him. His ministry was an exceedingly short one, he having been put to death in the twenty-seventh or twenty-eighth year of the Christian era. His mission was simply to prepare the way for the Messiah. Of him he spoke with sublime self-abnegation—"He must increase, but I must decrease." John was cast into prison almost immediately after the baptism of Jesus, whence he came out only to meet a bloody death. In all probability, the last act of his public ministry was

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS.

Verse 13. "Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan." Jesus was now about thirty years of age. This is the first mention made of him since he was spoken of as being in the temple arguing with the lawyers and doctors. The intervening time had been spent, doubtless, in the family of his reputed father, Joseph, whose trade he had learned and practiced. "Unto John." Though Jesus and John were cousins, and their mothers had visited each other before the birth of either, still it is quite probable that they had never met, the latter having been kept in the wilderness, and having led a life of rigid self-denial and of primitive simplicity; the former having his abiding place in Nazareth, a mean, obscure village of Galilee. Blood relations, and of even closer kin, spiritually, yet had they not known each other in the flesh. The same Spirit who, after his baptism, had led up Jesus in the wilderness, doubtless had directed him to apply to John for baptism, and had, at the same time, prepared the mind of John for beholding and identifying the "man who is preferred before me." "To be baptized of him." Just why Jesus was baptized has excited different opinions. By some it is believed that it was to set man an example in regard to joining the church. Why should he wait until he was thirty years of age? This would be a very bad example, as if men live out of the church to that age, they are not apt to join at all. One of the reasons of his being baptized, doubtless, was to set the world an example as to repentance. John's baptism was unto repentance, and, although the Savior had nothing to repent of, still it was proper that he, a representative man, should thus give a lesson to the world. But the chief reason of his baptism was to be set apart to the priesthood. Thirty years of age was the period when Jewish priests were set apart for the ministry. Luke, after describing the baptism, says: "And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age."

14. "But John forbade him." That is, restrained him, strongly objected. John realized the divinity and sinlessness of the Savior, and hence saw the inappropriateness, or, as he thought, the sacrilege of subjecting him to a rite which implied that he had sins to be repented of. John himself knew that all pardon of his own sins was to come through the same Christ who was now applying for baptism; hence nothing but a positive command from the Savior, attended probably by an inward moving of the blessed Spirit, would have made him yield.

15. "Jesus answering, said unto him, Suffer it to be so now." The reply of Jesus to John on this occasion was far different from that to Peter, when he sought to interfere with the orderings of Providence in the Savior's career. Peter began to rebuke Jesus, and to say these sufferings shall not be unto thee. Jesus answered, in a tone of the severest condemnation to Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan." The reply to the Baptist seems to justify his feeling of unwillingness to baptize the Savior. It pays a tribute to John's judgment as well as his reverence; but suggests a compromise for the present emergency. As if he had said: "Sacrifice your feelings for the present. It is needful that I should stand in the stead of man. Now let the King appear as the subject, the Author of salvation be as he who himself has sins to be atoned for." "For thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." Jesus ever showed the deepest reverence for all existing statutes, whether of Church or State. He taught men to render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's. When they demanded tribute of him, he first showed that he was exempt, but immediately sent his disciple to get the money out of a fish's mouth to satisfy the claim. So also he was circumcised the eighth day, and he was redeemed as the first-born, and now he was further to obey righteous requirements in submitting to John just as any mere mortal in his condition would have done. "Then he suffered him." John's scruples were all removed. He not only felt shielded from all imputation of sacrilege, but felt honored in being the instrument of carrying out his Maker's ordinance.

16. "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water." This passage is a stronghold of those who believe that Jesus was immersed. But there is not one word in the text or its suggestions which authorizes immersion. In the first place, the preposition is here incorrectly translated "out of"; it should be translated "from." It is so translated in the New Version of the Scriptures. In the second place, as Jesus was baptized as an inductiou into the priesthood, then the manner of induction, as described in Exodus xxix, 4, and other places, settles the question as to mode—"Bring them unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and wash them with water." A ceremonial washing which is also applied, in Mark vii, 4, to "cups, pots, brazen vessels and tables." The cooking vessels, tables and couches could not be washed by immersion. Furthermore, the baptism of the Holy Ghost was by affusion, as is shown in the sixteenth verse, and as is shown also by comparing Acts i, 5, with Acts ii, 17. "The heavens were opened unto him." An indication that the God of heaven was approving and ratifying the ceremony. A similar attestation of the heavens was given at the death of Stephen and at the call of Saul of Tarsus. "The Spirit like a dove lighting upon him." The dove is an emblem of gentleness and peace, and aptly symbolizes the mission of the Prince of Peace. This was the evidence by which John was told that Christ could be recognized. It was a fulfillment of prophecy and a divine declaration of the personality and deity of the incarnate Son.

17. "And lo! a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." "Lo!" is an expression of attention and wonder. The voice from heaven was supernatural; but must have been exactly similar to the human voice, as it was readily understood by those who heard it. The "saying" is the same used on the Mount of Transfiguration. God, speaking of himself or his Son, uses the present tense—"I Am that I Am." "I am well pleased." The latter expression is a fulfillment of the prophecy contained in Isaiah xlii, 1: "Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth."

The sixteenth and seventeenth verses contain a very striking presentation of the Holy Trinity and a proof of the three distinct personages of the Godhead. There was the audible evidence of the Father in the voice—"This is my beloved Son." There was the ocular evidence of the Holy Spirit in the similitude of the dove. There was the blessed Son manifest to eye and ear as he stood upon the banks of the Jordan and convinced John of his Messiahship.

Shall the Indians Be Saved?

BY LUCINDA B. HELM.

The Indians shall not be saved, if we do not make greater effort to give them the Word of Life. To Christians were given the keys of the kingdom of Heaven with the command to open it to all men, and reveal to them the way to eternal life. Not as giving special authority, but as a warning, were spoken the words: "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven;" for—oh! terrible responsibilty—how can the chains of the prisoner be loosened, the captive sinner set free, from the bonds of Satan, if we to whom God has revealed the light open not to them the door?

And what people in "all the world" should we—American Christians—be more eager to rescue from the "gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity" than the Indians, whom we, as a people, have driven from this place to that, regardless of their local attachments which are strong; whom we have robbed of the homes they loved even as we do our beautiful homes that have supplanted them—though theirs were but wild hunting-grounds, to us merely unclaimed territory; in whom our injustice and cruelty have stirred up the soul-destroying fires of revenge; to whom we have given the vice of drunkenness and the manifold sins that follow in its train. We have added link upon link to the chain that binds them to eternal ruin, when with the name of Jesus we should have unloosed the fetters with which the evil one has bound them. The "Great Spirit" had prepared them to receive the kingdom of Heaven that was coming in the hearts of Christians, but we closed our hearts—we have given them evil, not good. We have not only withheld the pardon God has commissioned us to carry to them, but we have given them curses instead.

Now shall we be saved, if we fail to do all in our power to save them? For the words, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," were not used by St. Paul as a rhetorical flourish, but as the statement of a fact that should be considered by all who profess Christ. And surely it is better to aid in sending the gospel to Christianize the Indians than soldiers "to keep them down"—to destroy them; and one or the other, it seems, must be done. Would that the hundreds of thousands expended by the government to keep them in order by force could be used by the church of God to win them to Christ by love. Our church has determined to redouble its efforts to send them the gospel and calls upon the Woman's Department of Church Extension for assistance in providing homes for the missionaries already in the field. If we can but supply this necessity of the work, we will greatly relieve the Board of Missions and enable it to send other missionaries further into the Territory, where the people we have rendered destitute, miserable, homeless and hopeless never hear the Word of God. Will you not give this much-needed assistance to the cause of justice and mercy? May the Spirit of God move your heart that you may lend a listening ear, and send from out your store a gift—large or small as God may have blessed you—to aid in saving the Indians!

"God Loveth a Cheerful Giver."

MR. EDITOR: Our pastor announced that a week in August has been set aside by our church for prayer, fasting and sacrifice. He told us why it has been so ordered, and how we can accomplish its purpose; and I hope not one of his hearers will fail to strive for this end, feeling it not only a duty, but a pleasure and a privilege.

It may be very easy for those who live in cities to deprive themselves of some little luxury, or even necessity—something from their table, or something from their dress, a pleasure ride, or an amusement—but with country folk it is somewhat more difficult. Very many of us have no luxuries at all. Our bills of fare are almost altogether of our own production. To do without any one or, perhaps, two things that many days would bring in very little to the great cause we are striving to aid. But, no doubt, "where there is a will there is a way;" and, if we are truly in earnest, God will be our helper. If we can give only the "widow's mite" in worldly goods, we can give our whole hearts to prayer.

It is said that the world grows better as it grows older, but I would like to cite the case of a man who lived nearly three hundred years ago. I know not his name, nor his station; yet his example might be followed today by many who have never experienced, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." He was a man of universal good nature, and generous beyond his means; but so prudent in the economy of his affairs that what he gave in charity he gained in good management. He was not what the world called rich, his income being only five hundred dollars a year. He never claimed but four hundred and fifty of it, saying the other belonged to the Lord; and this he always appropriated to charitable uses. To this sum he frequently made voluntary contributions, and thus in a good year—he called that year good when he was able to make greater bounties than usual—he gave almost twice as much to the sick and indigent. And besides this he often set aside days of fasting in order to increase his bank of charity. Many times when going to his place of business he would walk, and at the end of the walk give his cab fare to some needy one who called upon him. It was also known of him that should he be going to some place of amusement, to the opera or theatre—Methodism was not known then—and meet with some necessitous person he would give him his entrance fee, and turn aside, and spend the evening with much satisfaction at some place less expensive, or, perhaps, at the fireside of some friend. In this way he was generous without impoverishing himself, and enjoyed his worldly goods by sharing it with others. He knew nothing of foreign missions, but he did know, "The poor ye always have with you;" and at no time did he forget that "he who gives to the poor, lends to the Lord."

It has always been a great mystery to me how anyone can openly confess faith in Christ and love toward God and his fellow-man, and publicly vow to support the church and all her institutions, and yet withhold that which she so much wants in time of great need. There are very few of us all over this beautiful land who are unable to give something when the church so needs our sacrifice.

Rev. William Hart and the Minutes.

Every now and then some one feels called upon to criticise the minutes of his Annual Conference, and with justice frequently, for no man is infallible. If this is done with fairness and generosity, no objection can be urged; and the secretary is usually, under such review, silent and thankful. But, under the misleading caption—"What about the Minutes"—Rev. William Hart has the presumption to make a personal attack upon the secretary with charges and insinuations that are as offensive as they are baseless. He claims to have had some experience in the office, and was, I believe, assistant secretary for one year, and acquitted himself so efficiently that his brethren have excused him from any further service. That slight acquaintance, however, was sufficient to inform him of all the details of the business side of the office, so he thinks, and to qualify him to sit in judgment upon its management ever afterwards. A postal card to the secretary might have saved him a little indignation against that officer, and spared him the exhaustion consequent upon that effusive sympathy for his brethren which characterizes his communication. At any rate, it would have given him some information as to the actual conduct and intention of the secretary, in case he really wanted information.

The number of cards in the minutes of late is not as great as in some years before the brother joined the Conference, and certainly is not as remunerative as then. Even were there more now than then, the amount of matter published is greater than ever before, with one or two exceptions; and I can say for one of those excepted years that it brought the secretary in debt. Until recently the Board of Missions have given annually from $50 to $125 to assist in the publication of the minutes! Afterwards the preachers gave annually from $65 to $25. No one has ever been taxed to publish the minutes, though the preachers were requested to furnish the postage for distributing them. The postage actually paid this year was $1 80—the voluntary contributions at Conference—and subsequently amounted to $25 70. If Rev. William Hart gave a nickel of this, I have no record of it. The total contributions for publication and distribution aggregated one-sixth the actual cost, and the secretary, by labor which no one has the right to exact, furnished five-sixths. He did it cheerfully, but not to the satisfaction of Bro. Hart, who groans in spirit because he did not furnish the other sixth also. How much did his pocket groan for his poor brethren, or how much did his legs and arms ache for them? He does, I presume, some work for our ADVOCATE and Publishing House, though not a particle for the minutes. Why not ask those publishers for a free paper, or set of commentaries?

He champions the cause of the slighted pastor of West Monroe, who stands high enough in this Conference to make such patronage an impertinence or, at least, unnecessary. The fact in this case is that I hold a receipt from Steamer "John Howard," dated March 18, 1887, for a package of minutes shipped to him at West Monroe, care Jethro Moore.

The declaration that no minutes were sent, or that any were withheld from those who failed to pay the postage called for, is without the shadow of truth; for every preacher in the Conference, and "supplies" even, whose addresses were known was furnished with the pro rata established, without regard to postage or subscription.

As to the meagre allowance to the works, he has been exact enough in the complaint to fix the number at five or six to the hundred, when my memorandum shows the ratio to be ten. This was not in every case followed, for his charge of 100 members received seventeen copies—the less right has he to complain. Except when the present secretary has enlarged the edition, if I recollect aright, there has never been more than 1,500 copies published, and that number has not been decreased for years.

Doubtless, my brother would make a fine secretary, and it will give me great pleasure to nominate him at the next Conference, when, if he can get votes enough, he may try his hand. He seems to think "there's millions in it;" and I judge it is about time to let some one else grow rich. He or anyone else ambitious of the honor, or riches, or troubles, or abuse contained in the office is welcome to it so far as concerns the secretary of the Louisiana Conference.

THE SECRETARY.

From the Work.

EVERGREEN, LA.

MR. EDITOR: We would post you again in reference to the wonderful revival on the Evergreen circuit, Louisiana Conference. Two months to-day since it began. We have to date added to the church 140 members, and we are not half around with our protracted meetings.

We have just closed on Bayou Clair to give Big Cane a chance.

The revival at Bayou Clair was wonderful. It continued thirteen days, with increasing interest each day. We adjourned with thirty additions to the church. We are under many obligations to Bro. J. D. Jackson, of Opelousas. He came in just in time. I was broken down, and very hoarse. He took charge the last three days of the meeting, and preached four stirring revival gospel sermons. I have been sowing and cultivating and laboring hard in these valleys for thirty years with but little visible results. But, thank God, the fruit, the harvest is appearing, and a grand one it is. Thanks to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ! We must have more laborers in this field. Pray for them.

Yours in Christ,

FRED WHITE.

JULY 2, 1887.

SOUTH BOSSIER, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Our second Quarterly Conference has been held by Bro. Cassity, who is in fine health, and is certainly up in discharging the duties of his office.

The subject of education received considerable attention. Bro. Cassity representing Mansfield Female College, and the writer Centenary College.

You know, Mr. Editor, this is one of the largest circuits in the Conference. I know you would have thought a District Conference was in session, could you have seen us last week as we were trying to do the business of this circuit. The circuit has made good progress during the last quarter. We have received into the church about twenty-five. Two-thirds of our assessments for foreign missions have been raised. We are hopeful of bringing up a clear report on all the collections ordered by the Annual Conference.

Bro. Cassity showed to the satisfaction of a large congregation that it is impossible for any one to be a Christian and at the same time to be opposed to missions.

We had some grand times last year in revivals, and we hope to have some more of them this year.

We have not forgotten the ADVOCATE, as the publisher can show. Yours in Christ,

HENRY S. JOUNS.

BELLEVUE, LA., June 28, 1887.

Dr. Lambuth's Call.

RESPONSE NO. 1.

MR. EDITOR: I have just read in the ADVOCATE, of June 30, Dr. Lambuth's appeal. It has stirred my soul, and I feel inclined to respond. I propose to give not "one," but five dollars, which is subject to your order. I close this with the hope that every preacher, itinerant and local, in this and the two Mississippi Conferences will give an equal amount.

Here is a local preacher—W. F. Henderson, of Caddo circuit—who says, "Put me down for five."

We do not propose that this contribution shall interfere with the regular missionary collections.

Preachers and laymen of Mississippi and Louisiana, let us enter the open door at any cost. A special offering of five dollars will not impoverish us, but will make many rich. Now, let us act at once and attend to this matter within the next thirty days.

Here are three sisters standing by who say, "Put us down for one dollar each." And still they come. Here comes an old mother in Israel who says she must not be left out. One dollar more. And still another sister appears and says, "One dollar more!"

Here are fifteen dollars subject to your call. J. B. CASSITY.

SHREVEPORT, LA., July 5, 1887.

RESPONSE NO. 2.

MR. EDITOR: Bro. Lambuth's appeal in last ADVOCATE must be heeded. I enclose $5 extra on my regular contribution. I will be one of 200 to give $5 each, or one of 100 to give $10 each, to send that much needed missionary to Japan at once. Can not Bro. Billingsley fill the place? If no other plan will work, let 1,000 give $1 each, and count me and my eight children for $ each on that proposition, and will find a friend to make the tenth one. Start the ball and let it roll on. Pray for me and my motherless children

Your brother,

F. D. VAN VALKENBURGH.

P. S.—This $5 sent is to be towards sending that missionary, or, if failure is made in that direction, turn it over to the regular Missionary Treasurer as a donation from a friend.

F. D. V.

The gospel despairs of none. It knows of no hopeless irreclaimable classes. It can kindle a soul under the ribs of death. The filthiest rags can be cleansed and made into spotlessly white paper, which may have the name of God written upon it. None are beyond its power; neither the savages in other lands, nor the most hopeless heathen festering and rotting in our back slums, the opprobrium of our civilization and the indictment of our Christianity. Take the gospel that transformed the poor slave to them, and some hearts will own it, and we shall pick out of the kennel souls blacker than his, and make them like him, brethren, faithful and beloved.

How to Reach Roman Catholics.

THE GULF COAST PLAN.

The necessity of doing it, if practicable, can not be questioned. This great truth has been too much overlooked by Protestants. Let us look into it. Right here in Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, and all around us there is probably no one thing—whisky excepted—that stands in the way of Christian progress so formidably and so stubbornly as the peculiar mistakes, errors and superstitions of popery. These errors retard—rather, prevent—the progress of true religion in the Catholic Church as much as out of it. We have no right to oppose the Roman Catholic Church; but it is our duty to oppose anti-Bible practices, doctrines and teachings wherever found, in or out of any church. Do we sit still and see them propagate because of their ecclesiastical name? The most damaging human wrongs are sometimes perpetrated and propagated in the name of the church.

Now, how can these errors be reached with some reasonable hope of success? The mere, regular ministrations of the pulpit offer no encouragement. We have tried it. The reasons are easily seen, but need not be here elaborated. Foreign missions! Well, these labors are, at least, not here, however successful or unsuccessful they may be. "The Greeks are at our doors." In this field, large, ripe and inviting, are we putting in a sickle? I do not see it.

A plan has been suggested by the brethren of Bay St. Louis. Rev. B. Jones first suggested it. I believe it has promise—large promise in it. Of course, it implies industry, enterprise and vigilance—all three. These are supposed to be at hand. And now, Mr. Editor, will you allow me right here to explain this suggestion.

The papal errors that are chiefly damaging are very few in number, easily stated in few words so as to make them palpable and convincing to persons not incapable of exercising reason at all in the premises. Some intense Romanists dare not and will not think about religion; many others are not so enslaved, and, then, more than half of those in this country are only semi-Romish or slightly tinctured. Probably three-fourths are within our reach if properly approached, and, then, another great advantage we have is this: A great many of the Catholics in this country are intelligent people, though almost wholly uninformed about Bible religion.

All these things met our friends square in the face in a revival meeting, a few weeks ago, at Bay St. Louis, and they providentially, no doubt, hit upon an expedient, theoretically simple, but practically powerful, and hitherto unused among us, as herein proposed. After sufficient consultation we went to work and got up a little tract, clustering these errors in a plain and simple form, without elaboration, and almost exclusively confined to historic facts.

While it is not necessary to attribute any particular importance to this tract of a logical or literary character—for it deals almost exclusively in fact—it is considered of the utmost importance that it have a widespread distribution. We want to put one in each and every house in New Orleans, Mobile, and all this inter-coast country, with plentiful supplies in all the railroad coaches. Catholics will read it, discuss it and ask the priest about the truth of it. The priest will be obliged to read it in order to refute it. In this way we can utilize the intelligence of Romish people in spite of Pope or priest. And it is verily believed that these few facts will arrest the attention of many an intelligent, honest-minded, but sadly uninformed Catholic and semi-Catholic.

Our little Bay St. Louis tract is called "The Priest and the Preacher," is published by our Nashville Publishing House, and sent out at the price of $4 per hundred. This plan of reaching the Catholics is highly approved by everybody as far as we learn. It is highly spoken of in this ADVOCATE by Bishop Galloway, and Bro. Mellen, of the Mississippi Conference, and the former stongly intimates a most important teaching thus: "It is folly to send missionaries to Roman Catholic countries and neglect the priest-ridden of our own communities."

A hundred dollars spent in spreading broadcast a few paragraphs of well-selected information of this sort can not fail to arrest the serious attention of more Catholics than a thousand dollars sent "to Roman Catholic countries."

Where Roman Catholics are largely as intelligent as they are here the backbone of popish slavery can and must and will be broken. R. ARNEY.

"Church Suppers" Again.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE, of June 9, there appears an article over the signature of the Rev. D. M. Cogdell, who has assumed the responsibility to champion the cause of innovation on the financial system and policy of the church. Bro. Cogdell denominates this method for the maintenance of the gospel as "legitimate." He says the income is just as legitimate as the income from the practice of any of the professions. We could grant this only on conditions. Does the lawyer announce that his practice is for the benefit of the church; that the money collected, in part, goes for the support of the ministry, and solicits patronage ostensibly for that purpose? If so, there would be some analogy. But the income of professions is personal and private, and nothing ulterior to this, except as he voluntarily chooses to devote of his private means to benevolent objects. So with all the professions. But is the income of "suppers" private? If so, we have no further opposition. But it is not private, but public, in the name of the church! The money is the property of no one. The church becomes a public pauper, crying to the appetite for means of support. Then let people collect the money which they expect to contribute to church purposes as private means. Let them have suppers in their own name for their own private use, and give their money to the church, just as they would the proceeds of their cotton.

The validity of this practice of church suppers is not taught in the Bible, neither in fact nor in principle. We are not authorized to adopt measures for the propagation of the gospel which are not directly or indirectly in the Scriptures. "This is the only and sufficient rule for our faith and practice." But how are we to ascertain what the teaching of the Scripture is? By the personal study of the Bible and the use of all the helps accessible.

1. Do the Scriptures teach or warrant the practice of this bartering process for the maintenance of the church of Christ? Is the church "fair" the child of the Bible doctrine of benevolence and liberality? No. It is a bastard that gendereth to financial bondage. Has the church been groping in darkness for eighteen hundred years under the example and precept of the inspired apostles, the guidance of the Holy Ghost, the ever-present light of the Bible, to find perfection at last in the system of gospel finance displayed in the regalia of the modern church "fair," and the like?

2. Do our representative Bible expositors propagate or indorse this practice as taught in the doctrine of Christian giving? We dare assert that none of our standard authors inculcate such practice. If so, we would like to have the page noted. "No form of charity should be tolerated for a moment that in the actual state of a community will foster a spirit of gambling." What proportion of these occasions does it occur that there is not rattling connected with them? In the writer's observation, not two per cent. I have known of "fairs" without rattling; but I never knew of a rattle unconnected with a "fair." They go together. The church supper undoubtedly fosters rattling, and rattling is denominated by many of our ecclesiastical leaders as gambling. So "fairs" "foster" gambling, "and should not be tolerated for a moment." Again: "Any attempt to promote a benevolent object by appealing to selfish motives is wrong." Is not the "fair" or "supper" an appeal to selfish motives to promote benevolent objects?

3. Do our Bishops indorse this practice? None of them have given their sanction to the procedure. I ask the reader to refer to Bishop Galloway's "Second Letter" in the Arkansas Methodist, of February 12, 1887.

4. Have any of our church organs advocated the plan? None that I know of. But I know our great connectional organ is unmerciful in its condemnation of the practice.

5. Do we find any precedent for the practice in the usage of the church? Not until late years; and now it is not a usage of the church. But it may be compared with sporadic, putrid excrescences on the body politic which threaten to poison and destroy the financial system of the gospel. I first heard of the thing as introduced under the negro title—"festible."

The church of the living God is not a parched and sterile channel, drawing its beauty and glory from the vicious streams without; but the source of her beauty, glory and strength is within her. "In Zion the perfection of beauty God hath shined." She is not a mendicant upon the charity of the world, but gives the trumpet-blast—"Ho! every-one that is athirst, come ye to the waters." The world may draw from her boundless store and be rich, drink of pellucid waters and never thirst. The elements of the church's maintenance and progress are internal. She is self-supporting and self-propagating. "God is in the midst of her." She is the bride of the Lamb. Her garments are of divine texture and beauty. O church of God, thou bride of the Lamb, defile not thyself with the unclean, but lean thou on the love of thy youth!

CHAS. H. OWEN.

Be of good cheer. Don't lose confidence in men. Men are the best thing God ever made for this world. You haven't as many discouragements as Paul had, and yet few persons are counted more successful than he. He got tired and blue, not once or twice. He had some very undesirable church members at Corinth, and met some overwise people at Athens. But he hoped, and triumphed.—E. A. Bell.

An Opinion Cheerfully Given.

From their relation to society, the clergyman of a growing denomination, the minister of a congregation, the pastor of a flock, naturally feel great sympathy for the afflicted. Hence, when the truly pious priest finds a certain remedy is no humbug, but does afford genuine, reliable relief, he does not hesitate to give to the world an honest opinion of it.

The following is from one of the most faithful missionaries ever sent to Siam:

"DRS. STARKEY & PALEN: I cheerfully give you my name as a reference for inquirers as to the merits of the Compound Oxygen Treatment. After having been so greatly benefited by the use of this Treatment, I should deem it an act of the deepest ingratitude to withhold my name from a remedy which is so effectual in healing and removing the pains, diseases, and infirmities which our fellow-creatures are suffering, or are liable to. With the deepest gratitude for all your kindness, I remain, your true Oxygen friend. J. H. CHANDLER.

"CAMDEN, N. J., 573 Line St., 29th Oct., 1885."

A Treatise on Compound Oxygen, containing a history of the discovery and mode of action of this remarkable curative agent, and a large record of surprising cures in consumption, catarrh, neuralgia, bronchitis, asthma, etc., and a wide range of diseases will be sent free. There are three requisites to successful pulpit work, namely: experience of personal piety, knowledge of the Bible, and knowledge of human nature. It is the same with the Sunday-school teacher.—Dr. Broadus.

Ladies will find relief from headache, costiveness, swimming in the head, colic, sour stomach, restlessness, indigestion, constant or periodical sick headaches, weakness in the back or kidneys, pain in the shoulders and different parts of the body, a feeling of lassitude and despondency by taking Simmons Liver Regulator. It is not unpleasant, is purely vegetable, and is not injurious in the most delicate constitution.

All truly wise thoughts have been thought already thousands of times; but to make them truly ours, we must think them over again honestly till they take root in our personal experience. —Goethe.

Child-Birth Easy

The time has come when the terrible agony of this critical period in woman's life can be avoided. A distinguished physician, who spent 40 years in this branch of practice, left to child-bearing women this legacy. THE MOTHER'S FRIEND, and to-day there are thousands of women who, having used this remedy before confinement, rise up and call his name blessed. We can prove all we claim by living witnesses, and anyone interested can call, or have their husbands do so, and see the original letters, which we can not publish.

The Board of Missions appointed the week, beginning August 8, as a week of prayer and self-denial in the interest of our missions.

Briefs.

Dr. Haygood, in the Advance, says, in regard to the education of the negroes of the South:

Besides the public schools, supported by legislative appropriation—"without distinction of race"—there are in the South many schools of higher grade in which the future teachers of the race are preparing for their work. At this time there are about seventy "Normal schools;" "institutions for secondary instruction," at least eighty; colleges and universities, between thirty and forty. As far back as 1882, there were four law schools; three schools of medicine; twenty-four schools of theology; six schools for the deaf, dumb and blind. Out of these must come all the teachers fit for their work, for these 18,000 common schools for colored children are taught by colored people. The exceptions are so few as to be unappreciable. As a rule, these training-schools are thoroughly good: there are no better teachers than are most of the specially trained men and women who compose their faculties.

Many of our preachers, who have toiled to plant the good seed of the kingdom along the lower Mississippi, will rejoice in the fact that we now have a neat house of worship in Donaldsonville. We clip the following description of it from the Donaldsonville Chief, of June 25:

The new edifice is finished interiorly in natural wood colors, oak and walnut alternating, and has a seating capacity of 150, folding walnut opera chairs being used instead of the regulation pews, an innovation that will no doubt be highly appreciated by the attendants at divine services. The reading-desk is finished in satinwood, and the ceiling in imitation of corrugated iron. Through the side and centre aisles are laid pretty strips of carpeting, and the reading-platform is covered with a tasty ingrain carpet and ornamented with a fine Mason & Hamlin organ. Services were conducted in the new edifice last Sunday by Rev. W. Wimberly, assisted by the Plaquemine choir, whose excellent music was much admired.

The Independent says:

It may be fairly said that there is not in Massachusetts a single native-born child, not mentally or physically incapacitated, within the school age, who can not read and write. But that tells but half the story. There were in Massachusetts, in 1885, 121,572 persons ten years old, or over, who could not write their names, whether in English or their own mother tongue. In Fall River there are 9,292 such people, mostly French Canadians. In Lowell and Adams one in ten is unable to write his name; in Blackstone, Douglas and Webster, one in eight; in Holyoke and Spencer, one in seven; in Chicopee, one in six, and in Southbridge and Provincetown, one in five. A special examination made in some of the mills shows that from twenty to thirty per cent. of the employees between the ages of fourteen and sixteen are totally illiterate. Here is a tremendous danger; and legal compulsion is needed that these illiterate Canadians, Italians and Irish shall not be allowed to bring up their children like themselves. Evening schools in English for the older children, and day-schools for everybody, and compulsory attendance are what is needed.

Missionaries have done more for the literary world than all the societies and institutions of the earth. In the past eighty years they have formed, and reduced to writing, over forty languages.

The Cry from Japan.

On the first page we publish two letters from Japan. The first is from Mrs. Daisy Lambuth, wife of Dr. Walter Lambuth, to her parents, Dr. and Mrs. D. C. Kelley, of Nashville, Tenn., and is dated April 14. The second is from our veteran missionary, Rev. J. W. Lambuth, to this paper, and is dated June 7. Many of our readers may have seen the first letter, as it has already been priuted in all our church papers; but we ask them to read it again in connection with the second. These letters corroborate what we have heard from other sources in regard to the great awkening in Japan. Our own friends on the ground establish a fact which thrills every true Christian heart with encouragement, and creates a new faith in the success of prayer. In answer to prayer, the long-closed gates have swung open. In answer to the cry of the church, "a people steeped for ages in a peculiar superstition suddenly develop strong tendencies in the direction of religious revolution." In answer to prayer, God has moved mysteriously, yet mightily, upon the hearts of thousands to turn their minds in quest of himself. All over Japan they are asking for the Bible, and the living expounder of its holy truth, and the herald of its hopeful, joyful messages.

Bro. Lambuth and his heroic little band are doiug all that human beings can do. They are in the midst of a seemingly boundless harvest of whitening grain! They have already taxed their willing energies beyond the line of prudent husbandry. They are in "travail of soul" that the golden sheaves may be gathered into the Master's garner! The letters, which we publish from them, voice the cry of their pressed and anxious spirits for help. In them is heard almost the wail of despair. They look over that yellow sea towards the home land, and strain eye and ear to catch some sign of coming relief, while their burdened hearts are asking the terrible question: "Are you all dead over there?" The letters show, as plainly as can be shown, that they need, sorely need, re-enforcements; and they need them right away.

Is it a general law of Providence that great opportunities and great crises come together in the history of the church? Is it God's method to test the faith and heroism of the church by permitting her to come into a great trouble and, at the same time, to open for her enterprise a great opportunity? If so, then God is dealing with us as he has not dealt with us in all our past history!

There can be but one opinion as to our church having reached a crisis in her missionary operations. The statement of the Missionary Treasurer, that we are in debt to the amouut of $100,000, and that the Board can no longer act until the church rallies to its relief, is proof enough of that. If our readers could have seen the expression of pain which passed over the usually impassive face of the treasurer when he made that statement to the Board, they would have been couvinced that he saw an imminent peril! Then, the appointment of a "week of prayer and self-denial," in which our members are called to pray as they have never prayed, and to exercise a self-denial never before practiced, in order to obtain the relief asked by the Board, proves that a crisis is upon us. Then, the Bishops' address, published in last week's paper, the undertone of which is almost as sad as a dirge, shows that our general superintendents consider that our church is in a condition which has brought uneasiness to their ever-hopeful hearts. The crisis is upon us. In church history a crisis is a test brought fiercely to bear upon the integrity of Christian principles and the very foundations of Christian faith. And these tests are for the purpose of showing the church "what is in her heart." In such a case inaction will paralyze all our energies, and retreat will bring a dishonor that no future achievement can wipe out. At such a time to retrench in the matter of supplies to our missionaries abroad is simply to shoulder a responsibility that will crush out our life. Can any man, in whom the love of souls is burning, read Bro. Lambuth's letter, and then advise the Board to recall him and his co-laborers? Can any man, who desires the continual spread of Christ's kingdom, read that letter, and then advise the Board to curtail the salaries of those heroic people? We do not believe that any such man is in our church!

Now, as to the opportunity which has been opened to us. The letters to which we have referred show plainly that our missionaries in Japan are not only well received, but are having more calls upon their time and labor than they can answer. In consequence of this they are asking earnestly for help. Our Bishops, in their address to the church, say that re-enforcements for this work can be obtained. Men and women are offering themselves to the Board for this very field. What the church needs to do, and to do immediately, is to supply the equipment and send the re-enforcements right along. Bro. Lambuth has made a proposition to the readers of the ADVOCATE, which, if they will carry out, they can easily equip a missionary for that field. He says that one dollar apiece from one thousand of our subscribers will maintain a missionary in Japan for one year. We believe that more than a thousand of our readers are willing to give a dollar each for this purpose. Here, then, is our opportunity. Bro. Lambuth's appeal is a direct call upon the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana. It is God's call through him. The matter is urgent, because it is God's call. The cry of the heathen for light has entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, and has come to our ears through the call of his little band in far-off Japan, and has laid upon the readers of the ADVOCATE a new and fearful responsibility. The very fact that this heroic missionary has made a direct and personal call upon us, and, at the same time, has pointed out a feasible plan, by which we can answer the call in less than thirty days, has laid upon us a responsibility in this matter which we can meet only by its prompt discharge.

Readers of the ADVOCATE, God never called us, or anyone, to do an impossiblo thing. God is testing our principles and our faith by this call of his aged servant for help. We can do this thing, and God is watching to see if we will. Let the readers of this paper promptly respond to Bro. Lambuth's proposition; and the announcement, like a bugle note, will stir the whole church out of her lethargy and get her ready to keep the "week of prayer and self-denial" in such a way as to astonish the world with the magnificent results. The readers of our paper are already moving in this matter. One brother sends fifteen dollars; another, five. One at our elbow says, "Five for me." Read the letters on the second page from Bros. Cassity and Van Valkenburgh. Send in your dollars to the editor. Everyone who contributes and sends name shall be placed on the roll of honor. "What thou doest, do quickly." "The King's business requireth haste."

Dr. Phillips Brooks' Church in Boston, during the past ten years, has given to missions and charitable purposes an average of $100 per day.

June Days Abroad.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTRELL, D. D.

After a Sunday at Shreveport, and a lecture there, the following night I went to Ruston, where my old itinerant comrade and friend, J. A. Parker, is pastor. With him and his I spent two days that will be among the memories most pleasing through the coming years. Yes, I was his presiding elder for three years, in Alabama, and confidence, affection and esteem disiderate acquaintance from intimate association. Parker has grown and ripened. Open-minded and fair, he is just such an one as it is delightful to canvass all questions with. His helpmeet! Well, I forbear. "A good wife is of the Lord."

I lectured at Ruston to a good audience on Wednesday night, June 30, and ran down to Arcadia the next morning, and lectured at night, meeting Bro. Miller, and having a refreshing talk with him. Mr. Burnside Capers, a son of Col. Capers, of whose wife I wrote before, had told the people of the lecturer, and in spite of the panic caused by the shooting of a turbulent, defiant negro and of a white man that day, a goodly company came out.

And now my June days abroad are all gone, and July met me along the way from Arcadia to Jackson, Miss., via Vicksburg. On Saturday morning I ran down from Jackson to Terry, fifteen miles toward New Orleans, and visited a sister, Mrs. Col. Mount, whom I had not seen for thirty years. George Bancroft is pastor at Terry, and his presiding elder, Bro. Weems, is holding his quarterly meeting. A sermon is extorted at night, after which I run back to Jackson—after twelve o'clock—and Dr. C. G. Andrews finds me in his office, asleep on Sunday morning, in which office he had left the lamp lighted in prospect of my coming.

A magnificent church has recently been dedicated here, and yesterday it was my pleasure to preach, morning and evening, to large congregations in the beautiful temple. The Baptist and Presbyterian pastors were kind enough to join their congregations with the Methodist, at night, and thus had the preacher an opportunity to discourse in respect of those things that unify and harmonize the brotherhood. Manifestations and expressions have all been grateful to-day from preachers and people; and, as I write, the hour draws on for a lecture to-night at the Capitol—the ladies of the Confederate Monument Committee directing.

I should have mentioned preaching yesterday afternoon to the convicts in the Penitentiary, at the instance of the chaplain, Bro. Sproles, of the Baptist Church. Ah! what occasion such a service gives for a ministration in love! Tears and hearty grasp of hands from many, when Bro. Sproles invited penitents to come forward in token of a wish for salvation, were encouragement to a preacher, who can only say in praying: "Our Father, * * * forgive us our sins." Christ did not formulate a creed, nor furnish dogmas, but he did put upon the lips of Zion a prayer; and that prayer associates us all. It is, "Our Father, * * * forgive us our sins;" kneel with whom we may, in prison or in sanctuary.

Since beginning this writing, I have been called out to the front gate to see the precious girl who is soon to leave for China as a missionary—Miss Gordon. May Heaven smile upon her all the way and make her glad in the work!

Many incidents have fallen out, well calculated to interest the reader, along this way of journeying since I came South; but I will forbear in consideration that what is merely personal may not be allowed to push out from the ADVOCATE what is of general interest.

It is hardly allowable for a correspondent to indulge full expression of the enjoyment he has with congenial brethren and their families; and, therefore, I close by simply saying, with Bro. Andrews and his, "I am at home."

The sun goes down as I close now to make ready for that "hour's talk about boys and girls," on this Fourth of July, 1887.

JACKSON, Mississippi.

Dr. Adams Moving.

Sallis is a railway town of 500, about half way between Kosciusko and Durant. So named from an excellent Baptist who resided there.

Bishop Galloway reached this point along with this scribe at four o'clock, Friday morning, July 1. At 8:30 he was in the chair and calling to order the Winona District Conference. A large delegation responded to roll call. J. B. Streater and J. R. Bingham were elected secretaries. This is now considered a matter of course in the district. The Bishop came very directly to business. Committees were appointed upon literature, temperance, records, education and missions. Having, therefore, provided for general ventilation of these subjects, the Bishop proceeded to call in order: first, the presiding elder, and then each of the preachers in charge, to give minute account of their charges. This inquiry developed a most encouraging report in the majority of instances. In one or two cases there was a slight wincing and disposition to complain. Some evils were discovered, and methods of correction suggested. But, mainly, there was the ring of real triumph and hope of greater things in the future. Preachers are looking to glorious revivals in the near future. Several neat new churches have been erected—that at Sallis being one; others are in process of erection. Parsonages are coming to be the rule rather than the exception over the district. Quite a number of new charges have grown up.

The rich Yazoo Valley is being rapidly developed along the new lines of railroad running through the western part of the district. On the east the Nashville, Canton and Aberdeen road has produced the towns of Ackerman, McCool and Ethel, and circuits have been formed around these nuclei. The central northern part of the district has been missionized, and the northwestern part is now becoming one of the most desirable of the work. In connectional matters the district has resolved to sweep the decks and scour the floor after sweeping. "No deficit at next Conference," was the watch-word agreed upon. Nor is that a brutum fulmen, which, being interpreted, means flash-in-the-pan, pop-cap, resolution. It will be a be. This portion of North Mississippi is one of the finest parts of Southern Methodism, and constitutes, numerically, one-sixth and more of the entire North Mississippi Conference.

Literature had a good searching report. The fact was brought out that there was taken one church paper for every ten members, and that of these nearly every second paper was the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. I state this fact, Mr. Editor, as in part accounting for the prosperous condition of the district. I notice that where a good list of subscribers to the ADVOCATE can be obtained there Methodism booms. Pursuant to this faith, I made a speech for your paper (I know you will call me to order on your paper), and obtained twelve subscribers. The reason I got no more was that nearly all were already subscribers. A ringing resolution in favor of the ADVOCATE will, no doubt, come with the secretary's report. It was unanimously voted to the report. Vice-President Murrah, of Whitworth; Professor Patterson, Black Hawk, and your scribe, Centenary, discoursed. A revival along the line of education in and by the church is without doubt coming. Whitworth, Black Hawk and Centenary display encouraging tokens. The "winter of our discontent" past, and everyone confident looks forward to increased enrollment next September. The fine points of these assurances are not visible at great distance nor through the opacities of endowed monuments of materimentality. But the points are there all the same.

Temperance came in for its proper share. No one dared to advocate the cause of the whisky devil. He was severely handled.

Missions had a committee, but no report. During the session, however, a resolution, covering all the ground, was brought in, and "your committee" resolved that the ground was covered. But a district anniversary was held on Saturday night, at which your humble servant was to "open the exercises," and Bishop Galloway was "to exercise the openings." Your correspondent proceeded to his part of the work, and, after doing his level best for forty-seven minutes (Bishop's time), succeeded in pronouncing the meeting open, and called the Bishop out. The Bishop was equal to his part of the program, and at the end was as successful as your scribe, and pronounced the openings exercised. The result of these exercisings was most gratifying. $212 86 was collected or subscribed—this to be counted at Annual Conference to supplement any district deficit, but not to be counted on the regular collections. I must add that the Bishop's experience and observations in regard to our work among the Red men were intensely interesting—almost an inspiration to myself. We sang the Doxology at the end of the collection.

The enjoyment of this occasion was to me a benediction. Blessed seasons of grace in the sanctuary, and, socially, a feast of fat things continually. Only there were heavy showers that made it disagreeably muddy. But in spite of the rains the crowds attending were sufficient to fill the house. The preaching of your correspondent was lengthy; that of others to whom he listened most delightful, especially was that by Bros. T. W. Lewis and W. B. Murrah. Reports of the Bishop's discourse are most flattering. I had taken leave of the Conference to preach at Kosciusko. In summing the whole thing into one sentence, I can say that it was one of the best District Conferences I ever attended. The delegates to Annual Conference are J. R. Bingham, J. B. Streator, M. T. Boswell, W. P. Ratliff (L. P.); alternates—O. J. Moore, F. M. Glass. The next Conference is to be held at Greenwood.

The eye of the traveler is everywhere delighted with the prospects of the finest crops. The recent rains have assured the corn, and the condition of the cotton is such as to inspire better hopes for the farmers. Only extreme wet or dry weather will be likely to hindor fullest realization. The people are better settled in their minds, and are looking to the improvement of their lands and homes. While there are still many who look westward, the great bulk of the population are settled in the expectation of remaining at home.

I go hence to Macon via Starkville to continue, perhaps, to Meridian. Providence for that, and the contents of my next.

KOSCIUSKO, Miss., July 4, 1887.

The Presbyterian Church of the United States raised $780,000 last year for foreign missions. Of this splendid sum the Woman's Board contributed over $248,000. Truly this is magnificent giving.

Religious Meeting at Bay St. Louis.

(TO YOU THAT ARE AT ROME ALSO.)

By previous arrangement some eltizens of Bay St. Louis, Miss., met at the Methodist Church, on July 2, 1886, and after due deliberation adopted the following address to their Christian brethren; Dr. R. J. Turner in the chair, and Rev. B. Jones acting as secretary:

ADDRESS.

This beautiful village is intensely priest-ridden. We were protracting a revival meeting, and among the converts were several Catholics and semi-Catholics. This excited papal opposition. We were unlawfully invading Romish dominions. It was highly sinful to attend such meetings. This led to inquiries as to matters of fact, and these were widely contradictory. It was apparent these complaints could not be met through the pulpit. Some other expedient must be resorted to.

A consultation resulted in the publication of our little pamphlet, "The Priest and the Preacher." And now we call your attention to this expedient. We must go to Rome, and we see no way that is open and promising but this. The pulpit can not be made effectual; books are useful for other purposes, but are useless here; missions are away yonder, not here. Romish superstitions hinder the spread of the gospel more than any other one thing, whisky excepted. And what are we doing for their extirpation? Next to nothing! Many of the Catholics in this country are generally intelligent, though most wofully uninformed in religious matters. We can and we must utilize this intelligence.

The Romish errors that are leading and formidable are few in number, easily pointed out and demonstrated, needing no argument, and may be clustered in a half hour's or an hour's reading. But to publish this, no matter how well prepared, in the ordinary way, and put the tract on the market, will amount to but little. The reading and the approval of it by Protestants is not the objective point. They knew it all before. And Catholics are not going to buy it at any price. The most we can hope for them to do is to pick it up and read it when thrust upon them. This they will do in thousands of instances. And thousands of exclamations will force themselves on reasonable religiously inclined men and women—"Are these things so?" "How can these things be?"

Inquiry will excite inquiry. The priest will be obliged to read in order to refute the Protestant teachings. We believe that in this way this spell of papal superstition can be broken and the light of the gospel let in. Let us try it.

We earnestly appeal to Christians of all denominations for distribution for the million of this tract, or something better of the same sort, if anything better shall be produced. They can be had in any quantities from the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn., at $4 per hundred, or less in large quantity. "The Priest and Preacher" will be improved somewhat in future editions.

And the meeting passed a few other resolutions, which may be briefly noted:

1. Requesting editors to copy this address.

2. Requesting pastors to cause their congregations to be well supplied with "Priest and Preacher," and for distribution.

3. Requesting the Southern Methodist Publishing House, at Nashville, to adopt such special measures for a wide distribution of this tract as may be deemed expedient.

The attention of the New Orleans City Mission is respectfully asked to this subject. R. ABBEY.

It is said of Iowa that in the last year she has legislated 3,500 saloons out of existence. Her motto is: "A school-house on every hill and no saloon in the valley."

The Southern Cultivator.

From this date we will receive subscriptions for the ADVOCATE and Southern Cultivator for $2 75, postage prepaid. Subscribers wishing Dickson's System of Farming, in connection with the above arrangement, will send twenty-five cents extra, or $3 for the three publications, postage prepaid. Unless cash accompanies all orders, no attention will be paid to same. No reduction allowed for post-office orders or registered letters.

A Cincinnati paper says the law to close the saloons at midnight in Cincinnati has done more to suppress rowdyism and outrages than any half-dozen others on the statute books combined.

Personals.

Rev. Wesley Guard has been elected representative of the Irish Conference to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which meets in New York, next May.

Bishop Hargrove is on the Pacific Coast, looking the interests of our church in that region.

Bishop McTyeire writes: "I rejoice at the honor put on you when I saw that your son had been licensed to preach; Bro. Foster's son too; two of Bishop Parker's and three of Bishop Keener's. I wonder and praise and exclaim, 'New Orleans Methodism is a live branch!'"

In addition to those mentioned above by Bishop McTyeire as the contribution of New Orleans Methodism to the itinerant ranks, we name the following: Linus Parker, Page, Fisher T. Rawson, C. F. Evans, J. T. Sawyer, A. E. Clay, T. W. Jones, S. H. Worlein, N. D. Harmon, and there are doubtless others. Verily, "New Orleans Methodism is a live branch."

Be sure to read and ponder and pray over a little article in this paper, taken from the Texas Christian Advocate, entitled, "A Very Serious Matter."

Our correspondent, Dr. J. B. Cottrell, has been in North Louisiana, delighting our people with his sermons and lectures. He came as near to us as Jackson, Miss., and then switched off northward.

Can not the reader send a dollar in furtherance of Bro. Lambuth's call for help? Read the editorial in this paper. The brethren are responding, and won't you respond also?

Sam Jones spoke in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association in Baltimore, July 2, on "Character and Characters."

Judge Duffy, of Baltimore, has made a vigorous application of the law to certain ballot-box stuffers to their utter amazement. Such men ought always to get the full penalty in such cases, for there can hardly be a greater crime against the State.

Rev. T. L. Mellen writes that forty-six persons have professed conversion in the meeting at Beauregard, among whom is a "choice young woman who is called of God to the foreign work." "And the work goes on." Victories are being won all over the land. Push the battle, brethren.

Don't you think it will be an encouragement to your fellow-soldiers to know how many captives you have taken for the Lord? Then, why don't you send word to this office, that the news may go out to all the hosts. Didn't you see the editor's note asking for reports of conversions and accessions, from January 1 to July 1?

Temperance.

And now comes a man in the Chicago Herald, as quoted in the Times-Democrat, a whisky expert by profession, in the employ of a Chicago wholesale liquor house, and says: "Drinking the liquor blunts the fine sense of taste a whisky expert must possess; and absolute temperance is the first essential." He says that while he tastes whisky dozens of times a day, he has not drunk a gill in two years. The fact here brought out that the success of the liquor business depends upon the temperate habits of those engaged in it is argument enough in favor of prohibition. Throw in the fact stated by this man that drinking destroys the fine sense of taste, and you need no stronger argument for total abstinence.

The Kentucky whisky pool has actually embarked in the prohibition business. It has prohibited the manufacture of any more whisky until October, 1888. There is an over-supply on hand, and this cessation is to enable the drinkers to "catch up" with the manufacturers. But as the temperance cause is spreading and the temperance people growing in numbers by thousands every month, there is a strong probability that this "shut down" is for good; yea, for all time.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mississippi have already begun to raise funds for the purpose of erecting a beautiful monument to R. D. Gambrell as near as practicable to the place where he was murdered.

One of the conditions of entrance to Fisk University, and also to Central College, Nashville, Tenn., is total abstinence from tobacco and all intoxicating liquors.

An employer in a Rhode Island factory town recently paid his employees $700 on Saturday in new bills secretly marked. On the following Monday $400 worth of these marked bills were placed in bank by the saloon keepers of the place.

The per capita consumption of spirits in this country has fallen one-half since 1840—that is, from two and a half gallons to one and a quarter gallons, but that of beer has increased from less than two gallons to eleven gallons per individual.

The Mission Spirit.

It has been publicly stated that there are in the institutions of learning in this country 1,500 young men who are anxious to go as missionaries to foreign lands.

It is said that there are 27,000 native converts employed and paid as evangelists to their own countrymen in the foreign missionary field, and 2,500 are ordained pastors of native congregations. This does not include the vast number who work on the principle of voluntaryism, and thousands of teachers and professors in secular teaching in schools and colleges.

The Turkish government officials have now put the seal of the Sultan on thirty-two editions of the Arabic Scriptures and parts of Scriptures, thus giving the sanction of the Imperial Caliph of Islam for the free circulation of the Word of God.

In Greece the government permits the free distribution of the Scriptures and protects the colporteurs. The gospels in the original (old) Greek are used as a reading book in the higher classes of the seminary school. Gospel preaching is as yet on a limited scale, owing to the lack of qualified preachers.

The late Mr. W. D. Alexander has left a sum of £70,000 to be distributed amongst the following London charities in the undermentioned proportions, namely: London City Mission, £10,000; Disabled Fund of the London City Mission, £20,000; British and Foreign Bible Society, £10,000; Religious Tract Society, £10,000; and London Missionary Society Pension Fund, £20,000.

The Evangelical Alliance for Japan has lately furnished the statistics of missions and mission work in Japan for the year 1885. The report states that twenty-two societies in all are working for Japan. The working forces of all these organizations is 184 missionaries, 60 native ministers, 113 unordained preachers and helpers, 8 colporteurs and 11 Bible women. There are 9 theological schools, with 102 students. There are 45 stations where missionaries reside, 165 out-stations and 168 organized churches, 57 of the latter being self-supporting. These churches have a total membership of 11,678, and received and baptized 3,115 adult converts during 1885. There are twelve boarding schools for boys, with 1,131 pupils, and 22 for girls, with 1,308 pupils, and 40 day-schools, with 1,882 scholars. There are 150 Sabbath-schools, with 7,019 scholars. The missionaries have 2 hospitals and 8 dispensaries, in which 16,309 patients have been treated during the year. The contributions by native Christians during the year have reached the handsome sum of $20,522 57.

The Japanese Gazette says: "We regret to say that Buddhism, in our opinion, can not long hold its ground, and that Christianity must finally prevail throughout all Japan. Japanese Buddhism and Western sciences can not stand together. They are inconsistent the one with the other."

Madagascar is almost a miracle of missionary triumph. The native Christians of that island have given more than £800,000 for the spread of the gospel within the past ten years.

In ten years more than 30,000 people embraced Christianity in the Samoan Islands. It is thought there are not more than twenty houses in the whole group where there is not a Bible and family worship.

A half century ago in Turkey it was considered a shame for a woman to read. To-day two schools for girls in Constantinople have been established by the Sultan himself.

In India there are 173 zenanas opened to women with 255 pupils, besides twenty-five schools with 370 scholars.

The Christian population of Madras, India, in ten years, 1871-1881, was found to have increased 105,662, and still the work continues to be encouraging.

IMMENSE BARGAINS.—The great piano dealer, Philip Werlein, 135 Canal St., is now offering some of the greatest bargains in pianos and organs. This popular merchant means business, and he has put prices of pianos and organs down so low as to put them within the reach of all. You will be astonished to see what money can be saved by dealing at this popular house. Indeed, it is a source of pleasure to have dealings with such a house as that of Philip Werlein. Now, that the prices have been reduced, and terms offered are so convenient, every one will avail himself of the opportunity. Write to Mr. Werlein for catalogues and prices.

"I see the scoundrel in your face," exclaimed the Judge to the prisoner. "I reckon, Judge," was the response; "that she's a personal reflection, ain't it?"

In going east, ask for tickets over the Kennesaw Route, which, for beautiful scenery, is unsurpassed.

A good memory should always be cultivated when ordering stationery to remember to include some of Esterbrook's Steel Pens.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is agreeable to use. It is not a liquid or a snuff. 50c.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

Dyspepsia Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Rheumatism Is undoubtedly a blood disease caused by an excess of the lactic acid in the blood. Where there is perfect filtration of the blood there can be no rheumatism. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA will remove the poison, supply the acids and relieve the pains.

Scrofula Is caused directly by impurities in the blood, usually effecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, by purifying the blood, forces the impurities from the system.

Kidneys Through the Kidneys flow the waste fluid containing poisonous matter. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing pain in the small of the back and loins, flushes of heat, chills. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic, causing the kidneys to resume their natural functions.

The Liver By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood receivent.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms the most frequently the result of these hidden suppers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly to sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid to the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a sole purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient to all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. H. HANDY, M. D.

JULY.

BY FRANK DEMPSTER SHERMAN.

JULY—for you the songs are sung
By birds the leafy trees among;
With merry carollings they wake
The meadows at the morning's break,
And through the day the lisping breeze
Is woven with their tree-top glees.
For you the prattling, pebbly brooks
Are full of tales like story-books,
For you a fragrant incense burns
Within the garden's blossom-urns
Which tempt the bees to hasten home
With honey for their honey-comb.
The river, like a looking-glass,
Reflects the breezy clouds that pass,
Until it makes us almost doubt
If earth and sky ar'nt changed about.
July—for you, in silence deep
The world seems fallen fast asleep.
Save on one glorious holiday,
When all our books we put away
And every little maid and man
Is proud to be American!

MR. EDITOR: Almost one year has passed since I last wrote to your most excellent paper, and this pleasant Sabbath evening, as I have just returned from Sunday-school, I am going to write again. I have been attending two Sunday-schools regularly—one in the morning and one in the evening—until a few Sundays ago. The weather is getting to be so oppressive, and the one in the evening is so far, that we were compelled to stop. Papa and brother have gone to Brookhaven to-day to hear Prof. J. J. Wheat preach the commencement sermon. Our school has closed. I was real glad, for I have been in school since last September, and I think I need rest. My sister Lillian was teacher. John was the beloved disciple. "Fox" is found in Luke xiii, 32. I will ask, Where in the Bible is the word "eternity" found?

Your little friend,

MABEL LEE BEESLEY.

WESSON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: We have a nice Sunday-school. Miss Lizzie Purviance is my teacher; she plays on the organ for us. Our people like Bro. Robertson and his wife very much. He repeats a verse in Sunday-school just like we children. One day, one of the little boys (about four years old) was learning his Sunday-school lesson. He can not read, but his mamma was asking the questions, and then would tell him the answer. She said, "Clyde, why did God tell Adam and Eve not to eat of the tree of knowledge?" He said, "Cause the apples was green." What prophet saw the resurrection of dry bones, and what did it mean? What wicked king saw a hand writing on the wall while he and a thousand of his lords were having a great feast? What king of Israel had both eyes put out and carried to Babylon?

CORA BENNETT.

CAMDEN, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I see a little letter from my little cousin, Dan C. Hamblin, in the last issue of your valuable paper; and I will answer his two questions: Zaccheus climbed the sycamore tree to see Jesus. "Grandmother" is found in II Timothy i, 5. My little sister Nellie is at Camden, Miss., and I know she will be glad to read my letter. We have two good Sunday-schools, and papa and I attend them both. Bro. D. C. Langford is our preacher, and his sweet wife teaches our class in Sunday-school. I will ask a question: Is there any book in the Bible that does not mention God by any name? If so, what book is it?

Your little friend,

EMMA HAMBLEN.

VOSSBURG, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years old. I go to Sunday-school whenever I can. We live four miles from the church. We have preaching in our neighborhood three Sundays in the month—two Baptist, one Methodist. Bro. Guice is our pastor this year. We all love him. I will try and answer some questions: It was Zaccheus that climbed the sycamore tree to see Jesus. Mary Magdalene was the first one that saw Jesus after he arose from the dead. The word "Isaac" means laughter. I will close by asking: What man and his wife fell dead for telling a falsehood? And where in the Bible is the word "tent-makers?" I remain as ever,

Your little friend,

LOU MOORE.

BRANDYWINE, Mississippi.

Cheap Information. The United States Hotel Company of Boston, publish the most elegant set of maps of the city proper and harbor, together with the most complete history of the city and suburbs (beautifully illustrated) ever sent out as an advertisement. Ten cents in stamps pays the postage. Order it.

MR. EDITOR: It has been some time since I wrote to the ADVOCATE. My papa takes your good paper. I like to read it; the little cousins' letters especially. I never see any letters from this part of the country. I attended Quarterly Conference. Dr. T. S. West preached, and we all enjoyed it very much. I will start to school to-morrow. Now, I will answer some questions: "Chickens" is found, Matthew xxiii, 37. "Grandmother" is found in II Timothy 1, 5. "Cistern" is found in II Kings xviii, 31. Now, I will ask a question: Where in the Bible is the word "churning" found?

Your little friend.

To dream of a ponderous whale,
Erect on the tip of his tail,
Is the sign of a storm
(If the weather is warm),
Unless it should happen to fail.

Dreams don't amount to much, anyhow. Some signs, however, are infallible. If you are constipated, with no appetite, tortured with sick headache and bilious symptoms, these signs indicate that you need Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. They will cure you. All druggists.

MR. EDITOR: We have a very nice Sunday-school now. Mr. A. L. King is our superintendent. I will answer some of the little folks' questions: "Eternity" is found in Isaiah lvii, 15. "Isaac" means laughter. Joshua led Israel after the death of Moses. "Screech-owl" is found in Isaiah xxxiv, 14. Now, I will ask some questions: Where and how many times is the word "rose" mentioned in the Bible? Where in the Bible is the word "cucumber" found? I will close, wishing the ADVOCATE and its editor great success. I remain, Your little friend,

A Good Dog Story.

The other day our Newfoundland dog was playing on the porch with our little girl, four years old, when she opened the gate and went out. The dog did not follow her. Some time afterward the child's mother came out and discovered her absence, and said to the dog:

"Where is Nellie?" The dog looked as if he knew and wagged his tail furiously. "Go this instant," said the mother, "and find Nellie and bring her home."

Out over the gate flew the dog and started down the street to a neighbor's house not far off. Nellie was playing there, inside the house, and saw the dog come and scratch at a veranda window.

"I know what he wants," said the little girl. "He wants me to go home, but I'm not going to do it."

The dog was not admitted, but he lingered near, like Mary's little lamb, and when two ladies called presently he brushed in past them through the door. Then, rushing up to Nellie, he seized her dress with his teeth and began dragging her to the door. An attempt was made to drive him off, but he growled and held his place. The little girl, beginning to be frightened, gave up all resistance and trotted home by his side, and he delivered her with an air of triumph into her mother's hands. What "instinct" would lead a dog to do that?

To enrich and quicken the circulation of the blood, and to reform irregularities of the system, use Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier.

Wilber and the Cow.

One day little Wilber Kern came in from play very pale. This was not often the case. Almost always he would come in very red and warm. His dear mother at once saw that he had done something which troubled him. He always came and told her if he did anything that he thought was wrong. So she waited and said nothing.

There Wilber sat on a stool close to his mother. She knit away, and Wilbur was still very pale and silent. After a while he could not keep the secret to himself any longer. His mother knew all the time that he could not.

"Mother," said he, "some other boys and I drove a cow into the river; will she get drowned?" The secret was out. When he learned that he had really done no harm he was again happy. His mother was glad that he never did anything without coming to her. Boys and girls should all make a friend of their mother.—Our Little Ones.

For rheumatic and neuralgic pains, rub in Dr. J. H. McLean's Volcanic Oil Liniment, you will not suffer long, but will be gratified with a speedy and effective cure.

Household.

Economics.

Economics is defined by Webster as management without loss or waste; prudence, and a disposition to save. There is a depth of meaning in this four-syllabled word which neither Webster, nor any other man, I was tempted to say, has ever fathomed, for it requires that sort of tact more natural to woman, to excel in this virtue. It is a trait well admired by sensible people, many of whom have not the courage to practice it themselves, lest the virtue, economy, be mistaken for frugality, or even perhaps for the vice of parsimony. It is right, it is true and Christ-like to be careful that the fragments are saved; and even people who have an abundance should see that nothing of value is thrown to waste.

Let economy be united with tact, and the woman who possesses these qualities will be a worker of wonders, of household miracles. In her, Solomon's description of the virtuous woman will be fulfilled, and "the heart of her husband may safely trust in her, for she will do him good and not evil all the days of her life." We will suppose this husband is earning but a small income, for these thoughts are intended not so much for those who practice economy as a virtue as for those with whom it is a necessity. The small amount of money placed at the wife's disposal must be prudently spent; every cent must do its best. Still we notice that she and her children appear to be as well dressed as many others who spend money more freely. It is not so much poverty that makes the forlorn, uncouth looking creatures that we meet upon the streets the wretches that they appear to be, as it is wickedness, idleness, and the inability to use to the best advantage what little they possess.

But how does she manage to appear so well? In just this way. She buys none but good materials, not the richest, but those strong in color and texture; woolen fabrics that will wear like iron, and as long as there is a piece remaining it can be utilized for a neat little dress, or if of a bright color, for the trimming of a dress or for a hood. In cotton goods she buys those that will wash and keep a bright appearance until the cloth is worn out. Every garment is used with care, and everything unneeded at present is laid away with prophetic carefulness, sure to be just the thing wanted, and as good as cash, at some future time.

And her bonnets! that is what puzzles us, for when she was a girl, and scarce knew a want, she thought herself dependent upon the milliner for even the arrangement of a ribbon; but effort and determination with the aid of an inborn taste have brought it all about. She feels a decided antipathy for things shoddy or cheap-looking, and buys good ribbons and soft straws. With a little that is new each season, and the carefully preserved old in new combinations, and a stylish frame as a foundation, she is equipped. There is sometimes a little resewing of straw to alter a shape, or the fitting of a soft straw over a new frame, and she even finds that by being obliged to use materials already on hand, the result often shows more originality and taste than if she had been allowed to select materials from those worn by everybody else.

She must also be economical in her housekeeping, know how to cook just enough, to prepare the occasionally necessary warmed up dish so that it shall be a treat, and to make every day feasts of plain wholesome materials.

Perhaps the thing that an ambitious woman learns last to save is her own strength, but it is a lesson necessary to her success.

Altogether, her economy is so cheerful, so hearty, and so well balanced, that it has quite the appearance of thrift and plenty, and is counted to her as a virtue and a credit.—Christian at Work.

Shallenberger's Pills are a true antidote for Malaria. Intermittent fever, bilious remittent fever, dumb ague, periodic headache, as well as regular chills, are all the results of Malaria in the system. The Pills do not purge or sicken the stomach, but improve the appetite and digestion. They cure immediately by destroying the malarious poison in the system, and can be taken under any circumstances with perfect safety.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Luxuriant Hair,

Can only be preserved by keeping the scalp clean, cool, and free from dandruff, and the body in a healthful condition. The great popularity of Ayer's Hair Vigor is due to the fact that it cleanses the scalp, promotes the growth of the hair, prevents it from falling out, and gives it that soft and silky gloss so essential to perfect beauty.

Frederick Hardy, of Roxbury, Mass., a gentleman fifty years of age, was fast losing his hair, and what remained was growing gray. After trying various dressings with no effect, he commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "It stopped the falling out," he writes; "and, to my great surprise, covered my white hair (without staining the scalp) to the same shade of brown it had when I was 25 years of age."

Ten Years Younger.

Mrs. Mary Montgomery, of Boston, writes: "For years, I was compelled to wear a dress cap to conceal a bald spot on the crown of my head; but now I gladly lay the cap aside, for your Hair Vigor is bringing out a new growth. I could hardly trust my senses when I first found my hair growing; but there it is, and I am delighted. I look ten years younger."

A similar result attended the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor by Mrs. O. O. Prescott, of Charlestown, Mass., Miss Bessie H. Bedloe, of Burlington, Vt., Mrs. J. J. Burton, of Bangor, Me., and numerous others.

The loss of hair may be owing to impurity of the blood or derangement of the stomach and liver, in which case, a course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla or of Ayer's Pills, in connection with the Vigor, may be necessary to give health and tone to all the functions of the body. At the same time, it cannot be too strongly urged that none of these remedies can do much good without a persevering trial and strict attention to cleanly and temperate habits.

COSTLEY—SISTER KATIE C. COSTLEY, daughter of Charles Cogan, of Jefferson county, Miss., was born April 15, 1854, not far from Fayete. Her mother died early in life. Her father was not religious, and she had little opportunity from parental training. Under the helpful influence of Rev. W. B. Lewis, pastor of Fayete circuit, she united with our church, "Bellefrove," during 1876. About two years later she was happily married to Mr. John Costley, of Ebenezer neighborhood. Their marriage was blessed with four children, who survive. A more faithful wife and mother has probably never lived. The little ones were early taught the way to Jesus' feet. The careworn husband found in her a safe counselor and friend indeed. In sickness and in health she was an helpmeet for him. The desolation that death has wrought in a home once cheered by her sunny smile is indescribable. Her religion seemed to be one of steady growth. A fuller tide of joy and a deeper consecration of heart and life came to her in August, 1883. At that time she came daily for miles on horseback, with little children, to attend a protracted meeting under a brush arbor at Dennisville, where "Mizpah" Church now stands. Her help in singing and her religious joy were potent influences in bringing gladness to all our hearts. Ever after she was deeply consecrated.

Her confiding love and cordial hospitality to pastors has brought encouragement many times to weary hearts. One who knew her most intimately says: "She had the noblest principles of any human being I ever knew. She would stand up for truth and righteousness anywhere and at all times." My own close observation of her character during four years bears up fully this high encomium. She was always a marvel to me—a miracle of grace. She had the Macedonian grace richly developed. Through a tempest of suffering she passed the dark valley March 15, 1887, to where "the noontide of glory eternally reigns." She rests from her labor, and her works do follow her. A LOVING FRIEND.

ADAMS—Died in East Baton Rouge parish, May 30, 1887, MRS. CLARA L. ADAMS, at the advanced age of eighty-three years. Sister Adams was one of the oldest, if not the oldest member of the Baton Rouge Church. Her maiden name was Stuart. She was born in Adams county, Miss., January 6, 1804; was married, March 17, 1822, to Joshua Shroop, Esq., a prominent lawyer; was again married, March 26, 1827, to James Bailey, and was again married to Amos Adams, September 9, 1830. In the year 1837 she moved to the parish of East Baton Rouge, and joined the Baton Rouge Church in the year 1838, since which time she was a consistent member; and by those who knew Sister Adams in time of health and activity she is remembered as a woman of great usefulness, inspired with the true Methodist zeal.

As the pastor of Sister Adams, it was my privilege to visit her a few days before her death, at which time I administered to her the communion. It was indeed a most impressive occasion. Sister Adams and her three daughters, together with Sister E. E. H. Nelson, commemorated the Last Supper of our Lord. God seemed to impart to Sister Adams special strength for the service, as her participancy in that sacrament was indeed by faith, rejoicing in the hope of salvation through Christ. I can never forget the peaceful, restful expression of countenance as she bid me good-bye. It was as though she had performed the last act of duty, and was but waiting the summons that would release her spirit from the burdens and sorrows of the flesh. This was about her last lucid moment. A few hours after, she seemed to lose consciousness, for her recognition of friends and family was fitful, until she fell asleep in Christ and entered into that rest which "remaineth for the people of God." T. K. F.

JOHNSON—THOMAS JEFFERSON JOHNSON was born December 10, 1816, and died May 18, 1887. His earthly career was spent mainly in Carroll county—at Carrollton, Miss. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1842. Thirty-five years he served the church as class leader or steward or as Sunday-school superintendent. He endeavored to make the world better as part of it. The precious companion of his life preceded him two years—whose death gave him deep grief—after which time he gradually went down to death's door, and entered, we think, with sweet peace and great joy to be ever with the Lord. He was helpless for several months before his death, but gently and attentively nursed in the home of a son. May the children left so live and labor in the fertile field of the Master as to "inherit the earth" and eternally "see God!" J. M. WYATT.

STANDIFER—JAMES PRICE, infant son of the Rev. R. M. and Eddie Standifer, "fell on sleep" at the parsonage, in Greenville, Miss., on the eighteenth instant, aged eleven months and twenty-four days. Words of consolation just now avail nothing; but after a time the loving parents will realize the fact that the link broken here has been added to the golden chain of providence that draws them heavenward. The lily has only been borrowed for a time; it will be restored to them again in heaven.

CALLENDER—MRS. SARAH CALLENDER died at her home, in Jefferson county, Miss., near Union Church, December 24, 1886. She was born in Claiborne county, Miss., August 2, 1808, and was the daughter of Rev. James and Rebecca Griffin. She was married to James S. Callender, December 27, 1837, and in 1845 moved to Jefferson county, Miss., and remained there until the day of her death. As a neighbor, she was kind, obliging, and charitable. She sought early in life the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and spent her childhood and womanhood and old age in the service of the Master; and that God whom she loved and served did not forsake her in the trying hour, but stooped down and whispered, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love," and that love was found to be stronger than death.

She was not alarmed at the approach of the grim monster. She spoke of death as if away from home, and going to return. She had long before this time realized that for her to live was Christ, but to die would be gain. She could say in her last hours: "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." Towards the close of the year 1886 she was seized with her last illness. Her agonies were severe; but from within she derived a strength and a patience which conquered all mere physical pain. No complaint, no murmur escaped from her lips; she confronted the last change with that peacefulness which springs from the assurance of a well-founded hope. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, for they shall rest from their labors." D. F. GUICE.

A VERY SERIOUS MATTER.—We refer to the week of prayer and self-denial for the cause of missions. It was a suggestion of one of our chief pastors, and has now become the formal action of the Board. It begins August 8 and ends August 14. The contributions of the time are to be free-will offerings and are to represent real self-denials. The purpose to which they are to be applied is the relief of the Board from the pressure of obligations assumed in order to keep pace with the growth of the work in foreign fields. The more we think of it the more serious it grows. The truth is, we are about to submit our love for Christ to a very solemn test. Amid the most solemn surroundings and before the eyes of the world we are about to bear witness. Let us not persuade ourselves that this thing is going to be done in a corner. The light that beats upon a throne is darkness compared to the light that in this age beats upon the church of God. By our own act we are now to stand for one week in the focus of this blaze. Can we abide the test? This testimony that we are about to give before the eyes of friend and foe, what sort of testimony is it going to be? We have been telling the world that nothing is too costly for Christ. Are we about to prove to them that we mean what we say? From August 8 to August 14 the Lord Christ will stand over against the treasury on one side, and the sneering, doubting world on the other. Which of the two shall triumph? Verily, we need to think often and seriously of duty before us. Upon every pastor rests the responsibility of warning his people lest the time come upon them suddenly and find them unprepared. May the Lord be with us so that the time confound us not, nor put us to confusion of face. —Texas Christian Advocate.

Women needing renewed strength or who suffer from nervous weakness, will find nothing to help them like Moxie Nerve Food. It is certainly a great invigorator, and will restore a shattered nervous system to a healthful and natural condition in a few days. The physicians say it is the best nerve food yet discovered.

Henry IV. once asked the Duke of Alva if he saw the eclipse. "No, sire," said he; "I have so much to do on earth, I have no time to look up to heaven." That is the sentiment of this world. It was not Paul's sentiment.

The Anti-Saloon Movement.

The anti-saloon movement is a determined, organized attempt to kill the saloon. It has this as its object. It is not an attempt to tinker or improve the tariff or save a party. It is higher than all these. These are but secondary matters, and will take care of themselves. The death of the saloon is its distinct and single purpose. It refuses to be switched aside. The saloon is the thing it hates, and the thing it has risen to exterminate. Parties may bluster, demagogues may howl, and liquor dealers may shoot; but it has drawn its sword, and will not sheathe it till the saloon dies. Sportsmen aim at what they desire to shoot. So the anti-saloon movement. The saloon is the object that fills its eye, and against which it hurls its thunderbolts. The party or politician who thinks to turn it aside to any secondary object, mistakes what is in the air. It is a movement. It is not something that has been set on foot by any man or set of men, by any party or wing of a party, and is not, therefore, under any individual or party control. It is itself the controlling force, and the only thing for men and parties now to do is to fall into line and accept its control or die. It waited and plead long for recognition. It waits and pleads no longer. It has gotten the track now and a mighty momentum, and woe betide the men or parties that try to catch it and turn it aside for personal ends. Such men and such parties are doomed to be buried. It is an avalanche that you may possibly ride with safety; but woe betide you if you do not give it the right of way. Already are such men and parties digging their political graves. There are names that stood high some months ago that, by resisting this tide, or seeking to divert it to party or personal ends, are fast writing their epitaphs. A cyclone is on their track. Strange that sensible men will play with a whirlwind. The movement is God's movement, and the fate of Uzzah should warn political ark-steadiers to beware how they trifle with sacred things. When God says, "Let my people go," then let men and parties fall into line, or share the fate of that party which had so long fooled the children of Israel, and hoped to do so longer.—Rev. C. C. Besse, in Zion's Herald.

Blood Will Tell.

There is no question about it—blood will tell—especially if it be an impure blood. Blotches, eruptions, pimples and boils, are all symptoms of an impure blood, due to the improper action of the liver. When this important organ fails to properly perform its function of purifying and cleansing the blood, impurities are carried to all parts of the system, and the symptoms above referred to are merely evidences of the struggle of Nature to throw off the poisonous germs. Unless her warning be heeded in time, serious results are certain to follow, culminating in liver or kidney disorders, or even in consumption. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will prevent and cure these diseases, by restoring the liver to a healthy condition.

Take them altogether, what book is there so instructive and so comforting, so suitable as a daily companion, and withal so entertaining, as the books of the Old Testament? There are those who underrate the value of this book, and speak of it as if it were a thing of the past. It is as much a thing of the present this very day as it was thousands of years ago, when it was first put to record. If we speak of the venerable and blessed book in exalted terms, we find ourselves in good company. That wonderful 119th Psalm was written wholly in its praise; and when our Lord Jesus Christ said, "Search the Scriptures," not one line of the New Testament had been written.—Christian Index.

You find yourself refreshed by the presence of cheerful people; why not make earnest effort to confer that pleasure on others? You will find half the battle gained, if you never allow yourself to say anything gloomy.—Lydia Maria Child.

When the stomach lacks vigor and regularity there will be flatulence, heartburn, nausea, sick-headache, nervousness, use Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier, to give tone and regularity to the stomach.

The noblest characters are those who have steered the life-vessel through stormiest seas. A bed of down never nurtured a great soldier yet.—Macduff.

THOSE terrible pains in the back, with the desire to urinate and can not, is caused by gravel, may be effectually cured by Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

The Queen laid the foundation-stone of the Imperial Institute on the Fourth of July in the presence of twenty thousand people.

The Sultan refused to ratify the Anglo-Turkish Convention in reference to Egypt, and Sir Henry Drummond Wolffe has been recalled from Constantinople.

Two unpublished letters from Luther and Brenz, and five from Melanethon to the Suabian reformer, Lachmann, have been found in an old desk in a school at Heilbronn, Germany.

The Weuchow river, in China, has overflowed its banks, submerging miles of territory. Thousands of persons are believed to have been drowned. The sufferings of survivors are described as terrible. Chuchow City is submerged, and the inhabitants have taken to boats.

Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha was elected Prince of Bulgaria by the Sobranje, on July 7. The announcement was received with great enthusiasm. If the Powers refuse to recognize his election, the Sobranje intends to abrogate Article 30 of the Berlin treaty and proclaim the independence of the country.

Half of the new quays at Zug, Switzerland, fell into the lake July 6. About 100 persons lost their lives. Property to the value of $250,000 was destroyed. A similar disaster occurred at Zug, in 1435, when 160 lives were lost.

The freedom of the city of Edinburgh was conferred upon Mr. Andrew Carnegie, in recognition of his gift to the city of $250,000 with which to provide a public library.

The latest news from Stanley, the African explorer, who is on a journey from Leopoldville to Lonkadela, state that he encountered and had overcome serious obstacles. One of the greatest difficulties was the replenishment of the commissary department. The threatened scarcity of provision greatly excited a number of his men, and it became necessary to punish the malcontents with much severity to reduce them to subjection and save the expedition, while Stanley himself was ill from the excessive heat.

Prince Ferdinand has signified his willingness to accept the Bulgarian throne, provided the Powers are willing.

Hon. Joseph Pulitzer, of the New York World, formally presented the American memorial to Mr. Gladstone, on July 9. The ex-Premier acknowledged the gift in a feeling speech.

The Hawaiians have revolted against the rule of their king, and he has been compelled to dismiss his Cabinet; accede to the demand of the people for a new constitution, and abide by the will of the people; to appoint the people's candidate premier. He is permitted to occupy the throne, though divested of all present power.

England has granted the Porte five days longer in which to consider his ratification of the Egyptian Convention. Time expires July 16.

Cholera is increasing in Sicily. There have already been 400 cases in Catania, of which 140 proved fatal.

DOMESTIC.

Rev. Dr. McGlynn has been chosen delegate from the First Assembly District of United Labor Party to the National Convention at Syracuse, N. Y., on August 16.

Rev. Dr. McGlynn has been formally excommunicated from the Catholic Church.

Judge Noonan, of the Court of Criminal Correction, St. Louis, has declared the Sunday law to be inoperative. This leaves the saloon question in St. Louis where it was before the repeal of the law of 1857, and on Sunday the saloons were allowed to run with open doors as before.

Slight earthquake shocks were felt at different parts of lower South Carolina during the past week.

At the great Fort Worth mass meeting the Texas prohibitionists exhibited a coffee-pot that contained 400 gallons of steaming coffee, and a tea-pot that held 300 gallons of ice-tea. The thirsty men drank the contents of these big pots, and called for more. Fifteen thousand people were present.

The sloop yacht "Mystery," with a pleasure party on board, capsized off Long Island, on Monday, and twenty-three lives were lost.

The steamer "Merrimac" went ashore on Monday night, while the moon and stars were shining bright. The passengers claim that they were robbed by the drunken crew. No lives lost.

Logan E. Bleckley, who was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Chief Justice James Jackson, several months ago, was unanimously elected Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia by the Legislature, on Monday, July 11.

"Christ Before Pilate."

Munkacsy's great picture of "Christ Before Pilate"—a perfect copy on steel of the original picture, which has just been sold for one hundred thousand dollars. By subscription only; to ministers and agents at reduced price.

EDUCATION.—We call attention to the advertisement in our columns of one of the best schools for young ladies in the Union. We refer to Wesleyan Female Institute, Staunton, Va. This college has a corps of twenty-two accomplished teachers and officers, especially trained for their respective positions. The number educated in this time-honored school reaches into the thousands. Its graduates are sought for as teachers far and wide. Its superior and varied facilities for a useful and ornamental education, and the Christian care and attention bestowed, make it just such a College home as every parent desires for his daughter. The late Bishop Doggett says: "Its course of study is ample, its faculty accomplished, its instruction both solid and elegant, its personal accommodations healthful, comfortable and tasteful, its discipline eminently judicious, its atmosphere salubrious, and it possesses all the facilities of a thorough education." Rev. Dr. Harris, the president, has been called a national educator, and the enviable reputation has been fairly earned, for there is not a State in the South that has failed to pay its tribute by sending its daughters to him, and but few in the North. With the superior advantages offered, and the low price, it is not strange that this Institute has attained the proud eminence of having over 160 boarding pupils from twenty different States.

HINTS AND LESSONS, AS TO SUCCESS AND FAILURE.

What a mistake it is to think that personal neatness is a matter of no consequence! It is true that some people of untidy appearance and careless habits have attained success in life; but this has been in spite of their carelessness and untidiness. Some have been so weak as to imitate these habits. Instead of finding the success for which they looked, they found that the imitation of the mistakes of the successful was powerless to bring success. Their lofty contempt of the opinions of people of good taste was met with corresponding contempt from the refined and sensible.

But while most persons have a desire for neatness, comparatively few know how to exercise it as an art, and it is only by the use of the proper appliances that a correct toilet can be made. Here is just where most men and women make almost fatal errors. They are not sufficiently careful. They use unknown brands of soap, containing ingredients which injure the skin without purifying it. They accept perfumes lacking in delicacy and richness, and indicative of boorish taste and bad breeding, when those only should be used which have been tested by time and continued by the best experience.

In the year 1806 a firm, whose name has since become known and popular not only throughout America, but in nearly every portion of the globe, began business in a modest way at No. 6 Dutch street, New York. For more than eighty years the house then founded has continued at the same location, although the premises have constantly been enlarged, until they are now mammoth in their proportions.

The object of this house has always been to manufacture the purest, most refined and tasteful toilet articles possible to science, or consistent with art, and the name of Colgate & Co., is today the synonym for all that is best, most fashionable and most worthy in toilet arts, as it has been for nearly a century. Their goods have stood the severest test known to the world—the test of time. Their Cashmere Bouquet, Lily of the Valley, Heliotrope, Wedding March and other perfumes have graced the finest boudoirs in the land, although foreign perfumes, with high sounding names and Queen's endorsements have strongly sought to replace them. The Colgate soaps have been equally popular, and imported soaps, with little beyond the fact that they are imported to recommend them, have seen the demand for Colgate's Violet, Lettuce, Eau de Cologne, Glycerine, Honey, Cashmere Bouquet, etc., increase each year. Time, and the experience of the people, have tested their quality and proven their worth.

As to price, a word is worthy of mention in this connection. It might be supposed that such excellent articles would be sold at quite high prices; beyond the reach of most people. Not so. The house which over eighty years ago began business in Dutch street has now grown to such large proportions, that it does its manufacturing on an immense scale. All the scientific and mechanical apparatus in use is adapted to the production of the largest amount of really excellent material at the very lowest price at which it can be produced without adulteration. The prices of Colgate & Co's goods are lower than those of any articles which are anywhere nearly as good. There are, it is true, soaps and perfumes which are sold at lower figures; but of such soaps and perfumes careful people will do well to beware. Those who wish to be on the safe side as to the luxury of exquisite perfume, or the privilege of healthy and perfectly cleaned skin, will do well to see that that their purchases for toilet and boudoir bear the well-known name of Colgate & Co.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

HUGH JAMIESON, JR.,
Publisher.

With the change of schedule of the Mississippi Valley Route, arrangements have been perfected to carry the local mails as heretofore. By the new arrangement connection is made with the Little J. road for all points between Jackson and Natchez, Miss., and at Memphis for all points in the great West. Within a short time the entire road will be ballasted with concrete gravel, as there is now a large force engaged in this work.

THE AFTERGLOW.

BY SARAH K. BOLTON.

The clouds were crimson in the west,
And flecked the blue with pink and gold;
And nature closed her eyes to rest,
Proud of her beauties manifold.

And then night shut the gates of day:
Shut out the light from hill and dell;
And darkness settled on the bay,
And settled on my heart as well.

When lo! the west grew red again
With tender sunlight overflow;
And mantled every hill and plain
With the sweet, dreamy afterglow.

And joy came back; that peaceful thought
That fills the soul at soft twilight;
That hour when God from chaos wrought
The miracle of day and night.

* * * * * * *

A friend, a rare and royal one,
Too beautiful it seemed to die,
Went down in glory, like the sun,
When darkness covered earth and sky.

The stars came out, but not for me;
There was no fragrance in the breeze;
The moon shone, but he could not see
Its silver light on flowers and trees.

But then, sweet words came thronging back
Upon my mind: "He was, and is;
The angels keep a shining track
Between us by their ministries."

I said, and felt the sacred touch
Of hand to hand, and lip to lip:
There must be joy indeed for such
As from the haunt of life can slip.

I am content; the mellow light
Of days gone by will heart o'erflow:
The sun has sailed out of sight,
But memory is the afterglow.

Balky Ben.

BY REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

MR. EDITOR: One of the most vivid recollections of my boyhood days on the farm is that of a great monster of a gray mule known as "Old Ben," whose chief virtue was that he was very gentle (?). Indeed, Ben was so very amiable that any boy could plow him, provided the supply of switches was abundant. Many a furrow has your correspondent run behind Old Ben without a line, and I am sure he will never forget Ben's tantalizing deliberation when he found the all-essential persuader gone. Again, anybody, male or female, could ride Old Ben without the least danger, and you know that that is a virtue not possessed by many of the mule-kind. However, he who rode must make up his mind to submit to Ben's time. The persuader was of less value while riding than when driving. All in all, Ben was somewhat of a favorite, and everybody had a good word for Ben. Notwithstanding his many excellencies, Ben had one deplorable fault. He would balk. And I submit to your many readers, that if they know of my accomplishment known to horse-kind more aggravating than balking, that they let it be known. As for myself, I'd rather a horse understood any other of the fine arts. Among thoughtless people nothing is more productive of bad grammar, and with religious people nothing is more trying on the grace of patience. As long as the road was level and things went easy, Ben was a capital fellow—just as good as any in the team; but as soon as the bottom of the hill was reached, and the reins checked for a general hard pull for the top, Ben would fail. Then what an interesting time we would have. First the harness was examined, to see if everything fit all right; then he was patted and coaxed, and many nice, pleasant things were said to Ben; but, to our chagrin, when the word was given to go Ben stood with such an air of contempt as to give us to understand that he was not to be caught by any such meaningless praise. Next the whip was resorted to; but this only made Ben surge from side to side, and kick and stamp; but the wagon did not move. We only had the evidence that the tongue was sound and strong. Then some one would say, "Whip his legs;" but this met with no success. Then another would advise twisting his ear; but the nerves which connected Ben's feet with his ears were too much blunted, and that infallible remedy was of no avail. Ben could be neither coaxed nor driven; but, after a time, seemingly after due deliberation, Ben would move forward; then what a noisy time we would have till the top was reached.

So, Mr. Editor, after many, many years I am reminded again of Old Ben.

At the General Conference, which met in Richmond last year, it was found that we had a large missionary debt (60,000 or more dollars) resting upon us. So far as known to the church, the road had been smooth and the load unfelt; but now the bottom of the hill had been reached, and the time had come for a united effort to clear the top. This debt must be paid. The church can't afford to repudiate such a debt and turn its back upon this, the very fundamental principle of Christianity. So the examination of harness and petting began. The church was informed of its missionary machinery, how cheaply and smoothly it had run, her past liberality and pride were alike appealed to—yea, her honor was at stake, but all to no purpose. Then came Judge Tucker's plan, which, it was thought, would certainly move the load and clear the debt; but this, too, failed. Then another plan was suggested; then another proposition submitted; and each in its turn seems only to have reminded us more forcibly that the load is still upon us. Last of all comes a most excellent suggestion from the pen of Bishop Galloway, that we observe the week, beginning with August 8, as a week of prayer and self-denial. This, backed up by the strong episcopal address published in the last issues of our church papers, should stir in every Southern Methodist a desire and determination to do something for the relief of the Missionary Board. Can not every member of the church deny themselves something, even if it be a comfort, for a few days, that the cause of the Master and the honor of the church should not suffer? Certainly every church member can find some way by which to save ten cents, and many, if a strict account is kept, will save much more. Yet a contribution of ten cents per member will clear the debt.

This is not the time to question as to how this debt came upon us. It is, or should be, enough for the church to know that the money has been expended in sending the gospel to the heathen. Neither is this the time to contrast our gifts with our neighbors. We are to keep a strict account for one week, and, in the fear of God, to put into his treasury all the savings. We pray that God may move upon the heart and conscience of the church, and that all his members may come to the help of the Lord in this time of need, and that the fourteenth day of August may find us with our load safely removed.

Address of Bishop Galloway.

The following is the address of Bishop Galloway delivered at request of the International Council, and reported in shorthand for the Journal by Miss Alice Robertson, of Muskogee:

Mr. President and Members of the International Council:

I am here on an official visit to the Indian Mission Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. We have churches established throughout the five civilized tribes, and have been working in this territory since it was first established as the reservation of your people.

There is a very interesting and, I may say, eloquent story told of the establishment of our first mission in the far West among the Flathead Indians. A man went out to California in the early days—crossing the continent to seek his fortune. In his search for gold he chanced to visit the Flatheads. He saw their heathen rites, and he asked them why they did not have among them missionaries of the Christian Church to preach to them. They said they had never heard of such a church, and they inquired anxiously about it. This man was a worldly, irreligious man, but he told them of the religion away back in the east, and so interested were they that three of these chiefs made the long pilgrimage across the continent, that was so wearisome and perilous, that two of the three died from fatigue and suffering, and only one had strength to make the journey's end in St. Louis and tell the story. Their appeal rang throughout the country. Our church was asked to take up the work. We wanted to do it, but we had no means. It was then that Dr. Wilbur Fisk, president of the Wesleyan College at Middletown, published an appeal in which he said: "A missionary must go. I will be bondsman for the church." Jason Lee came down from Canada, offered himself as a missionary for the West, and established the first mission on the Pacific coast. From that day till the present there has been a constant growth in Indian mission work. The church looks with joy and pride to the results of labor among these people. In recounting the history of the church we remember that some of the brightest trophies of the Christian missionary are among the Indian people.

I need not tell you that I take a great interest in this council and all your movements for the advancement and elevation of your people. I heard with great pleasure the report of the Committee of Ten, and, though I am not a politician, but a minister, it seems to me that the manner in which you present your case is so forcible that it can not fail to gain consideration, and that hearing is due such a representative body as this here assembled.

I have been very glad, in traveling through the country, to note the wonderful progress made by your people. People say the Indian likes to sleep better than work; but your fertile lands are being cultivated, and you have the finest crops of corn and cotton I have seen anywhere in the Southwest. I doubt not you all enjoy the civilization to which you have attained, and that you will say you owe all this to the religion of Jesus Christ. The standing of a people is shown by their religion. No people are any better than the gods they serve. Wherever our religion has gone with the influence that follows the open Bible read by the people, there we see the truest advancement, wise laws, the best protection of life and property, and the highest development of noble manhood. Any one visiting this country, looking into your faces, seeing your progress, must be convinced of the mighty and irresistible power of the gospel of Jesus Christ to elevate. It is impossible to look into the faces of you of the civilized nations, and then into those of our brethren of the plains, and not realize the blessed results that follow the teaching of the religion of Jesus Christ. All that has been done for you will be done for them, if we can go among them with the same appliances of schools, churches, etc.

The story of the Indian, I dare say, though I am a citizen of the United States, has been a story of wrong and oppression; but surely the condition of your people should lead to a different feeling toward the Indian, and a better treatment of him.

I am glad to report to you that our church is to-day enjoying larger prosperity than ever before. We have in this Conference five presiding elders and sixty preachers, and a membership of about nine thousand—nearly six thousand among your people. Our Conference, which met in this town of Enfaula, last fall reported an increase of membership, during the preceding year, of six hundred Indians and five hundred whites. We, at home in the States, feel encouraged, and the church is ready to respond so far as she is able, and to send larger contributions for carrying forward the good work.

I want to say, furthermore, in commendation of your people and the spirit they have manifested not only at this council, but as I have seen them in their homes, that the Indian cause is nearer my heart now than ever before. Without ability as a statesman or a politician to pronounce upon your utterances, it seems to me they ought to be heard and to be very effective.

As one of the chief pastors of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, I bring you the greetings of more than a million members, and assure you of their desire for your prosperity and advancement, and their wish to help you as far as possible.

I bid you God-speed in the effort to advance your people, and in all your interests, social, political, moral and religious.—Indian Journal.

Evangelists.

BY REV. H. D. KIMBALL.

Much has been said and written concerning the creation of the office of evangelists in our church. The question was raised in the last General Conference, and was warmly discussed by our ablest men; but, alas! the measure was voted down by the "old landmarks" and others. There seems to be a dislike to the name "evangelist" on the part of many of our brethren, and we would not, therefore, use it if we knew what other word would better express our idea. We would, however, be glad to see an act of church legislation passed, authorizing each Conference to appoint two men or more, whose duty would be to labor throughout the Conference, not only by holding revivals, but erecting chapels and organizing Sunday-schools wherever practicable. We are not in favor of giving preachers nominal appointments, and then have them to do most of their preaching outside of their own Conference, and much of it beyond the bounds of the Southern Methodist Church, when the latter territory has wide fields in which there is not a single organization. If we could have some of our revivalists (and we mean by the term, men who let themselves down to the populace and present a "straight-cut" gospel) turned loose to go wherever they could get a congregation (in the open air, if necessary), and hold protracted meetings, no doubt thousands would be saved who are now perishing for the "bread of life." If Bowman, Axley, Nolley and other pioneer preachers gained audience with the people of Louisiana and other Southern States under such circumstances that surrounded them, it does seem that now any preachers who would go back to first works would reap very large results indeed. Methodism received its first impetus from highway and byway preaching, and it will always be susceptible to revival influence from such work whenever the state of things demand it. It is a glory peculiar to Methodism, that it is always ready to send its heralds out among the poor and ignorant to feed them upon the bounty of God's grace. One has but to go upon the public squares of the great city of the South to see what large numbers of people are totally ignorant of the plan of salvation. Such is, more or less, the case with the populace in many parts of the bounds of our Conferences. Our indefatigable and wide-awake presiding elder, Bro. Sawyer, has immediately taken in the situation 'round about Zion, and given the people preaching upon the squares, not by himself alone, not by one or two pastors, but by all the stationed and local preachers, from the pastor of Carondelet Street Church down to the youngest licentiate. If the New Orleans district would profit by a city evangelist or city missionary, and the needs in the case demand such a man, then certainly the whole Conference would be greatly assisted in the work of soul-saving, if it had such men throughout its domain. It would be a great blessing to have a few men in our Conference always ready to come and co-operate with any pastor who might invite them. All of our preachers are not revivalists, though they are good pastors and possess great preaching ability, as far as sound theology is concerned. Able expounders of the Word are indispensable agents in the economy of our church. They are the ones to sow the seed, to plant the Word, and yet such brethren are often not revivalists and are always thankful to receive the help of those who know how to effect visible results. Some may say that the preachers can help each other, and do the very work above mentioned. To some extent they can; but when it comes to taking a town or community by siege, then the work of preachers at home will not permit them remaining long away from it, and hence they are compelled to leave in the midst of gracious prospects, leaving the pastor with more than his hands can hold. It is true, some other brother can come to his assistance to some measure; but all know change of preachers in a meeting is sometimes sure death to it—not so much because the last is inferior to the former, but because he can't get into the spirit and line of his predecessor. A minister who does nothing else but labor in revivals is constantly increasing in just such experiences as make him more and more successful in the work. The experiences with the people in one meeting can be successfully used in a meeting at some other place. But the question of support will arise. Ah! if revivals burn throughout the Conference the people will be too full of the Holy Ghost to "muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." Many a poor "ox" would fatten, nobody would feel oppressed thereby, and everybody would be in a good humor. Let us hope to see an addition to our forces by the appointment of such laborers in the fields that are "white unto the harvest."

NEW ORLEANS.

Meridian District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The doors of Heidelberg are wide open for the entertainment of the District Conference, July 28-31. We hope to have a full attendance. Horses will be taken care of.

Reduced rates of travel have been secured: full fare going, and return at one cent per mile. All who expect to attend, who have not done so, will please send me their names immediately, so that I can forward them certificates to be endorsed by agents from whom they purchase tickets to Conference. Certificates must be endorsed by each agent from whom tickets are purchased.

"To every man his work," is the scriptural injunction. Notwithstanding this plain declaration of duty, the kingdom of Christ is a disorganized body. Beyond the ecclesiastical orders in our church, consisting of the ministers and consistories, there is little effective organization. There are organizations enough in many churches for benevolence, for missions, for visitation; but the very fact of their presence indicates a lack of true organization. Go into a well-organized business house and ask the first employee, "What is your work here?" In an instant you will get a reply. He knows his place. Go into a church and ask anyone outside of the officc-bearers, "What is your work in the kingdom?" It is very likely the answer will be, "I have no special work in the church."

(Southern Christian Advocate.)

What particular part of church work will you engage in? You must work somewhere, somehow. Spiritual idleness is spiritual death. You can not receive all and give nothing. As you receive of God's manifold grace, so must you communicate to others. It makes comparatively little difference where and how you labor for the Master's cause, so you labor somewhere, somehow. In the Sunday-school, in the prayer meeting, in the temperance cause, in the church, by the home, by the wayside, anywhere and everywhere there is work for all those who have a mind to work for the blessed Master. There is work in the church for every member, old and young, rich and poor, learned and illiterate. But there is no place for the drone, the idler, the do-nothing, though, unfortunately, there are too many of them in all our churches.

(St. Louis Christian Advocate.)

Christ can not be much to men who put business before him, and who hold as a conviction and a settled rule of action that the claims of business are imperative and first; that the calls of service for the church are to be subordinate to these higher claims. No man is licensed to put anything before Christ. The most sacred duties are to be subordinate to his claims and calls. The religion which saves, separates a man from the world and separates him to Christ; at no point does the world hold him. What right has business to absorb a man's time so that he has no time to visit the sick, no time to look after his official duties? The very life of religion depends on doing. He who does not do will soon lose the inclination to do. The talent passes from the man who does not use it. Religion has no sinecure places.

(Inlerior.)

We have the very same work to do which the apostles had. We are to do it by the same instrument which they had, namely: the preaching of the Word. Why should we not expect the same special help? If the Holy Ghost was so essential to those men who stood under the very shadow of the cross and who had the fresh enthusiasm of having walked with the Lord and heard his words; if Holy Ghost power was so necessary to them that they were not permitted to stir outside of Jerusalem until they had received that power, why do not we pray and wait for it with a distinct expectation that it is for us as much as it was for them? Have we become skeptical about there being any such thing? Do we say there is force in logic, and a certain inherent energy in the truth, and there is power in the touch of heart with heart, and this is all there is of spiritual power? If we feel thus, no wonder the gospel is so much shorn of its power. This is the day of the Holy Spirit, and he will be honored by the faith of the church.

(Life of Faith.)

The best workers are not those whose chief thought is work, but whose highest aim is the will of God. The truest way to do the work of God is to be always in the will of God. It is possible to give ourselves to a work to which God has not called us, or to withhold ourselves from paths of service which he intends to take. We may be holding the choice in our own hands. Simply because the work is definitely the Lord's work, we may take for granted that it is the work to which we are called, and we may go forth looking to God alone as the source of strength and the giver of success. But there is a more excellent way. Let us begin lower. Let us begin by the consecration of ourselves to his will. Let God choose for us. Let us not make our own plans and then come to him for his blessing on our way. Let us spread before him a clean sheet of paper, that he may map out for us his way and show us his will. Let us give ourselves to him, not that first of all we might do, but that first of all we might be, what he pleases.

The great eventful present hides the past; but through the din
Of its loud life hints and echoes from the life behind steal in;
And the hum of home and fireside, and the legendary rhyme,
Make the task of duty lighter which the true man owes his time.

A WORKER'S PRAYER.

BY FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL.

Lord, speak to me, that I may speak
In living echoes of thy tone;
As thou hast sought, so let me seek
Thy erring children, lost and lone.

O, lead me, Lord, that I may lead
The wandering and the wavering feet;
O, feed me, Lord, that I may feed
Thy hungering ones with manna sweet.

O, strengthen me, that while I stand
Firm on the rock, and strong in thee,
I may stretch out a loving hand
To wrestlers with the troubled sea.

O, teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious things thou dost impart;
And wing my words that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart.

O, give thine own sweet rest to me,
That I may speak with soothing power
A word in season, as from thee
To weary ones in needful hour.

O, fill me with thy fullness, Lord,
Until my very heart o'erflow
In kindliest thought and glowing word
Thy love to tell, thy praise to show.

O, use me, Lord—use even me,
Just as thou wilt, and when and where,
Until thy blessed face I see,
Thy rest, thy joy, thy glory share.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS.

Matthew iv, 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT: "He is able to succor them that are tempted."—Hebrews ii, 18.

FROM TRIUMPH TO TRIAL.

The last lesson left the Savior fully equipped for his sacred mission. It was a supreme moment. The Baptist had lifted up his voice in attestation of his divine mission, and had consecrated him by the authorized ritual. The Holy Ghost had rested upon him in the beautiful emblem of purity, innocence and love. The eternal Father had proclaimed him as "my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Most comforting to his own heart, and most convincing to others, was the meeting of attestation, both human and divine, as to his Messiahship. Forward upon his blessed career was he prepared to go under auspices the most favorable. It was well that the Father's love and approbation had been so emphatically shown, as very soon afterwards he was to be subjected to the fiercest onsets of the power of darkness. The disciple is not above his Master. So, amid the chequered scenes of an earthly pilgrimage, we may expect in rapid succession experiences the most opposite. Triumphs give place to struggles, joyous indications are changed into gloomy surroundings, the most hopeful prospects fade out into darkened omens.

TEMPTED THROUGH HUNGER.

Verse 1. "Then"—immediately after the baptism—"was Jesus led up of the Spirit." From the valley of the Jordan to the adjacent mountains. "Tradition locates it in a rugged, desolate region between Jerusalem and Jericho, about four miles from the scene of the baptism, and twenty from Jerusalem, called Quarantana, from the forty days' fast." The yawning chasms, the wild surroundings were most favorable for the enactment of dark deeds. Mark expresses it, "driven by the Spirit." We are not to understand that against his will he was forced up, but that he was strongly under the guidance of the Spirit. "To be tempted of the devil." To be tried, to have his character thoroughly tested. This temptation, as well as the others, might have been suggested by the devil, without his having assumed any tangible shape, to the mind and heart of the Savior. In many places of the Bible he is mentioned as thus performing his iniquitous work. He entered into the heart of Judas Iscariot. We think, however, that in this connection the devil appeared in bodily shape; perhaps borrowed the form of a Galilean peasant, personally known or not to the Savior.

2. "Fasted forty days and forty nights." Moses had a similar fast: so did Elijah. (See Exodus xxxiv, 28, and 1 Kings xix, 8.) All three were miraculous exercises, the appetite being held in abeyance, and the wastes of the body being repaired by spiritual influences. In no respect are they to be imitated by mortals under ordinary conditions. Those who seek, after a fashion, to fast for forty days, in imitation of Christ's fasting, are acting without scriptural warrant, and are engaging in "a shew of wisdom in will worship, and humility and neglecting of the body."

3. "If thou be the Son of God." Seemingly, this companion desired to consult with Jesus about his Messiahship, and, to establish the proofs, Jesus had up to this time given no outward testimony establishing divine powers. The tempter might have suggested this act as proving his divinity to others as well as himself; as if he had said: "You claim to be the Son of God. Now prove it by relieving your hunger through the conversion of stones into bread. You will thus be testing your own power and be also proving it to the world."

4. "He answered, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone." Here is an overwhelming answer to the tempter, and, at the same time, a safe example to mortals in like condition. The Bible is the only rule and the sufficient rule of faith and practice. Following that, no one will ever stray. Neglecting it, or even temporizing with it, everyone will sooner or later be brought into sorrow. The passage quoted by the Savior is taken from the teachings of God to the children of Israel in their journeyings, and is intended to teach that the sustenance of the spiritual part of man is of more importance than that of the corporeal.

TEMPTED THROUGH PRESUMPTION.

Verse 5. "Then"—foiled in this attack—"the devil taketh him up into the holy city." This simply means that he proposed to him to go, or influenced him to go, and that they together walked up to the pinnacle of the temple. There was nothing improper or unusual in this.

6. "If thou be the Son of God." Still the doubt is suggested. One opportunity of proving divinity has been lost; here is another. "Cast thyself down." There can be no danger. "For it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee." The tempter might still, under a guise of friendship, have been urging the test, and this time he justified it by a quotation from the Scripture. The teaching of the Scripture is strictly given, and even the very language contained in some of the versions; but the perversion consists in turning a promise of Scripture, intended to encourage faith and reliance upon divine help, into an encouragement for presumption and sacrilege.

7. "Jesus said unto him, It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." The promise quoted by the devil means that God will always protect his people when they are exposed to danger in the legitimate discharge of duty. It would be tempting God if a man were to overstep the bounds of prudence knowingly and purposely, and then expect God to work a miracle for his deliverance. So Jesus replied to the tempter that if he were thus to test his divinity by gratifying a prurient curiosity, he would rashly be challenging God to do what had never been promised.

TEMPTED THROUGH AMBITION.

Verse 8. "Again." This is the third time that the tempter sought to entice the Savior. Failing in both the others, he resorts to this, the most dazzling and the most desperate offer. Two motives can be conceived for the reservation of this offer to the last. First: It was the most comprehensive offer, the most valuable gift, the greatest inducement; others were to be exhausted first. Second: It exhibited the true character of the temptation, and proclaimed the identity of him who was making it. It was reserved to the last, because if it failed, irreparable and hopeless would be the failure. "Into an exceeding high mountain." Dr. Olin says that this is the highest peak of the whole range; 2,000 feet perpendicular. A chapel has been built upon it, resorted to by devout pilgrims. "Sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them." As Christ was the maker of the whole world, this panorama is not to be confined to Judea or to the Roman Empire, but to the habitable globe. Luke adds in this connection, "In a moment of time." So that it must have been a spiritual vision.

9. "All these things will I give thee." Was this assumption of power an entire falsehood, or was there some admixture of truth to temper its glaring sacrilege? The Scriptures represent the power of the devil as immense. He is called in John xii, 31, "the prince of this world;" in II Corinthians iv, 4, "the god of this world," and in Ephesians ii, 2, "the prince of the power of the air." A palpable, inexcusable lie, nevertheless, was told by the devil, although he had it evidently in his power to bestow, even as he does in this age, an empty show, a vainglory, a delusive phantasm. "If thou wilt fall down and worship me." Here came out the cloven foot. The other temptations did not, undoubtedly, proclaim a palpable, diabolical presence. They might have been the result of a simple error in judgment, but this solicitation to bow down to any other being save the one true God lays bare the character. The veritable enemy of souls, he who goes about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, stands confessed. The Savior promptly and uncompromisingly replies.

10. "Get thee hence, Satan." Now, that the true character of the tempter is disclosed, our Lord does not deal with him as a pretended friend, but orders him off, not behind him, but out of his presence and away. Luke gives a different order of the temptations, making the offer of the kingdoms of this world to be the second one; but this is evidently erroneous, as the devil certainly would not approach again, piously quoting Scripture bearing upon Christ's divinity, after he had been emphatically styled Satan. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." All three of Christ's quotations are from Deuteronomy. The Jews were especially versed in this book, because it was considered an epitome of the law.

11. "Then the devil leaveth him." Vanquished by the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. Luke adds, "for a season." He was ever ready to repeat his attacks when he thought they would avail. "And behold, angels came and ministered unto him." "Behold" calls the attention of heaven and earth, that when occasion demands God will send angelic servants to supply the wants of his own. "Ministered unto him" means strengthened him, and supplied him with food. The Greek word used here is the same used in Matthew viii, 15, in the incident of the cure of Peter's wife, "and she arose, and ministered unto them." Here was fulfilled the promise which the devil perverted, viz.: "For he shall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways."

Two Years of Itinerancy—1846, '47.

MR. EDITOR: The third year of my itinerant work was on East Feliciana circuit, Mississippi Conference, a co-laborer with the Rev. Thomas Clinton, of precious memory, who long since has gone to his reward. This circuit included Jackson, Clinton, Holly Grove, Manchac, and a number of appointments on the Amite river, in St. Helena and Amite parishes. As I was ambitious to compass the course of study, I indulged very little of social life this year. My headquarters was the home of Bro. J. C. Flynn; and no preacher ever had a more comfortable stay than Aunt Lizzie gave me. At the close of the year 1846 I visited my mother in North Louisiana. From there, in company with Rev. R. M. Crowson, I went on horseback, some two hundred miles, to Opelousas, the site of the first session of the Louisiana Conference. Bishop Soule presided. The leading preachers of the Conference then were Rev. R. Randle, J. N. Hamel, John Powel, Joel Sanders, R. M. Crowson and D. O. Shattuck. Those of my class in the Conference were J. W. Harmon, G. W. Jenkins, R. H. Reed and W. H. Crenshaw. Malachi Dubose also, who located that year. After a long and consistent life of piety, he has lately passed over the river. Here I first met Rev. R. Deering and T. O. Summers. Of fourteen of us who joined the Mississippi Conference, in 1843, I know of only three who are living; and we are only biding our time. From this Conference I was sent to Andrew Chapel, New Orleans. As this appointment, by some means, has been left out of the printed minutes, I may speak of it, lest it perish from memory. When I got to the city, I found that arrangements had been made for me to board with a Sister Carron. Her kitchen stood some twenty feet in the rear of the dwelling; between was inclosed with rough planks, provided with temporary seats and a sort of goods box pulpit. Here I was to live and preach in the same house till other arrangements could be made. A coming down from a big circuit. A lot had been purchased, and a church was in process of building—out of the lumber of an old flat-boat. This was near where Felicity Church now is, and also near a large pond of water—made either by nature or art; and was known as Gourley's pond. It was a a convenient depository for the filth of that part of the city. From this pond, however, our table was supplied with "fine fish." "What don't kill, cures." Some time in spring the church was completed, and dedicated by the presiding elder, Chase. The text, "And now Jacob is small," was appropriate; but Jacob died or lost his identity in Felicity Church. This church, in shape, was an unomnly, neither oblong, round or squnre, but wedge-shaped, and the pulpit was in the wedge end. I do not suppose the architect had any reference to acoustics in his plans, but wanted the house to cover the lot, which was in that shape. However, the pulpit being in the little end, the acoustic properties, were very fine. Here I lived, labored and suffered till midsummer. Here, near the swamp, the mosquitoes were simply awful. I could neither eat, sleep or pray in any sort of comfort for them. Worn out by work, eaten up by mosquitoes, and overcome by the heat of summer, I was well nigh reduced to a walking skeleton. On August 3 that good man, Bro. Sherry, and his wife, called on me, and informed me that yellow fever was epidemic in the city; that my congregation had already gone, and that it would be suicide for me to remain: that I must leave the city. I took their advice. When I got to the wharf, the steamer "Rainbow" was ready to leave. Whether everybody else had gone before, I do not know, but I was the only cabin passenger on board. The boat being well ventilated, decorated with paper hangings, and balmy breezes streaming through it as she steamed up the river, gave me one of the most pleasant day's travel of my life. When I got to Jackson, La., I found the people in great excitement about the fever in the city—the death-rate had become fearful. Up to this time I had not realized that I was in any special danger. My health improved during the summer, and I returned in the fall. But my people said I came back too early; that I was in danger of taking the fever, and if I did, I would be sure to die; but I remained till Conference.

Now, after all these years, here I am, a worn-out preacher—"worn out." When I said this term reminded me of every old plough laid aside in the fence-corner that I ever saw, Bishop Keener said: "Some fruit never mellowed till plucked from the tree and laid aside." However, a preacher mellowing on the shelf is an ordeal equal to a quarantine to get well.

Among other rare occurrences of that period, it was announced and published in the papers that I had died with yellow fever. Bro. W. H. Hines left the city about the time that I did; had contracted the fever before he left the city; was put off the boat at Donaldsonville, and died. From the circumstances of our leaving the city near the same time, and the similarity in our names, the report went out that I had died. Afterwards I saw persons who had seen the report, and had not heard it contradicted, who were like Thomas, it required the evidence of sense to convince them that I was alive.

My experience is that a consecrated life to the itinerant ministry has its ups and downs; yet, if I had another life to dispose of, I would give it to the itinerant work of the Methodist ministry with more faith and less misgivings.

Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, Louisiana Conference, held with Ruston Auxiliary, and which closed one week ago, was an event in the history of our auxiliary long and pleasantly to be remembered.

Of the twenty-three auxiliaries in the State, eleven were represented at the Ruston convention. The convention had more the appearance of an organization of North Louisiana than of the whole State, as only North Louisiana auxiliaries were represented.

The sessions of the convention were very well attended by the citizens and visitors of the town, and the business was disposed of in a methodical and business-like manner. Mrs. Fallilove, the president, makes an efficient and dignified presiding officer. Her report to the society was one of the ablest documents ever read to a Ruston audience.

The social was the most pleasant feature of the meeting. The Ruston ladies did what they could to contribute to the pleasure of their visiting sisters and facilitate the business of the convention, and I believe they succeeded. Ruston Auxiliary was greatly benefited by the meeting—in that it was inspired with new life and energy, and with the laudable determination, if possible, to rank with the strongest auxiliaries of the State before many more annual meetings are held.

All of the officers of the State society were re-elected. They are worthy and competent, and the society was not willing to dispense with their services. Their re-election was a well-deserved tribute to their faithfulness.

On Sunday evening, before the final adjournment of the convention, a Juvenile Society was organized, and forty members taken in. The little people bid fair to do a good work in the missionary cause, and for the present they will meet every week.

Since the adjournment of the convention, we have entered upon our work with renewed zeal. Very truly,

MATTIE PEARCE,
Cor. Sec. Ruston Aux.

Winona District Conference.

The eighteenth District Conference, for Winona district, North Mississippi Annual Conference, of Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held at Sallis, Miss., July 1-7, 1887—Bishop Charles B. Galloway, presiding; J. B. Streater, secretary; J. R. Bingham, assistant secretary.

Five of the preachers were absent on account of sickness. There were forty-three laymen present. The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, viz: J. R. Bingham, J. B. Streater, W. T. Boswell; and W. P. Ratcliff, O. J. Moore and F. M. Glass were elected alternates.

The preaching was first-class. Sermons were delivered by J. W. Malone, W. S. Lagrone, T. W. Lewis, W. B. Murrah, Dr. T. A. S. Adams and Bishop C. B. Galloway. The reports of the preachers will compare favorably with other districts.

A missionary meeting was held on Saturday night, and the sum of $212 80 was raised for missions.

The visiting brethren present were Dr. T. A. S. Adams, of Centenary College; W. B. Murrah, of Whitworth College; J. W. McLaurin, agent of American Bible Society; and Prof. B. P. Patterson, president-elect of Methodist District High School, located at Black Hawk, Miss.

The next Conference will be held at Greenwood.

The following resolution was adopted, viz:

Resolved, That we hereby pledge ourselves that in all our pastoral visitations, and official relations with the members of the church, that we will bring prominently before them the great necessity for the use of our church papers, and secure subscriptions as far as possible; and that we will use our efforts in an especial manner to secure, first, all the subscriptions possible for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE as our church organ.

A Correspondent Corrected.

MR. EDITOR: Your Nashville correspondent, in your issue of June 23, committed two errors, which I deem it necessary to correct.

First, he speaks of the Nashville College for Young Ladies as sustaining an "official" relation to the Vanderbilt University.

If he will examine the record of the Board of Trust, he will find that that institution has no official relation whatever to the Vanderbilt, nor any but the same relation it holds to all other institutions of our church.

Second, he intimates that a "magnificent building as an annex" to the Vanderbilt, as a part of Nashville College for Young Ladies, is to be erected by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt.

Now, such an idea has never been entertained by the Board. I do not doubt that your esteemed correspondent wrote what he thought was true, but he has been misinformed as to the facts. The Board of Trust has never spent one dollar on Price's College for Young Ladies, and never will, I presume.

MR. I say "Yes!" with all m[illegible] heart, and here is the money—two dollars; one each for wif[illegible] and myself.

I am still in the notion to gi[illegible] $10 annually to support a mi[illegible]sionary in Japan. In my firs[illegible] communication I said it made no difference to me as to what field of labor the missionary was assigned, if we succeed in raising the money. I have since received a private letter from Dr. Lambuth, asking that he be sent to Japan. It seems to me that if our people would read Dr. Lambuth's appeal, surely as many as one hundred could be found that will give $10 annually. My dear brother, my heart is set on this work. We must send a man from Mississippi.

These two dollars I send you keep, and if there are a thousand responses, then we can send a missionary. If we do not get enough for that purpose, then send it to Japan to help in the work anyhow.

Yours, in Christ,

From the Work.

TROYVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: This has been represented as a hard place, and we can say that, in a measure, the representation is correct. Many of the old and influential men send their familes out to church, while they stay at home and attend to or study their worldly business. While there are many difficulties which we have to encounter, the Lord has revived the work to a certain extent over the head of every opposition. The presiding elder visited us once, and preached several effectual sermons which were highly appreciated. Bros. Van Valkenburgh and G. D. Andrews visited us later. The former rendered efficient service while with us, but we regretted his having to leave so soon. The latter remained with us several days, preaching the gospel in demonstration and power of the Spirit. We have had over twenty accessions, and about fifteen or sixteen conversions. We are working and praying that the Lord may carry on the good work begun, and that we may have at least 100 conversions before this year closes.

WILSON MOORE, P. C.

CARROLLTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Between January 1 and July 1, 1887, there have been fifty-eight conversions and thirty-seven accessions to Carrollton and Greenwood station, North Mississippi Conference.

Mansfield Female College.

MR. EDITOR: My attention has been called by friends to a clause in the last article of my report on Mansfield Female College, which appeared in a recent issue of the ADVOCATE, which, I am informed, has been misconstrued by some. The clause alluded to is in reference to "complaints against the management of the college." I wish now to say distinctly, these complaints had not the remotest reference to questions affecting morals, but solely to evils, which, though trivial in their character, had a tendency to mar the usefulness and affect the patronage of the college. And I am delighted to know that, in order to add to its usefulness, arrangements are being made to secure for the college all modern appliances for imparting instruction. With a faculty in every respect equal to that of any female school in the South, the future of this college is brighter than ever before, and I am sure there is none more deserving of an extended patronage.

Reading Newspapers.

BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

The questions addressed to the lawyer by Christ are still pertinent questions in their application to reading in general: "What is written in the law? How readest thou?" This is a reading age; more people can read, and do read, than ever before, and reading matter was never so abundant, so cheap and accessible as now. Books exist on all subjects, and abound by the million. Nevertheless, our publishers in the United States bring out in millions of copies more than 5,000 books per year. In all the world, some German statistician has counted up some forty-four thousand newspapers. Of these 12,000 are printed in North America—mostly in the United States. Every church, every party, every profession, every business has its "organ." Newspapers characterize our modern civilization, and are, no doubt, the vehicles of a vast amount of information, interest and amusement to millions. I know I am greatly indebted to newspapers for much useful information and pleasant entertainment. But we all know the best things may not only be abused, but, in fact, are abused. The newspaper blessing constitutes no exception. Many of us read newspapers too much, and better reading not enough. No man can spare but so much time from other imperative duties to reading.

How do you read, and what do you read? are questions of the gravest significance. Perhaps no man's reading should be exclusively what is termed "solid" reading. Poetry, biography and travels and belles lettres reading generally should not be ignored. Our reading may be partly for innocent amusement, but certainly not wholly, or even mostly so. There are higher and more important intellectual and moral aims in our short earthly life to be considered and sought than mere amusement. Something more ought to be said of a man than that he lived, he smiled, he laughed and he died. But if we take as the index of the purpose for which men read the books that are published, and the books that are most called for, as shown by the statistics of librarians, we shall see that readers for mere amusement are largely in the preponderance. A classified list of American books published in 1886 shows that there are nineteen varieties; but more than one-fifth of the whole were devoted to fiction.

Newspapers are largely read for mere entertainment. There are various good reasons against excessive newspaper reading. It consumes too much time, and does not leave enough for more useful and important reading. Some people spend two or three hours a day in reading various newspapers, and rarely take up the Bible, or any other solid and instructive book. It may be said of tens of thousands that they read newspapers too much and good books too little. Newspaper reading, when it is almost our only reading, dissipates the mind and wastes its energies on the contemplation of trifles. There is properly in much of this reading nothing to develop or improve the faculties of the mind. A hundred or five hundred paragraphs in rapid succession, like water through the interstices of a sieve, leave almost no residium; the memory is broken down, and nothing remains but a dim and confused mass of worthless items and trifles.

One of the most important becomes of judicious mental training is the power of concentration. Some eminent teacher wanted a student that could fix his eye upon the point of a needle for fifteen minutes without winking. Such students are rare, and are never made by exclusive newspaper reading. The attention is so constantly changed, and so slightly given, that the habit of concentration is never formed. To such a mind consecutive thinking becomes impossible.

Our newspapers, to too large an extent, are filled with a vast amount of unprofitable reading, unimportant items from nearly all points of the compass, that it is mere mental trifling to read them. But this is not the worst feature. In too many papers we find most sensational accounts of assassinations, rapes, divorces, duels, robberies and capital executions, with all the horrible and disgusting details. All this is simply demoralizing, especially to the young. Our children's and young people's minds are poisoned and demoralized by this constant familiarity with all the shades and aspects of crime in its most bloody and obscene forms.

Let every Christian family take a religious newspaper, and, if able, one good and clean secular paper. This will past the household in all the great and interesting secular and religious movements of the age, and leave some time for good books.

Church Music.

MR. EDITOR: There has been at various times much trouble in the churches about the manner of conducting their music. I wish simply to give the result of my deliberate judgment on the subject of church music. God is the author of music, and has filled the world with it. He has adapted the human voice to its utterance, and, I believe, has led wise and good men to the construction of a great variety of musical instruments for the same purpose. There is not a solitude on earth where the musician can not evoke the sweetest music. God has uniformly employed both vocal and instrumental music all along the ages of the church for the promotion of his glory and the salvation of mankind. The antedeluvians had instruments of music and were, no doubt, acquainted with musical science. At an early day "Jubal was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ," and from that time onward through all the ages the true worshipers of God have praised him with loud voices and musical instruments. None of the inspired writers ever undertake to argue in favor of either vocal or instrumental music in connection with the worship of God. They seem to accept it as one of those primordial usages in the church, the importance of which was self-evident to every pious heart.

From the days of Miriam at the Red Sea it often comes to light incidentally that the worshipers of the true God not only sang his praise, but used a great variety of musical instruments in his worship. In the best ages of the Hebrew Church the musical department of worship was systemized and conducted in an orderly manner. A precentor was appointed whose duty it was to see that everything was done "decently and in good order." They used a variety of instruments—perhaps, at least, a dozen. We read of both vocal and instrumental music in heaven. I am aware of the fact that Satan seems always to have known something of the power of music over the human heart, and has always been trying to use it for the promotion of his diabolical work in leading souls to perdition. As one of our hymnologists says—

> "Music, alas! too long has been > Made to obey the devil."

But we can not yield this great gift from our Father in heaven, either to the devil or his followers. Sweet heavenly music is the Christian's birthright which he may use freely and with great spiritual profit. I would not be understood as saying that instrumental music is an essential element in a religious life, or in the acceptable worship of God, for there are many times and places of worship from which it is necessarily absent. But I say instrumental music in the adoration and worship of God is scriptural and may be very profitably employed in all our well-established churches, both in country, town and city stations. I am no apologist for the manner in which choir singing and instrumental music are abused and perverted from all good purposes in some of our churches, but this is very generally the fault of the pastor who leaves this part of public worship to the control of young, inexperienced, perhaps, unconverted persons, who have no spiritual discernment. It is as much the duty of the pastor to supervise this part of divine worship, so as to make it profitable, as that of prayer, the administration of the ordinances or anything else legitimately belonging to the worship of God. If he can not do it himself, let him have a capable precentor, who can select such tunes as the congregation can sing, and then lead in the service of song. Let no new tunes be introduced until those already on hand are thoroughly learned. When it is desirable to introduce a new tune, it is always best to practice on it awhile in the family circle and in the social meetings of the church before attempting its use in the congregation. Our Discipline has, on page 127, some most excellent rules on the subject of congregational singing, and it is the duty of every pastor to see that they are conformed to universally. We are soon to have a new standard hymn book, and I trust its use will be universal in all our churches. We can have no better. In my judgment, ours will be the most evangelic and orthodox hymn book in all the domain of Christendom. If we go from our standard hymn book to those little flimsy books which have been thrust upon us, like a tidal wave, for several years past, it will only be going down hill: from the greater to the lesser.

"Church Schools and the Bible."

MR. EDITOR: I have just read in the ADVOCATE, of June 23, an account of the Congregational Church School, in Michigan, where the Bible is taught through the entire course of study; and also your timely criticism. Your pointed question—"Have any of our readers ever seen a catalogue of any of our church schools, except our theological seminaries, in whose course of study the Bible holds as prominent a place as heathen books?"—has often come to my mind. It was once my great delight to collect catalogues of various colleges and examine their course of study and general government, and I have no recollection of ever seeing or hearing of such a school government before. It is time we Protestants were waking up to this all-important fact, and the quicker we do it the better it will be for us.

It is true, almost every college—everyone, so far as my information extends—opens its sessions with prayer. A few have tried to abolish this practice, but to their hurt, and were forced to resume it for their life, not solely for their success. Have we ever stopped to consider that they are forced to do this because of the example and influence of church schools? But this is not sufficient. No man will dare say family prayer, morning and night, is sufficient religious instruction for his children. Some schools compel attendance upon religious services, at least, once a Sabbath; but even this is not sufficient. There must be personal contact with the Word of God, with explanations and applications by suitable persons. This is not only beneficial, but essential. Wherein lay the Catholic stronghold of this country? In their schools. It is the rarest thing if a young lady attends one of these schools for a number of years without being more or less Catholicised (if I may coin a word). Who ever heard of such a statement being made of our Protestant schools?

Three thousand years ago Solomon said, "The commandment is a lamp, and the law is light;" but how many hundreds of our young people go from college in spiritual darkness and ignorance because of our failure to teach them the pure Word of God. Are we ashamed of the Bible? Are we ashamed of Protestantism? To say the very least, Are we afraid evil will result? "Forty per cent. of the male graduates of Olivet College have chosen the ministry for their profession" (vocation). What college can make a similar publication? We "pray the Lord to send forth laborers into his harvest." Let us show our faith by our works, and prepare these laborers for these offices.

The Board of Missions appointed the week, beginning August 8, as a week of prayer and self-denial in the interest of our missions.

Briefs.

There seems to be a sort of periodicity in the papers in regard to articles on the subject of preaching. The subject, in all its phases, comes around as regularly as the seasons. Manuscript and extempore preaching, doctrinal and exegetical, hortatory and didactic, all have to go through a regular ventilation. The best criticism we have seen on the subject is that of a brother, who says that the "average preaching is as good as the average hearing."

A writer in the Christian Intelligencer suggests a new rendering of 1. Corinthians xvi, 2; a rendering which, he says, is in better accord with the practice of beneficence as generally exemplified in the present day. He would render the passage thus: "Occasionally, when impulse moves you, let some of you, who are so disposed, lay by a little something, according as may seem convenient." Is not that the general reading of the passage? It is not King James' Version, nor is it the Revised Version; but is it not the popular version?

"The Seybert Commission," originated under the will of Henry Seybert, and appointed by the University of Pennsylvania for the investigation of spiritualism and the alleged powers of mediums, has made a preliminary report, which has been published by J. B. Lippincott & Co. The committee began its work in 1884, and, after three years of patient investigation into all forms of spiritualism and the works of mediums in all their various phases, the decision of the commission is, "That spiritual manifestation, as they saw it, is a fraud."

Mayor Hewitt, of New York City, has made good use of the mail since he has been in office. He has acquired the soubriquet of "the letter-writing mayor." Some of his letters are said to have been very able documents; and through that means he has been able to accomplish much that would otherwise have remained undone. We know a presiding elder who makes good use of postage stamps, and thus keeps his preachers in almost constant contact with him. In this way he moves them, and keeps up with their movements. Like a skillful general, he knows the precise point where each man is, and the condition of the battle at that point. We commend this practice to all our presiding elders.

OUR CITY MISSON.—Out-door preaching in various places has been done for several months. The congregations have been large, and generally very attentive to hear the Word. There has been but one interruption by bad conduct, and that was so summarily punished by the law officers that there has been no repetition of it. That good has been done is established by the fact that five new Sunday-schools have been started by the mission, to be conducted by the churches nearest to them. One of these is in Gretna; one in Carrollton; one at the corner of Claiborne and Gravier, and two in the Third District. These schools are the nuclei of future congregations. Our young preachers are receiving good training in these out-door meetings.

A Peculiar Christian.

He loves the church and works for her prosperity. He enters, with all his heart, into her enterprises, takes a special delight in her ordinances, and consecrates himself devotedly to her services. He attends the weekly prayer meeting, to call upon God for blessings upon the church. He takes his place regularly in the Sunday-school, that he may impress upon the young heart its duty to man and God. He is present at public worship, manifesting his gladness for the opportunity of "praising God in his sanctuary" and aiding the service by prayer and song. Being an earnest worker in the vineyard of the Lord, he does not attend to the spiritual duties to the neglect of temporal duties. He sees that the temporal side of religion is as broad as the spiritual side, and that it will become one-sided if both sides are not kept even with each other. He makes no boast of the cheapness of religion. He knows that it has cost him everything in his possession. He takes a business-like view of church operations, missionary enterprises and all facilities for spreading the gospel. He applies the general trade law to religion; that is, it is worth about as much as it costs. He gives for its support and extension "as God hath prospered him," and not according to the standard which a religious penuriousness sets up. If his pastor is in need, he does not open his mouth and roll his eyes in holy horror at the extravagance of the preacher's family; but he helps to bring the man of God out of his straits by paying what he owes, and in the manifestation of a sympathy that seals him as the friend of that family forever. When the enterprises of the church are presented for his support, instead of putting on a sanctimonious face and reading a lecture about the propriety of "charity beginning at home," he pulls out his purse and gives cheerfully "according to his ability." He keeps the temporal duties up alongside the spiritual duties. He is a man of faith, the largest faith; and because he is such, he is a man of works. Because he is a man of faith and works, he is a growing man. He is larger and stronger and purer and more earnest to-day than he was yesterday. He is joyfully conscious of the fact that his light is clearer and his peace is deeper, and his aspirations less earthly, and his hope brighter to-day than they have ever been. Looking steadfastly and continuously into the gospel, where the unveiled face of Jesus reveals the glory of God, he is "changed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord." Making a diligent use of gospel facilities, he is built up "unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Reader, is this your portrait?

Eureka Springs, Ark.

BY PRESIDENT F. M. GRACE.

Coming to this noted health resort for the benefit of my wife, my mind went to the home work and its interests with a sort of alacrity, like that of a body that has been turned or twisted from its original shape when freed from constraint. At this distance, and under these conditions, Louisiana spreads herself before the vision of the exile as the one enchanting plain, over which the law of summer reigns, and the breezes of the gulf play unbroken.

In these rugged and horrid mountains, the home of the rattlesnake and the catamount, a man desires enough level ground to stand on, and to look around on, but finds it not. He could walk better in many places if one leg was three or four inches shorter than the other, and lie better with a crooked spine. But there are compensations everywhere. The great elevation frees you from mosquitoes, flies and some other insects; but not from bed-bugs. It took these horrid chasms to open the bowels of the earth, from which flow these living streams of water. The soil is black and exceedingly fertile, though mixed with gravel; and all the fruits and vegetables grow to perfection. Soon the hand of man will smooth these rugged deformities, and the vine, the orchard and the smoothly shaven lawn will adorn the sides and crests of the mountains, while daisies, rock-hewn seats and grottoes, from which issue the sound of flowing waters, will occupy the valleys.

The rough rock makes a fine building-stone, and already some expensive hotels and costly churches have been constructed here. But the great business of the place is to prepare for invalids. For this, you have easy carriages, opening behind, finely trained horses, broad verandahs, shaded seats, etc.

The main fountain is lighted with gas, and bursts from the sides of the mountain through iron pipes. An incessant stream of invalids, with cups, pitchers and buckets, throng the place, quaffing the cooling draught, and imagining that it conveys health to their bones. Do the waters cure? The testimony of a thousand witnesses proclaim they do. Most of the population, it is said, is made up of restored invalids, who came here, began to improve, and went into business. The population is now six thousand. Everybody in this State believes in Eureka water.

There is a weekly class meeting, where the invalids assemble and give in their experience. Many of these talks are mingled, no doubt, with thanksgivings to the great Creator who placed here the means of curing their diseases. The churches seem to flourish here. The evangelist, Penn, is now at work with large attendance. Dr. Winfield is to preach here this week. Rev. Robert H. Read, well known in Louisiana, has an opera-house congregation, where he discoursed eloquently as in days of yore, though now seventy-four years of age. He says he is Methodist still, though employed to preach by the Congregationalists. I was glad to hear him allude so warmly to the old-time Southern planters, with many of whom, before the war, he was intimately acquainted. He has three married daughters, and appears to be well preserved, and well taken care of. His choir certainly furnishes most excellent church music.

Bro. B. Williams is our preacher—a fine-looking, earnest man, who says he does love Louisiana. He has completed a handsome new church, and has a growing Sunday-school and congregation.

Altogether, I may say Eureka is not a humbug.

Board may be had from four dollars per week to three dollars per day.

When the doctors give you up, come to Eureka.

JULY 11, 1887.

Meanderings and Back.

I went from Kosciusko to Starkville. There I halted for about two hours, and listened to some eloquent young men talking root-crops and ensilage. Great is the rejoicing of Mississippi over the good done by the Agricultural and Mechanical College, located at Starkville. The young men are well drilled in the manual of arms, and speak well. There were never seen finer-looking farmers in uniform. It costs only seventeen and a half dollars; and no farmer ought to grudge half a bale of cotton for it. As a result, the crops are everywhere splendid throughout Mississippi.

At Starkville I saw the famous "Gilderoy." Like other humorists (they say it is so), instead of being all smiles and laughter, he is solemn and sorry-looking. I wondered how a face like his could mask such batteries of humor as lay behind. But I found the explanation in his delightful family. A perpetual deliverance from stagnation of life's current is a family of nine. Everything has a be-nine appearance. Wordsworth was not immortally inspired when he wrote, "We Are Seven." He could not get that to rhyme all through till he wrote, "Two of us in the churchyard lie"—a place where everybody ought to keep mouth shut. Scarce seated, under the roof of the district parsonage, I begin to feel diaphragmatic distention, laterally breaking out into spasms as "Gilderoy" draws out his ball of yarn and goes to knitting one of those weird, laughable recitals which have made everybody smile aloud. He does this half a dozen times, and pulls it out just to let a learner "get the stitch." I was about to catch it when the train whistle broke off the interview. Mr. Editor, if you ever get the drop on "Gilderoy," drop in on him at Starkville, Miss.

I reached Macon the morning of Tuesday, July 5. The sun was just rising. A morning walk invited (no horse or buggy there) to the country home of childhood; four miles distant. I reached there in time for breakfast, which I ate with relish. As I was on the play-grounds of thirty years agone, many were the things, pleasant and sad, that were recalled. One was a voice from a crowd of negro men as I walked by. I turned, to recognize Tom, the foreman of the plantation back in the times when the negroes were slaves. Tom always said he was named for me, though he is four years my senior, and is a shade blacker, if possible, than midnight. But he reached out his hand eagerly as he ran up, and asked, "Aint that you?" "Of course it is," said I; "and it's you, too?" "Yes, sir; it's me; but I declare if I'd a thought it was you—you're as young lookin' as ever, but you're as gray-headed as old marster." The awkward you is poor Tom's last ditch in which the associations of slave and master, who were young together, can not die, yet a false sense of independent manhood can not let live. Age has not advanced to that point where it clutches, with the grip of death, those days which the heart has always voted happy, but over which pride of an external freedom has spread its venom all these years. But when Tom inquired after "Miss Sue" and "Mars Frank's children," the barriers went away before the breaking up of the great deep and its long-repressed fountains. And Tom said: "O, sir, won't you bring 'em back to see us sometimes?"—from the depths of a memory that did see the sun coming out of long eclipse ere it sank over the hills toward the slopes of that ocean which is the Pacific of immortality.

I had to preach. The old neighborhood is mostly under the ground. The grown-up children of playmates came around me, and grasped my hand. One of those playmates herself came leading two children—two and four years respectively—for me to baptize. I forgot at the time to ask why this ordinance had been so long deferred. The "days when we were young thegither" returned, as the sunny-faced little girl turned up her eyes into mine, and she said, with the loveliest lisp: "Mamma said you was a dood little boy—you's a dray-headed old man." O, that the "good little boy" had not died! Sometimes I half imagine he is living as I go where one calls out across the street the Christian name I bore when I played with the child's mother. I catch myself turning and reaching out my hand to another that has grown knotted or tremulous, and looking through spectacles into eyes that seem still to be in search of the "good little boy." I pray God they may find him, and bring him home.

I never fail to visit the graveyard—not that I "seek the living among the dead;" but I do seek the living from the dead. As two of the sons of father and mother stood by their graves, my brother said, "And this is what we are soon to be." As he said it, I left the ordinary construction of the language crippled in one leg, and constantly complaining in the other. For to wish death only to be free of temptation and care is to confess to weakness and love of self-indulgence. How many whining Christians get happy thinking of death and heaven only because they regard heaven as a place where it will cost them nothing to be as good as anybody—from Paul up! And that cripple leg on which we walk, with the help of the crutch, that in the next world we will not sin because the chance and the ability will be gone! Away with it! The reverie at my father's grave leads out along the line of Christ's promise to Martha—"Thy brother shall live again." The differential of infinity is but the multiple of the unit. The unit is the relation of brotherhood, and that a human reality—not the ghost invented by our distorted imaginings of the future life, from which every factor that entered here has been canceled. The question of condition over there is nothing except as it grows from the character of this life's relations. Sorrow, care, sinful desire, uncertainty and doubt are but the variations of the friction incident to the life that now is under the pressure of duty upon a conscience and nature strangely at variance. In the world beyond the character of life's machinery is changed, and its true relations so adjusted that friction disappears. The walls of heaven are not built like those of a prison to keep people in it who want to get out, but they are the adaptation of an immortal nature to a state of being that limits without cramping, and regulates without enslaving. But the living come from the dead. How luxuriant grows that tree whose roots feed on the humus of the fallen monarch of the age preceding! Everywhere the best life in the world draws its richest tints from the vanished life. These are the pledges of final redemption when the "creature that waiteth for the manifestations" shall "be delivered from bondage," and be admitted to the "liberty of the sons of God"—

"God who laps the generations one o'er other evermore
Makes a bridge whose piers and stringers link us to the other shore;
And the latest sons of Adam, locking hands with Abel, trace
Life's electric current thrilling every member of our race."

Heaven will be sweet, not because I am out of reach of sin, but because I shall not want to sin. Sorrow's face will wear the sheet-lightning that burst out of the storm-cloud; but the storm and the cloud will be hushed and vanished forever, save that its distant boom still lingers in the diapason of the anthems of the glorified. He is a poor man who can find no shrine this side Vernon or Westminster, and who feels no inspiration save where once shouted, "under the sulphurous canopy," the embattled hosts of freedom or glory. But richer than all estimate he who, at a parent's grave, hears again the words fall as from heaven—

"Bravely back to life's hard duty—God as man has tracked his maze,
And the wilderness repurchased shall become his land of praise;
Lo! the perished shall inherit the imperishable at last,
And the immortal bloom the brightest where the weeping mortal passed."

And so I am back, and at work.

T. A. S. A.

Notes.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate says that when the Methodist Episcopal Church started out to raise a million of dollars for missions its missionary debt amounted to $250,000. Last November the debt had been paid, and it had $50,000 to begin a new year's work. Instead of being a hindrance to the raising of a million dollars, the debt was not in the way at all. Some of our people have such a tender-footed faith that they say because we have a little missionary debt, crippled in establishing and maintaining missions, which are doing invaluable work, therefore, we should not enlarge our assessments upon the Conferences; and this argument or suggestion prevailed with the Board to some extent. The assessment is but a trifle larger than last year. The conscience of every Christian should rouse him to see that we must do better than raise the assessment if, as a church, we would preserve our self-respect. Let the cry be, "Nothing less than $500,000 this year for missions!"

Rev. Robert Newton Young, president of the Wesleyan Conference, not long since, speaking of the debt of their missionary society, said:

The debt is not the result of any reckless expenditure, far from that; not the result of any incompetent administration, far from that; for if ever there were men whose hearts are wrung with anxiety for the cause of God, they are the men who are at the head of our missionary executive. What we want is to get rid of the debt. It is not a debt that we are ashamed of, it is a debt forced upon us by the providence of God; forced upon us by openings which we could not resist. If we had resisted them we could not have looked upon the face of the church, we could not have listened for a moment to the wail of the heathen. The debt was forced upon us.

The officers of our Mission Board can say like words to these, and look calmly and conscientiously into the face of the church, and say: "You must pay this debt which has been forced upon us by the providence of God, and by openings which we could not resist."

Pursuing the subject further, Mr. Young said:

There is a sentiment in the report which, I think, touches the very core of our necessity, and the very core of our hope. The Secretary read something about looking out for the penny. Now, that is just what we have to look at. I am sure it is not safe for us as a society to rest on splendid gifts and donations. They are very acceptable. God send us many more of them! But we must never rely on splendid donations, though we have so many. We must not rely, either, on bequests, though I do not know that any one can do a grander thing than go home to-day and put a clause in his will that a certain sum of his earnings shall be handed over to our exchequer. What we have to depend on, under God, are the regular weekly contributions of our people.

There is the key-note whose undertone is to govern this whole mission business: "regular weekly contributions of our people."

In relation to the work of missions abroad, a sad fact was brought into notice in the Methodist May Meetings in London, which is thus alluded to by the Christian Advocate, of Belfast, Ireland:

One great feature of the May Meetings is the repeated testimony which has been given to the injury that strong drink does to missions. As was pointed out concerning India, people have been denying themselves, giving up their jewels and luxuries for the support of missions in that continent, while the government is nullifying all by sending out that which is utterly blighting the whole power of the gospel among the Hindoos. Similar statements to this were made regarding our treatment of the natives of Africa. All over the world strong drink is the enemy of missions. Many native races are by their own national habits and religion temperate. We are in many lands making them drunkards in the name of Christian civilization and under the patronage of the Union Jack.

The Lord never yet opened a door that the devil was not one of the first to enter.

A very curious story, in connection with the Wesleyan mission in South Central Africa, is told by the Irish Christian Advocate. Here it is:

It may be remembered that, some time ago, Mr. Watkins, without the sanction of the committee and upon his own responsibility, purchased the farm in South Central Africa, known as the "Good Hope Farm," which he considered prudent to annex to the other property which he had already acquired there because of the peculiarity of the system of land tenure in the district, and because it lay close to our other property. For this farm he put down the sum of £600, generously supplied by Lancashire. It now turns out that gold in considerable quantity has been found in it; but, of course, no idea can as yet be formed of the value. It may be fabulous for ought we know. Time alone will tell. At any rate, £10,000 is offered, and it is not likely Mr. Watkins will part with his mine for so small a figure.

A missionary society in possession of a gold mine is surely something "new under the sun!" God says "The gold and silver is mine;" and if he sees proper to put missionary societies in possession of it, who shall hinder? And would not they work those mines to the advantage of the world?

Seashore Camp Meeting.

Wednesday night, at 7:30 o'clock, as large an audience as at any beginning service of former years assembled under the expansive preaching-tent and listened attentively to the opening sermon. This was followed, the next day, by sermons from Rev. J. S. Rencher, of Mobile; Rev. C. F. Evans, D. D., of New Orleans, and Rev. James A. Parker, of Ruston. Friday, the preaching was in the following order: Evans, Rev. W. M. Leftwich, D. D., of Nashville; and Parker. On Saturday, Rev. T. F. Mangum, D. D., of Alabama, preached at 8:30 A. M.; Rev. J. A. Parker at 11:30 A. M., and Dr. Leftwich at night. Thursday afternoon, Dr. Leftwich held a most interesting children's meeting, with some bright conversions. On Sunday, at 8:30, Rev. J. S. Rencher preached; and at 11:30, Rev. H. C. Morrison, D. D., of Atlanta; at 4, Rev. Dr. Leftwich; and at 7:30, Rev. T. F. Mangum.

The trustees have the arrangements for the entertaining of visitors well in hand, and general satisfaction is expressed. The attendance of preachers is not as large as usual; but, as the meeting is to be of longer duration than usual, many will, no doubt, arrive later.

Many improvements have been added to the grounds during the past year, and strangers who have come on their first visit are agreeably surprised at the substantial appearance of the encampment. The surprises one meets with during a short stay are not few. Especially will they be met with at the daily experience meetings, where the heart is made glad and rejoices in the knowledge of old friends having been brought into Christ since the previous encampment. The spiritual ministrations are in excellent hands; Sawyer, Lamar and West are workmen who have been tried of the church and honored of God. These men of God in their working together seem to the watcher-on to be heavily burdened with a great desire for the salvation of the young.

Two days, twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh, have been set apart as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union Days. Mrs. Chapin, the superintendent of the Southern temperance work, is expected to be present; also Mrs. Merrick, the president of the Louisiana Union.

Prayer meetings have been held with fine results. Saturday there were some conversions at the altar; on the afternoon of Friday one having occurred at Fellelty Hall prayer meeting.

Sunday was a day of fat things, and the immense crowds were royally feasted. Dr. Rencher's sermon was deeply spiritual and found a hearty amen in every Christian there, and the sermon of Dr. Morrison, on the love of God, was among the one or two sermons that we can not forget during a life time. At 4 Dr. Leftwich preached on believing with the heart—a very clear, forcible and effective sermon. At night the sermon of Dr. T. F. Mangum was in the power of the Spirit. The altar was filled with mourners, and the mercy, grace and love of God in converting power swept the altar, and all were born into the kingdom.

The preachers and people got the biggest sort of a blessing, pressed down and running over, shouts on shouts going up from hearts filled brimful of glory and of God.

Doctor, you ought to be here. God is on the field, the blood of Christ is saving many deathless souls, and the truth as preached by all the six engaged brethren has been owned of the Holy Ghost. Glory to God! We are having a hallelujah time! S.

Notice.

The next session of the Holly Springs District Conference will meet at Cornersville, Marshall county, Miss., July 28, 1887. Those who come by rail will stop at Potts Camp Depot, Birmingham and Selma railway, and there will be conveyance there for them to Cornersville. Evangelist J. H. Collins is expected to be there, and spend a time during and after the Conference. We are expecting a pleasant and profitable time.

Fraternally,

J. H. SMITH, Pastor.

Many People refuse to take Cod

Liver Oil on account of its unpleasant taste. This difficulty has been overcome in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It being as palatable as milk, and the most valuable remedy known for the treatment of Consumption, Scrofula and Bronchitis, General Debility, Wasting Diseases of Children, Chronic Coughs and Colds, has caused physicians in all parts of the world to use it. Physicians report our little patients take it with pleasure. Try Scott's Emulsion and be convinced.

Personals.

Dr. J. D. Barbee, pastor of McKendree Church, Nashville, has been chosen Book Agent, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. McFerrin.

"The band begins to play." The Pacific Methodist, of July 7, has struck up the mournful notes of the requiem of the new hymn book. An ante-natal dirge beats "funeral obsequies" all to pieces.

A brother—a college man—writes a communication for the paper, and on the opposite side of same sheet a letter to the publisher! Did anybody ever! Paper must be scarce!

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. J. A. Bowen, at Ocean Springs, July 9. The long lingering, painful sickness has been succeeded by everlasting rest and peace among the glorified.

A. S. Barnes, the head of the school book house in New York City, has given $40,000 to erect a building for the Young Men's Christian Association in Cornell University.

George Muller has reached England after a preaching tour of 37,000 miles. He visited this country, Australia, and New Zealand. He is strong and hale, and eighty-two years old.

The youngest college professor in the land is Willis H. Bucock, of Hampden-Sidney, who is just twenty years of age.

Are you getting ready to do the most earnest praying and the most genuine self-denial of your life, during the week of prayer and self-denial? We are listening to hear of the consecration of thousands of souls during that solemn week.

It is again going the rounds of the papers that the editor's son, C. B. Carter has been licensed to preach. Lest the public should come to the conclusion that this is the second son so licensed, we make the statement that this is the same boy who was licensed April 25, a note of which was published in this paper, April 28.

Dr. John C. Gordy, known all over Louisiana as the grand lecturer for masonry for many years, died at his home in Franklin, La., July 10, aged seventy-eight years.

Rev. F. Ball, a member of the White River Conference, died recently. "He was earnest in his good work."

Several brethren passed through the city last week on their way to the Seashore Camp Meeting, to recuperate wasted energies under the united influence of sea breeze and gospel.

Rev. Q. A. Oats, of Hebron circuit, North Mississippi Conference, after lingering at death's door for twenty-eight days with typhoid fever, is up again, and it is to be hoped that he will soon be at his work.

Hon. W. H. Goodale, of Baton Rouge, returning from a tour of lecturing on prohibition, gave us a call last Friday. He visited Rayne, Plaquemine Brulee, Opelousas, Washington and New Iberia. He is much encouraged at the prospects of the cause in these places. The prohibition sentiment is evidently growing, even in lower Louisiana. The convention, to meet at Alexandria, August 17, promises to be a great success. We hope the people will send delegates from every point in the State.

The responses to Bro. Lambuth's call are coming in with every mail. Let the brethren push this matter earnestly and judiciously, and by the time the week of prayer and self-denial comes, we will be in a condition to enter upon it in a proper spirit and with hearts to receive God's intended blessing. Up to time of going to press we have received in answer to Dr. Lambuth's call $132 25. Let the readers of the ADVOCATE send in their dollars promptly, and we will soon send relief to our noble band in Japan.

Collegiate Institute of Baton Rouge.

MR. EDITOR: We have had in this City of Hills a regular feast of educational concerns; seven school exhibitions in ten days, male, female and mixed. I have neither time nor inclination to write an account of them all; but will concentrate upon, perhaps, the oldest in the State—certainly, the oldest in this city—The Magruder Collegiate Institute for boys. This institution closed its fortieth session on June 30, with a most interesting entertainment of song, recitation, tableaux, and play. The stage was erected under the large oaks that shade the campus, with seating for 1,500 persons. It was a beautiful night, every seat was taken, the city band was present and discoursed stirring music at intervals during the evening.

The young gentlemen of the institute acquitted themselves with great credit, evincing thorough instruction with perfect training. There is one notable fact about the instruction to be had at this school; the boys are taught to be gentlemen. The Professor has a peculiar method and a marked ability to polish up a boy and bring out the good that may be in him. I do not know his secret nor his method; but it is certainly a success.

One of the most pleasing features of the evening was the presentation of a portrait of the Professor to the school by Mr. William Garig, of this city. The presentation was made in a most felicitous manner by A. E. Read, Esq., an attorney of this place, who is one of the alumni of this institute. He spoke in feeling terms of his schoolboy days, and of his tender regard and life-long obligation to the old Professor for the patience and care with which he had led his youthful steps in the ways of knowledge and virtue, and how that now he had committed to the same hand and heart the training of his son, who then stood in the rank of the school. The whole scene was impressive, and beautifully illustrative of a life-work in the noble occupation of teaching. This tableaux had not been placed upon the program; was a surprise to both the audience, the school and the professor, who, when called upon to act his part, well illustrated one of his boys with a Monday morning's recitation; he tried to, but he could not.

The band came to his relief, and amid the strains of sweet music the audience dispersed, each one pleased and profited by the evening's entertainment. T. K. F.

Week of Prayer and Self-Denial.

The undersigned were requested by the Mission Board to prepare a programme for the week of prayer and self-denial. After corresponding with Bishop Galloway, who suggested the movement and has had it on his heart and in his prayers, we give the following as the result:

We are having printed a leaflet containing recitative exercises, giving in condensed form information respecting our various mission fields. We will be glad to furnish the programme and these exercises to all the preachers who will send their addresses, stating the number they will need.

TOPICS SUGGESTED FOR EXHORTATION AND PRAYER—AUGUST 7-14, 1887.

Sunday, August 7—Sermons: Subject, Self-Examination. 4 P. M.—Experience meeting—methods of work for the week.

Monday, August 8—Self-Denial: What it is—scriptural view of—how may we reduce personal, domestic, and other secular expenditures in view of the exigences of our mission fields and the demands of God upon us—testimonies concerning. Offerings.

Tuesday, August 9—The Church and Missions: Her commission to preach the gospel to every creature a privilege and duty. Prayer for greater zeal in service, more pity for the perishing, the increase of foreign laborers and a more unselfish consecration to the home work of missions. Offerings.

Wednesday, August 10—The Fields We Occupy: Our work and workers in China, Japan, Brazil, Mexico, Indian Territory, and the great West. Offerings.

Thursday, August 11—Woman's Work for Woman: History of the movement, fields occupied, work accomplished, and reflex influence. Offerings.

Friday, August 12—Missions and the Children of the Church: Importance of early and careful training on the subject in the home circle—its place in the Sunday-school. Offerings.

Saturday, August 13—Thanksgiving: For work accomplished, for opening doors, for barriers removed, for civil protection of missionaries, for increasing liberality, and for the gracious tokens of the work of the Holy Spirit at home and abroad. Offerings.

Sunday, August 14—9 A. M.—Self-denial offerings in the Sunday-school. 11 A. M.—Sermon: "Thy Kingdom Come." Offerings. 4 P. M.—Love-feast.

IMMENSE BARGAINS.—The great piano dealer, Philip Werlein, 125 Canal St., is now offering some of the greatest bargains in pianos and organs. This popular merchant means business, and he has put prices of pianos and organs down so low as to put them within the reach of all. You will be astonished to see what money can be saved by dealing at this popular house. Indeed, it is a source of pleasure to have dealings with such a house as that of Philip Werlein. Now, that the prices have been reduced, and terms offered are so convenient, every one will avail himself of the opportunity. Write to Mr. Werlein for catalogues and prices.

A very old lady on her death-bed, in a penitential mood, said, "I have been a great sinner more than eighty years, and didn't know it." An old darkey woman who had lived with her a long time, exclaimed: "Las! I knowed it all the time."

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden suppers and others. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome fare, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.

Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.

Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

Dyspepsia Vanishes appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Rheumatism Is undoubtedly a blood disease caused by an excess of the lactic acid in the blood. Where there is perfect filtration of the blood there can be no rheumatism. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA will remove the poison, supply the acids and relieve the pains.

Scrofula Is caused directly by impurities in the blood, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, by purifying the blood, forces the impurities from the system.

Kidneys Through the Kidneys flow the waste fluid containing poisonous matter. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained and poisons the blood, causing pain in the small of the back and loins, flushes of heat, chills. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic, causing the kidneys to resume their natural functions.

The Liver By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood resolvent.

A BOY'S PROMISE.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

The school was out, and down the street
A noisy crowd came thronging;
The hue of health, and gladness sweet,
To every face belonging.
Among them strolled a little lad,
Who listened to another,
And mildly said, half grave, half sad:
"I can't—I promised mother."

A shout went up, a ringing shout,
Of boisterous derision;
But not one moment left in doubt
That manly, brave decision.

"Go where you please, do what you will,"
He calmly told the others;
"But I shall keep my word, boys, still:
I can't—I promised mother."

Ah! who could doubt the future course
Of one who thus had spoken?
Through manhood's struggle, gain and loss,
Could faith like this be broken?
God's blessing on that steadfast will,
Unyielding to another,
That bears all jeers and laughter still,
Because he promised mother.

Let all the little cousins be sure to read the "Sermon on Play," which we publish for them this week.

Who of the little cousins can work out this sum in addition? Take the figures 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 0, and add them together and make 100 without using any figure twice.

MR. EDITOR: This is the first time I have written to the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and, as I take a great pleasure in reading the young folks' letters, I hope that some of them will appreciate the same in reading mine. We are living on the Amite river, near Adams' Church. We have a good Sabbath-school. Mr. William King is our superintendent. He fills the place as a prompt Christian. Bro. M. L. Burton is our pastor. He preaches twice a month for us, and the people are well pleased with him. I will now answer Jimmie Terrel's question: By reading eighty-four verses of the Bible each day, it will take 358½ days to read it through. I will also give an answer to Blanche Lankin's question: Judas betrayed Jesus with a kiss. I will close by asking, What became of Judas, and who was chosen in the place of Judas? I hope to see my letter in print. Wishing your dear paper much success, I remain,

Your little friend.

FORD BADON.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old. We have a pleasant little village, and the prospect of its being a city some day, as there is plenty of iron here. We have an interesting Sabbath-school. It is small; but a few good members are worth more than a number of sorry ones. The teachers take a great interest in the children. I think we are highly honored by having Bro. Hodge to preach for us this year, and I hope we will pay him, as he is worthy. We are trying to get the missionary quilt done by the last of July. I will answer Fannie Hansey's question: The children of Israel wept thirty days after Moses' death. I will ask a question: What did Abraham give to the angels to eat that destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah?

Your little friend,

BULA.

DUCK HILL, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I have never written a letter to your good paper, but see so many from the little people, I thought I would try my hand. My step-papa takes your valuable paper. I enjoy reading it very much, especially the young folks' column. I go to Sunday-school. I am not going to school now on account of ill health. I will answer Sallie A. Turner's question: "Fox" is found in Judges xv, 4. I will ask a question: Who was fed by the ravens? I will be thirteen in September. I remain as ever, Your little friend.

EDDIE BENNETT.

WALTHALL, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As you were so kind as to publish my last letter, I concluded to write again. I am going to school to my cousin, Robert Germany. We all like him very much. I will answer some of the cousins' questions: "Jehovah" occurs in the Bible 6,055 times. "Grandmother" is found in II Timothy i, 5. John was the beloved disciple. I will close by asking the cousins a question: Where in the Bible is the word "grasshopper" found? I remain,

Your little friend.

Sermon on Play.

Play is neither idleness nor folly. It is one of the many good things which have come into your life from heaven. It is a gift from God. It is one of his wonderful works. When he made the beautiful earth and the sky, and the body and soul of man, he made the happy play of childhood. It is a part of your life as truly as prayer is, as truly as the soul itself is. And it is part of the life of children all the world over. If it were possible to journey with the sunlight, and see all that it sees, and go round and round the globe with it, we should everywhere see children at play.

Now, the first thing I want you to see, is that this playing of you boys and girls in the streets, or anywhere else, is a pleasure to God. He is a God so kind and loving that he delights in everything innocent that is a delight to you. Just as he delights in the songs of birds and in the color and fragrance of flowers he delights in the play of childhood. It was because he was thinking of it as a pleasure that he sent Zechariah to tell the builders of Jerusalem the good news that children should soon be playing in the streets.

I know a poet who made a song on the happiness of poor children at their first day of play in Spring. All the winter they were shut up in their homes for want of shoes. But now the winter was past, and the sun shining and the air warm. And "the bairnies," barefooted but happy, "were out on the pavement again."

"Their wee, shoeless feet have forgotten their pain.
As they walk in the sun on the pavement again."

Something like this must be the joy of God as he looks down on the same sight.

God has made play a part of your life because he wants you to be strong. He has work waiting in the years to come for every boy and girl on the earth. And although it is not all the same kind of work, all of it is work which will want strength for the doing. Therefore he will not always have you at tasks. He has divided the time for tasks with the time for play. He will have you out in the open air. By your games he will have your body in endless motion. You shall run and not be weary. You shall leap and dance and race and climb, so that every part of you may be made strong for the work that lies before you in life.

For another thing God wants you to have a happy gateway into life. Nobody can tell beforehand whether your after life will be happy. But God in his love has secured that the time of play shall be happy. In games you are joined together, just as we who are old are in our toils. The playground is a little world. You can not have any pleasure in any of its games unless you try to have the others playing with you as happy as yourself. To be unkind, unjust, unfair, or ungenerous in a game is to spoil it or bring it to an end. Surely this is a new, rich addition to our knowledge of God, when we discover that the same kind Father who gave his Son to die for us, that he might deliver us from sin and death, made the joy and play of boys and girls in the streets and in the house. May you carry something of the joy of it all through life with you, and may you remember that God has been so good to you, that he has set your life between two worlds of joy—the world of your happy childhood, and the world that awaits you in heaven.—Rev. Alexander Macleod, D. D.

The Experience of Mrs. Peters.

Mrs. Peters had ills,
Mrs. Peters had chills,
Mrs. Peters was sure she was going to die;
They dosed her with pills,
With powders and squills,
With remedies wet, and with remedies dry.
Many medicines lured her,
But none of them cured her,
Their names and their number nobody could tell;
And she soon might have died,
But some "Pellets" were tried,
That acted like magic, and then she got well.

The magic "Pellets" were Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets (the original Little Liver Pills). They cured Mrs. Peters, and now she wouldn't be without them.

He who waits to do a great deal of good at once will never do any.—Johnson.

The Ounce of Prevention.

The satisfaction of feeling safe from catching any disease from drinking water, from impure air, from a sick person, from contact with foul clothing, infection or contagion from any source, is complete and all anxiety allayed by the use of Darbys' Prophylactic Fluid. A bottle will give more safety, comfort and confidence than all the doctoring in the world.

Household.

Make the Farm Home Pleasant.

Yes, make it so pleasant that the growing boys and girls will not be looking forward to the time when they will be old enough to leave the farm in search of a pleasanter place. We know of a well-to-do farmer, having eight children, who, as soon as they are old enough to support themselves, leave their home. Of the five boys, not one remains on the farm. They have gone to clerkships and other positions in preference to staying on the much-despised farm. A glance into the home may account somewhat for this. There has never been any effort to make it attractive for the children. The parents' aim has been to work and save, with scarcely a thought that their children had any other needs than food and clothing. They are active, bright-minded boys and girls. It is no wonder that the dullness and monotony becomes unendurable.

The farmer does not hesitate to spend money in farm improvements, in fine stock, or in anything that will advance his financial interest; but any outlay for the children's pleasure is regarded as unnecessary and extravagant.

Children can not feel that sense of proprietorship in the farm and its profits that is a stimulant to the heads of the household, and something is needed to take its place. Some personal property, even if a chicken or pig, is a strong incentive. Children are sportive by nature—all young animals are—and some diversion is essential for leisure hours; otherwise their minds will wander off and dwell on the attractions supposed to pertain to village and city life.

A few dollars each year invested in reading matter will not only supply pleasant employment for leisure hours, but also the means of mental improvement as well. There are so many excellent, entertaining publications for the young, and at such low prices, that no family in which there are children should be without one or more. But parents should discriminate carefully between a good and a bad class of reading matter, for there is a large amount of a flashy, sensational character, wholly unfit for the young to read.

There is no reason why a country home should not be a place of pleasure and contentment to every member. There is a freshness and freedom in farm life that can not be enjoyed when a person is surrounded by brick walls. With pleasant mental recreation for leisure hours there need be no unhappy memories of the farm to carry through life.—American Agriculturist.

TEMPER AT HOME.—I have peered into quiet "parlors," where the carpet is clean and not old, and the furniture polished and bright; into "rooms," where the chairs are neat and the floor carpetless; into "kitchens," where the family live and the meals are cooked and eaten, and the boys and girls are as blithe as the sparrows in the thatch overhead, and I see that not so much wealth and learning, nor clothing, nor servants, nor toil, nor idleness, nor town, nor country, nor station, as tone and temper, that render homes happy or wretched. And I see, too, that in town or country, good sense and God's grace make life what no teachers or accomplishments, or means or society, can make it—the opening stave of an everlasting psalm; the fair beginning of an endless existence; the goodly, modest, well-proportioned vestibule to a temple of God's building that shall never decay, wax old, or vanish away.—Dr. John Hall.

"I Ought to Write You That My Wife is Dead."

This is a sad duty that many a widower is obliged to perform, but in the following instance the writer was not a widower. It is from a farmer in Tra. Jasper Co., Iowa, and is dated Feb. 8, 1886:

"I ought to write you that my wife is dead, in order that the predictions of the physicians should become true; but, thank God, she lives, and is getting better, as fast as could be reasonably expected; is up all day generally, and is able to get around quite lively; appetite good. Did not get the beef extract, as you advised, but killed a fat heifer, and ample justice is done to the steak."

Those who want to know more about the Compound Oxygen, which achieved such felicitous results in this case, will do well to write to Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., and ask for their brochure, which is sent free to applicants.

MISCELLANEOUS.

No Universal Remedy

has yet been discovered; but, as at least four-fifths of human diseases have their source in Impure Blood, a medicine which restores that fluid from a depraved to a healthy condition comes as near being a universal cure as any that can be produced. Ayer's Sarsaparilla affects the blood in each stage of its formation, and is, therefore, adapted to a greater variety of complaints than any other known medicine.

Boils and Carbuncles,

which defy ordinary treatment, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla after a comparatively brief trial.

Mr. C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., writes that for years he was afflicted with boils which caused him much suffering. These were succeeded by carbuncles, of which he had seven at one time. He then began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after taking three bottles, the carbuncles disappeared, and for six years he has not had even a pimple.

That insidious disease, Scrofula, is the fruitful cause of innumerable complaints. Consumption being only one of many equally fatal. Eruptions, ulcers, sore eyes, glandular swellings, weak and wasted muscles, a capricious appetite, and the like, are pretty sure indications of a scrofulous taint in the system. Many otherwise beautiful faces are disfigured by pimples, eruptions, and unsightly blotches, which arise from impure blood, showing the need of Ayer's Sarsaparilla to remedy the evil.

All sufferers from blood disorders should give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial,—avoiding all powders, ointments and washes, and especially cheap and worthless compounds, which not only fail to effect a cure, but more frequently aggravate and confirm the diseases they are fraudulently advertised to remedy.

TROTTER—DUKEMENIER—On the eighth instant, after a few days' severe illness, MISS LUCY TROTTER, daughter of William and Sarah Trotter, of Vinton, Miss., died, leaving a number of relatives and friends to mourn her early death. Soon after her burial, MRS. IDA DUKEMENIER, her widowed sister, was stricken with the same fearful disease—congestion—and after several days of suffering was called from the scenes and responsibilities of earth, on the nineteenth instant. She seemed conscious from the first that she could not survive the attack. She was not afraid to die, but regretted to leave her little daughter "Jimmie," about eleven years of age.

Sister Dukemenier attended almost every service held in her church during this year, and early manifested an interest in the Sunday-school work. Though naturally quiet and retiring, she was earnest and persevering amid all the discouragements that attended her in the good work she had undertaken. She received aid from the Holy Spirit.

Two weeks prior to her death a quarterly meeting was held at Vinton. Her little daughter, for the first time, partook of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. It was a pleasing evidence of maternal influence. It must have quickened the mother's spiritual pulse, and no doubt will continue to be a happy memory to the child throughout life. BENJ. S. RAYNER.

NESMITH—Died, at Brandywine, Miss., on May 5, 1887, MRS. F. C. NESMITH, in the sixty-fourth year of her age. She was born in Jefferson county, in September, 1829, and for the past seventeen years has been a resident of Hazlehurst, Miss.

She joined the Methodist Church in early life—in early girlhood laying her heart at the Masters' shrine, and through the long years since she has been worshiping there. She was the mother of eleven children—three of whom are now at rest in the land beyond. She possessed all those characteristics which constitute true Christian womanhood. As a neighbor, she was kind, obliging and charitable; as a member of the church, she was always at her post of duty, and a constant hearer of the Word. For the last five years her life was one of suffering; but her patience and resignation to the will of God were remarkable. Not once through the many months of suffering and pain was she heard to murmur. She said she was ready and willing to die, and her only request was that we all meet her in heaven. Peacefully and quietly she passed from earth to her home in heaven, for she is now at home with the loved ones who had gone before.

She was laid by the side of her husband, who, six years ago, preceded her to the better land. Yes, after all her trials and suffering, she is now at rest, and is standing with God's angels around the great white throne.

A FRIEND.

NELSON—The following resolutions were adopted by the Sunday-school of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Hickory, Miss., in regard to the death of MISS LULA J. NELSON.

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to take from us one of our most consistent members, Sister Lulu J. Nelson, who died June 8, 1887, she being a model member of the Sunday-school from early childhood, practicing in her daily life the lessons taught her there, thus securing the love and respect of all her acquaintances; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Sister Nelson this Sunday-school has lost a loved and faithful member, a true and most exemplary Christian, and that we, as a school, will, by the grace of God, imitate her Christ-like example and be prepared as she was to meet the messenger of death whenever it may come.

Resolved, That we lament the death of our departed sister, and extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved husband and parents.

MRS. A. E. HARPER, for Com.

BELEW—Died, near Wanita Mills, May 25, 1887, little JAY, youngest son of T. Y. and M. A. Belew. For nearly five years this lovely bud made glad the hearts of devoted parents, and then, as a "thief in the night," came the "angel reaper" and claimed him for his own. Oh! how very, very sad their home without dear little Jay! But why question the will of a loving Father? When we walk in a flower garden, we instinctively cull the most lovely buds and flowers from the parent stem. Thus Jesus often sees fit to take from us our darling little ones—"for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." COUSIN LILY.

HUGHEY—WILLIAM P. HUGHEY was born in South Carolina, May 25, 1831. When he was quite small his parents moved with him to Coosa county, Alabama, where he lived till 1851, when he came to West Alabama. He was married to Miss Nancy D. Brown, January 6, 1859; joined the Methodist Church in 1860; was converted while a soldier in the late war. He was a faithful and consistent member of the church from the time of his conversion till his death, which occurred June 16, 1887. He had been afflicted for several years, and was confined to his room for several months before his death. He lingered and suffered long, but never murmured nor complained.

The writer visited him often during his sickness, and talked with him concerning death and the future. He expressed himself as being ready, only abiding the Master's time. During the last days of his sickness his suffering was intense; but he was perfectly resigned to the will of God. Just before his death he was heard to quote from the Scriptures, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." He has left a large family and circle of relations and friends to mourn his loss. But they sorrow not as those who have no hope, knowing their loss is his eternal gain.

BERRY—LAURA JOSEPHINE BERRY, daughter of Dr. Holden G. and Charlotte Evans, was born February 20, 1832; moved to Rankin county, Miss., in 1849, and died, of remittent malarial fever, at Cooper's Wells, June 9, 1887. She was married to J. B. Berry, March 12, 1851. Bro. Berry died March 23, 1885. Happily married, happy life, happy death; ere this they have met again. Sister Berry joined the Methodist Church, South, very young, and lived an earnest Christian life. The flame shone out steadily, fervently, and was only dimmed as she entered into the more glorious light of the Savior. She regretted to leave her children (what mother does not?), but she felt to die was gain. The church and community here have lost much by her death; but the fervor of her happy contented face, her unassuming life, her sweet, gentle voice, will, as a heavenly benediction, remain with us. Six children, all grown but one, all in the church but two, are left. When, where, how will they all meet again? God of the fatherless, Savior of the motherless, bring them to thy house above.

L. P. MEADOR.

GOD'S HUSBANDRY.—How wonderful are the spiritual lessons taught by common and familiar things! Let the minister of the gospel go to the successful farmer and learn how to till the soil of the human heart. It runs naturally, like every uncultivated soil, to briars and thorns. There is no such thing as native goodness in the world any more than there are native wheat fields. Men must be told again and again, and told with emphasis, to break up the fallow ground. They must be exhorted to repent and to keep repenting as long as they live. The old divines talked about the "law work" in conversion, and they were right. The law is the plow. Unless the heart is mellowed by it there is no soil for the good seed. We want more preaching about self-denial and crucifixion to the world. There is in our day too much sowing among thorns. The good seed is so choked by the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches that it does not bear fruit to perfection.

And let the minister learn from the farmer to get the best seed and to get it clean. There is too much mixing of philosophy and sentiment with the gospel. It is the Word that we are to sow—the Word, pure and simple. Preaching about the gospel is like sowing the husk that encloses the grain instead of the grain itself. And having sown the good seed, it must be protected and cultivated as soon as it germinates. The preacher must be a pastor. He must take especial care of the tender plants of righteousness.—Obadiah Oldschool, in Interior.

Is Life Worth Living?

That depends upon the Liver, for if the Liver is inactive the whole system is out of order—the breath is bad, digestion poor, head dull or aching, energy and hopefulness gone, the spirits are depressed, a heavy weight exists after eating, with general despondency and the blues. The Liver is the housekeeper of the health; and a harmless, simple remedy that acts like Nature, does not constipate afterwards or require constant taking, does not interfere with business or pleasure during its use, makes Simmons Liver Regulator a medical perfection.

I have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. Have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, and none of them gave more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved, but cured.

WHAT BECOMES OF ALL THE PINS.—The manufactories of Birmingham, which hold the first rank in the pin industry, are said to produce about 37,000,000 of pins per day! The output of other pin factories in this country is about 17,000,000 per day, thus making a grand daily total of 54,000,000 of pins for England alone. In France they make about 20,000,000 per day, while in Holland, Germany, and other countries, they produce about 10,000,000. The European production of pins is therefore about 84,000,000 daily, which appears so very large a number, that one naturally asks, "What do we do with all the pins?" It is seldom that a pin is broken, or spoiled, or even worn out, but often they are lost. In fact, there is perhaps no small domestic article that one can think of, of which there is so much waste, by loss, as in pins. It is so small and insignificant an article that few people would take the trouble to stoop and pick one up; and if a few are lost daily in every household in this way, collectively the number which disappears will be very large. It is probable, therefore, that pins disappear from circulation by loss, and consequently that, roughly speaking, 84,000,000 of pins are lost every day in Europe. Taking the population of Europe as 240,000,000, it would appear that one pin is not lost by each individual every day, but on the average, as nearly as possible on every third day; but if all the world participates in this losing of pins, then it would seem, after all, that we are not very prodigal of pins. The loss of pins represents more than a thousand pounds (£1000) per day. In the factories the pins are made faster than one can count them. The machines employed are so perfect, that they cut wire into pieces of the right length, head these pieces, point them, polish them, sort them out, and stick them into papers all in rows; to such a pitch has our mechanical ingenuity reached! A machine of this kind, so far as pin-making is concerned, appears to have life, so rapid and precise are its movements.—The World of Wonders.

THE AGE OF MAN.—A significant discussion took place on May 25 at the fortnightly meeting of the Geological Society, and which turned on the antiquity of man. The veteran geologist, Prof. Prestwich, F. R. S., disputed the large measures of time claimed for the Glacial period. He maintained that the close of this period was rather 8,000 than 80,000 years since, and that Neolithic man (i. e., the maker of stone implements) first appeared in Europe 3,000 or 4,000 years B. C. Dr. Evans, a high authority on the matter, contested the evidence recently adduced from Wales of a pre-Glacial man. Dr. Geikie stated that Sir. W. Thomson had enormously reduced his own estimate of geological time.—London Christian.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

In the course of his debate in the House of Commons, Mr. Dillon, attacking the clauses of the land bill seriatim, declared that the first dealing with the cases of the lease holders was the only one which promised to be beneficial in its operation. The others would make eviction easy, destroy the confidence of the tenantry in land courts, and place in the landlord's hands a new and irresistible engine of eviction.

The Sultan persists in his refusal to sign the convention with England in reference to Egypt in its present form, notwithstanding that he is urgently advised to ratify it by both Italy and Germany.

The condition of the German Crown Prince, who has returned to London from the Isle of Wight, continues to improve. His voice is clear and has almost regained its normal strength. The condition of the larynx is also improved.

The resignation of the Balkan regents was refused by the Sobranje. They will, therefore, remain in office pending the action of the powers respecting the election.

Frederick Krupp, the great gun manufacturer of Prussia, died on July 14.

The celebration of the fall of the Bastile was conducted in an orderly manner in Paris.

The special envoy to the Porte, Sir Henry Wolffe, has been recalled. The Sultan will not sign. The mission was a failure. Cost $150,000.

A terrible accident occurred in St. Thomas, Ontario, at the crossing of the Grand Trunk and Michigan Central railroad, on July 15. An excursion train on the Grand Central ran into a passing freight train on the Michigan Central, made up of a number of cars laden with oil. The engine crashed through an oil car and set everything in a blaze. A number of persons perished in the flames. Nine bodies were taken from the ruins.

Russia has replied to the circular note in relation to the Bulgarian question issued by the Porte. The reply states that, while there is personally no objection to Prince Ferdinand as ruler of Bulgaria, Russia declines to accept the decision of the present Sobranje. Germany, Austria and Italy reply that they will accept any solution of the question which is based on the Berlin Treaty.

Slight earthquake shocks were felt in Sicily and along the Italian coast on the seventeenth. Mount Etna is in a state of eruption. No damage is reported.

Archbishop Walsh, of Dublin, is endeavoring to induce the government to suspend further evictions in Ireland until the land bill has been passed by Parliament.

The Grand Vizier of Turkey has resigned because of a dispute with the Sultan.

DOMESTIC.

President and Mrs. Cleveland attended the celebration at Clinton, N. Y., on July 13.

The thirteenth was the hottest day of the season in New York. Ninety-six degrees at 3:30 P. M., and eighty-three degrees at midnight. The suffering in the tenement district was dreadful. There were six cases of sunstroke.

The result of the recent cosmic disturbances in Mexico is an active volcano, about twelve miles, as the crow flies, from Bovispo, in the state of Sonora, in the extreme northwest corner of the Mexican Republic. It is the only active volcano in North America.

A heavy storm in New York, on the seventeenth, caused great damage and scattered the vessels on the bay. A number of lives lost among the pleasure seekers on the water.

Jake Sharp, of Broadway franchise fame, recently convicted, was sentenced on July 14 to four years' imprisonment, and fined $5,000. The prisoner was remanded to Ludlow Street Jail, pending his removal to Sing Sing, the Supreme Court refusing to stay the proceedings.

An oral hearing will be granted on August 15 by the Secretary of the Interior of the case of the Canal Bank vs. the State of Louisiana.

Up to Saturday, July 16, there had been 119 cases of fever and thirty deaths at Key West.

The heat of Sunday was the most intense that has been experienced in years, and was widespread. In Philadelphia it was 102 degrees in the shade. In New Orleans the temperature was: highest, 91 degrees; lowest, 71 degrees.

The count of the cash and securities in the Treasurer's office, which began May 23, will probably be concluded this week, as only the gold coins remain to be counted. So far as is known, not a single penny's deficiency has yet been found.

The heat of Monday was intense in the principal cities of the Union, and in some very fatal. Twenty-three deaths were caused by heat in Philadelphia; twelve in Richmond; six in Cincinnati; six in Baltimore; four in Louisville; thermometer reached 103 degrees at Charleston.

David L. Wightman, secretary of the Cleveland Humane Society, died in Cleveland, on the eighteenth, at the age of seventy years.

"Christ Before Pilate."

July Periodicals.

—Popular Science Monthly has Economic Disturbance, by David A. Wells; Human Brain Weight, by Dr. Sims; Earthquakes, by G. H. Darwin; Mental Differences of Men, by G. J. Romanes; and other articles, ranging all the way from "Over-Education" to the "North American Lakes." D. Appleton & Co., New York. $5.

—The Eclectic opens with an embellishment of Venice. The articles are all of the first order, being reprints from the English periodicals. There is no better monthly than the Eclectic. E. R. Pelton, New York. $5.

—American Art is as full as usual of interesting things for artists and amateurs. American Art Magazine Company, Boston. $2 50.

—Scribner's Magazine is at the front among the first in the land. The Unpublished Letters of Thackeray are continued in this number, and also Illustrations of Napoleon and His Times. The Physical Proportions of the Typical Man, by Dr. A. Sargent, will command attention. Other articles help to make an interesting number. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Price, $3.

—The Chautauquan is filled with articles from such writers as John Burroughs, Bishop Hurst, Frances E. Willard, Helen Campbell, and others. This number has many good things to satisfy the varied tastes of various people. The program for the coming assembly at Chautauqua is published in full. Dr. T. L. Flood, editor and proprietor, Meadville, Penn. Price, $1 50 for ten numbers.

—Cassell's Family Magazine has a tempting table for July reading, and all who are fortunate enough to procure this number will enjoy the repast. Cassell & Co., 739, 741 Broadway, New York. Price, $1 50.

—Babyhood we recommend as the magazine for our readers who are pursuing the high and holy calling of bringing up children. Babyhood Publishing Company, 5 Beekman street, New York. $1 50 a year.

—Outing is full of bicycling, canoeing, buck boarding, hurdle raring and other kindred matters. Published at 140 Nassau street, New York City. $3 a year.

In New York and Pennsylvania 53,000 oil wells have been drilled since the discovery of petroleum, at a cost of $200,000,000. These wells have produced 310,000,000 barrels of oil, sold at the wells for $500,000,000.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

A Treasure.

Something that will instruct the little ones, and at the same time entertain and delight during the dull hours, is "The Pansy." Only one dollar per year. Parents, make some self-denial, and subscribe. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Mass., publishers.

The Southern Cultivator.

From this date we will receive subscriptions for the ADVOCATE and Southern Cultivator for $2 75, postage prepaid. Subscribers wishing Dickson's System of Farming, in connection with the above arrangement, will send twenty-five cents extra, or $3 for the three publications, postage prepaid. Unless cash accompanies all orders, no attention will be paid to same. No reduction allowed for post-office orders or registered letters.

HUGH JAMIESON, JR.,
Publisher.

The exports of wheat from the Atlantic ports and California and Oregon, for the year ending June 30, have been 155,756,283 bushels. The home consumption is said to have been 335,000,000 bushels.

A shattered frame may be reinvigorated by that wonderful tonic, Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier. It enriches the blood, and vitalizes and strengthens the whole body.

EDUCATIONAL.

Mansfield Female College.
1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. D. F. Beddie, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and bring with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term will be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of the body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 288 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

A FABLE.

BY M. E. A. STONE.

A low-grown vine had neared a friendly fence,
Hu), finding there her eager runners stayed,
Bewailed the fate that kept her bloom this side
The garden's pale, hid by the hindering shade.

Whereat, one struggling tranch, for all the rest
Took up the challenge, given free and fair—
For lo! its tendrils find the rude, rough edge,
And clasped thereon, it climbs to bloom and bear!

Make thou the hindrance in thy lot
Faith's ladder upward from the earth:
Ling not the ground—lay hold and rise,
Achieving so thy right of birth.

A Prohibition Tour.

BY HON. W. H. GOODALE.

MR. EDITOR: I have just returned from a nine days' trip along the Morgan railroad, which was to me such a "nine days' wonder" that I must write and tell your readers about it. Bro. H. O. White wanted to see me so bad—he is a man of excellent taste, you know—that he worked up a sort of "lecture tour" for me in the parishes of Iberia, Acadia and St. Landry, and, conspiring with a young man named Will. C. Chevis, of Rayne—make a note of that name, if you please, for, if I mistake not, we will hear from him before his work is done—he announced that I was to speak on prohibition at Rayne, Plaquemine Brulee, Opelousas, Washington and New Iberia—all of which I have done and still live.

We had live meetings at every point. The friends of prohibition had no conception of the strength of the movement until they stirred in the matter; but, as soon as it was announced that some one was to speak on the subject, they came up by scores and hundreds to declare their interest.

At Plaquemine Brulee I at first thought they were never going to let me begin, and then I thought they would never let me stop speaking. They at first put up three young men; the two Chevis' boys and Horace White, Esq., Bro. B. F. White's son, just graduated at the law school at Vanderbilt University, and they gave us short, but powerful addresses that made me "glad all over" at the thought of what they would do in the fight that is coming; and then Dr. M. Miller. Then came Dr. Lyons with a regular oration all written out, full of facts, fun and fancy, that kept the audience merry for an hour. I gathered up the fragments after that, and made the best talk I could, on what was left, for an hour or two more; and then came such a dinner as they always have when Bro. White is around. Oh, those picnic dinners! Well, after dinner, as we were sitting on Bro. White's gallery, resting and talking over old times, some one came and said that a lot of people had come from thirty miles away to hear me speak, and had lost their way and just got there, and that they wanted me to speak again. So, before I fairly realized what was going on, they had me up again with an audience nearly as large as before, and, as many of them were ladies, I spoke about "woman's work," and the strangest thing happened that you ever heard of. The ladies seemed very much interested in what I was saying, and I told them I would like to crystallize the interest by making them join something. One lady who was wearing a white ribbon said, "Organize a Woman's Christian Temperance Union." I caught at the idea at once, and asked for all that were willing to join to raise their hands. How many do you suppose I got? Not one. The humiliating fact must be recorded—not a solitary one. Well, this didn't look much like success, and success is what I am after in this prohibition work; so I began to cast about for new methods. I looked over appealingly at the lady with the white ribbon, and said to her, "Can't you talk to these people?" She replied, "I can't talk to them like you can." "No," said I, "but you can talk to them like you can, and that is what they seem to want just now." And I stepped down from the platform and held out my hand, and said, "Permit me." She permitted, and I led her up on to the platform and turned the audience over to her, and she organized a Union of thirty members on the spot. Oh, ye women, who can do such work as this, and won't do it, great is your responsibility! I am satisfied that my forte is to organize Unions by proxy.

If Bro. Levi Upton gets hold of this piece, he will say that there was an old colored woman at New Iberia who thought my talents called me in another direction, and so, just to keep him from telling the joke on me, I will tell it myself.

You see, Bro. Levi and I were trying to get down to the salt mine, and were asking at the depot when the train went, and how else we could go, and this senseless old woman, broad as she was long nearly, looked up, and said: "You can walk down the track (ten miles). I've walked furder den dat many time, an' toted a baby, too." I told her that as they didn't propose to give me the salt mine when I got there, I thought I wouldn't try it; and the irrepressible old creature said, "Dey might gib you a job, though, for all dat, who knows?"

You see, she took us for a couple of tramps. Levi says she wouldn't have thought he was a tramp if he hadn't been with me; but I don't think it was quite that bad.

Mr. Editor, why don't you get a bigger paper? I can't begin to tell you about this trip, the fine audiences composed of the "beauty and the chivalry" everywhere, the warm hearts and enthusiasm for a pure government, a higher standard of manliness, a clear brain, and an honest ballot, all along the line. On the surface of the eight acres over Avery's Salt Mine everything looks smooth and fair for an ordinary farm, but underneath it is all laid off into fairy apartments, with walls sparkling with gems, and arched ceilings that give back the light from the myriad torches of the workers, who are still mining and boring, blasting and shoveling, making new rooms and sinking their shafts deeper and farther with ever-increasing activity and success. So, on the surface of our public sentiment, everything seems only too fair for this nefarious traffic in woe and misery; but, sir, we are undermining it with an ever-growing public sentiment that will soon pull down even the very pillars that now support the tottering mass of ruin and corruption. May God speed the glorious day!

Prohibition.

THE TIDE IS RISING IN ST. LANDRY PARISH.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Goodale, an able lawyer of Baton Rouge, who has nobly gone out on a tour pleading, before the people, the cause of women and children suffering from that greatest of all evils, intoxicating liquors, addressed a large and intelligent audience in Opelousas the other night. For about an hour and a half he passed rapidly in review many striking facts and figures gathered from history and statistics, during which time respectful silence prevailed, and good attention was given. In his peroration he become eloquent upon "the family-home" with telling effect, and anyone who listened to his strong argument in favor of prohibition, and still expects whisky to be tolerated much longer, must be about as bad off as Pat's turtle Mr. Goodale told of. Pat was ordered to kill a turtle to make soup for dinner. Some time afterwards the boss looked out and saw the turtle crawling about slowly in the yard, and said, "Pat, didn't I tell you to kill that turtle?" "And, faith, he is kilt; but the thing hasn't found it out yet." And so it is about prohibition. It is only a question of time. The thing's head is about cut off, and it can't live much longer. Magnificent saloons had been erected all over the land, and attractingly arrayed with bright lights, mosaic floors, marble counters, flashing glasses, sparkling fountains, and enticing poisons, and millions were being charmed by the glittering enchantments and ruined by the fatal poisons; but the devil overloaded his gun that time. While so much death and destruction has been dealt out at the muzzle, the dealer is now down and stunned at the breech, and must surrender the gun entirely, sooner or later. The "liquor traffic" is being stripped of all its glamour, and its hideous enormity is being exposed to the view of everybody, and the aroused public is now being shocked and disgusted, and fast becoming unanimously intolerant of this child of hell—and the worst one at that, the bitterest enemy of heaven, and the fellest destroyer of mankind. Public sentiment is fast coming to flood-tide in favor of prohibition about here, and I hope will soon sweep over the whole world, and drown whisky forever. Even those who are selling whisky are in favor of prohibiting the further sale of it. They see plainly that it is demoralizing the people, paralyzing business, and ruining society. It interferes with labor, and thus shortens crops, and consequently the times become hard, and business of every kind is dull, dragging, failing; and everybody is cramped and embarrassed, and many suffering. Morals are being corrupted, vice is increasing, crime is rampant, and anarchy threatens to engulf everything in ruin. Those who drink, even the hardest drinkers, are begging to have these unnecessary, wasteful and ruinous poisons put out of their reach. They say (and it is but too sadly true) they have indulged in them until their self-control and will-power have been so entirely destroyed by them that now they can not resist the temptation to drink them, as long as they are set out before them on every side and at every turn in their road. While they see plainly and feel sensibly that they are being ruined in every way by this worst of all evils (because it is the origin and source of nearly every evil), they have waded in beyond their depth, and must inevitably drown without help. And from the indications, the best people, and a majority of the whole, will rally to the rescue of these unfortunate men, with their imploring wives, and, at the same time, save the youth, the future hope of the country, from demoralization, and society at large from anarchy and utter ruin, by prohibiting the sale of these insidious and destructive poisons. If there be any whose gnawing greed of gain would tempt them to still sell these poisons; if every nickel that drops into their tills be gored all over with the blood of their murdered victims, and dripping wet with the tears of abused wives and hungry children, let us do them the favor to shut them up until they can take a second sober thought, and come to a better conclusion, and be better and happier men, and save their wives and children also. It is not that all those engaged in the "liquor traffic" are such bad men, as their bad business would indicate. I know some of them to be kind-hearted and well-meaning men. The influence of example is wonderful. Most of people are apt to conclude that what the multitude does can't be much wrong—at least, not so much so that they may not do likewise; whereas, it is the multitude that does wrong, and only a few that don't. Christ, when on earth, said: "Broad is the way, and wide is the gate, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat; but narrow is the way, and strait is the gate, that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." The whisky seller has reasoned himself into it about thus: "As long as it be licensed at all, somebody will sell it, and the people will drink it; and I had as well make money out of it as anybody else." And so he had. One man has just as much right to poison his neighbors with whisky as another. But, of course, no one has the moral right to do. Legal license can never convert a moral wrong into a moral right. Some heathen tribes tolerate the killing of deformed infants or sickly children, and aged and infirm parents. All civilized people condemn that practice as horribly wrong, and unite in saying that it ought not to be tolerated. Have we not gone back a step further, and licensed the wholesale poisoning and destruction of all ages and conditions? For all intoxicating liquors are poisonous, and deadly ones at that. How many of every man's own acquaintances even has he known, beyond doubt, to have become unsound, diseased, and died outright from drinking intoxicating liquors? How many have lost their minds, become imbecile, driveling imbriates? Nobody can deny that the very atmosphere of drinking-saloons, loaded thick with the corrupting influences of evil pastimes and bad examples, taints and destroys moral purity of principle and health of character. Why don't ladies visit drinking-saloons as they do other bazars? And what would be thought of one that did? What man is there that don't dread for his own son to visit such corrupting haunts of demoralization and ruin? Who don't know that their baneful influences have sullied the lovely purity, debauched the noble character, and blasted the fair prospects of millions of promising youths? On December 27, next, we hope that St. Landry parish will close up and obliterate all those dangerous pitfalls into which so many are falling and being utterly and eternally ruined.

The Bible as a College Text-Book.

BY REV. J. M. BROWN.

MR. EDITOR: Your recent editorial on "Church Schools and the Bible" ought to provoke thought.

You very properly emphasize the study of the Bible as calculated to develop the highest type of manhood; and the course of study pursued in Olivet College is well suited to the purpose. But let us come down to a lower plane and ask if the Bible ought not to occupy a place of greater prominence simply for its educational value.

Many eminent jurists have studied the "book of books" to obtain a more comprehensive knowledge of the great principles of jurisprudence which underlie their profession. Statesmen, drinking from the fountain of its inspiration, have conceived thoughts which have crystallized in the life and polity of nations. Poets and philosophers have recognized its potency as a means of mental culture; and it does seem that in the face of facts we ought no longer to ignore it as a text-book.

The Bible is superior to all other productions in several departments of study. As a text-book in the study of the English language, it stands without a rival.

Language is a thing of growth—it lives because it grows; and when it ceases to grow, it ceases to live. Philology, therefore, to be studied thoroughly must be studied historically. It is not enough that we look into a dictionary and see what a word means now, or that we understand its derivation from some other language. Most of our words are not "newly coined," but they have a history which reaches back to earlier periods in the life of the language—some of them appearing as far back as Chaucer, and the still more remote era of Anglo-Saxon literature. To learn the genesis of words, to know not only their derivatives, but the circumstances which called them forth, is to the linguist an interesting field of study. It is impossible to acquire a critical knowledge of our "native tongue," and to appreciate its wonderful flexibility, as exhibited in its inexhaustible store of synonyms, without tracing its development through the centuries. A man to be an English scholar must know not only the modification in the syntactical structure of our speech, but the origin and growth of the words which compose it.

For study of this kind, Shakspeare, Spencer and other early English writers are valuable; but if the teacher will take the Authorized Version and the translations of earlier date, he will be well equipped for the work of illustrating the transmutation through which words pass in the changes of the language. The student will then have a knowledge of "old English." He can easily reach a little further back and take in the Anglo-Saxon, and then on forward into "modern English" with greater relish and a "more perfect understanding." The rhetorician finds the Bible a fruitful source of illustration in his treatment of "figures" and "style." The logician might find it helpful to study the convincing arguments of Paul; while the teacher of mental science can find his subject illustrated in all its phases.

Some years ago Dr. Lipscomb gave us a valuable article, in the Southern Methodist Review, on "Hamlet—A Study in Intellectual Philosophy." Might not many Bible characters illustrate along this line as well as Shakspeare's imaginary man? In the field of ethics nothing is sound except that which is based upon, "Thus saith the Lord."

The young collegian comes home "flushed with college honors," but he is supposed to know little of human nature as it is revealed in actual life. To obtain the desired knowledge, some advise him to read Shakspeare; others, to read novels. But he would acquire a much more profound insight into that great volume if he would studiously read the Bible.

BROADNAX, LA., July 13, 1887.

In Memoriam.

On Saturday evening, July 9, at 9 o'clock, at our home, the pure, sweet spirit of a gentle sufferer was released from its prison-house of pain and weariness

"To rest in light and sunshine,
In the presence of the King."

This was the tenderly loved, tenderly watched wife of Rev. James A. Bowen, of the North Mississippi Conference. For nine long months she had been a helpless invalid, and, in the hope of restoring her failing health, she was brought to this delightful coast climate in January last, stopping at Bay St. Louis four months, where she rallied to some extent, attended by a skillful physician and valued friend, Dr. Turner.

Returning to Holly Springs, in May, her symptoms grew discouraging again, and, at her special request, her faithful, devoted husband retraced his steps, and undertook the last earthly pilgrimage they were to make together, arriving at our house June 9. Their brief stay of one month, with us was a benediction, and the quiet office in the yard, where she experienced "that sudden, strange transition," seems holy ground. Twice before, in the history of our residence here, have those pearly gates swung open to admit a "ransomed stranger." The first call, February 19, 1876, swift and sudden, like a thunderbolt from a cloudless sky, was for an only sister, pure and noble in her life and its aims, fit for the companionship of angels. The second, of more recent date, February 16, 1887, was for my beloved, my precious, suffering mother, who went up through great tribulations, and now stands with that blood-washed throng, saying, with her latest conscious breath, "Christ has been my refuge and trust for years."

Though an almost hopeless sufferer, the end came unexpectedly to Mrs. Bowen's friends, but not to herself, for she had longed for her heavenly rest, saying: "Let me go. I shall be as a bird set free." When physician, father and friends were in despair of her recovery, her husband's faith seemed to surmount all discouragement, and he hoped on. Do we not know how deep and precious are those ties with the very heart-strings twined, and how bitter the parting? A few days before her departure, Mr. Bowen realized that the conditions of the promise upon which they had stood were giving away. "If two of you shall agree on earth, as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them, of my Father which is in heaven." "We were no longer agreed," said he; "she desired to be released." And thus the husband is left in his sorrow with their gentle, blue-eyed babe in his arms. God will care for them. Patient, firm, wise and consecrated, Mrs. Bowen was, indeed, her husband's helpmeet, and his heart could safely trust in her.

On Sunday evening, at 5:30 o'clock, our beloved Bishop Keener held an impressive service over her remains. It is seldom one hears the subject of death treated with such power and inspiration. He made it appear an easy, a glorious, a victorious birth. His tribute to the influence of consecrated Christian womanhood, as daughter, sister, wife and mother, was full, tender and precious in its unction and eloquence. Her remains were conveyed to Holly Springs, Miss., for interment, on Monday, July 11, to rest beside her mother, who died in October last.

"Welcomed at the pearly portal,
Evermore a welcome guest;
Welcomed to the life immortal,
In the mansions of the blest.
Home, sweet home, our home forever;
All the pilgrim's journey past;
Welcomed home to wander never,
Saved thro' Jesus—home at last."

CHANGED HYMN

"Jesus, lover of my soul,"
Bids me in his bosom stay,
And though billows round me roll,
I am safely hid away;
For he holds me in his arms,
Quite beyond the tempest's reach,
And he whispers to my heart,
Words unknown to human speech.

"Other refuge have I none
He my habitation is;
Here no evil can be all,
I am kept in perfect peace,
I am covered all day long,
With the shadow of his wing;
Dwell in safety through the night,
Waking, there is what I sing:

"Thou, O Christ, art all I want,"
Rests my helpless soul on thee;
Thou wilt never leave alone,
Nor forget to shield me.
Thou hast saved my soul from death,
Thou hast scattered doubts and fears,
And the sunshine of thy face
Sweetly stileth all my tears.

"Thou O Life the fountain art,"
Thou dost wash me white as snow;
I'm content to dwell apart
From all else thy love to know,
Blessed Sun of Righteousness,
I so love to look on thee,
Until my eyes are growing blind
To the things around me.

JESUS IN GALILEE.

Matthew iv, 17-25.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The people which sat in darkness saw great light."—Matthew iv, 16.

CONNECTIVE AND EXPLANATORY.

While Jesus was struggling with the tempter in the wilderness, John the Baptist, leaving the wilderness, had continued his faithful ministry in the city. "Herod, the tetrarch, being reproved by him for Herodias, his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done, added yet this above all, that he shut up John in prison." Andrew, Peter, John, Philip and Nathanael had publicly acknowledged Jesus: the latter having been called by the Savior an Israelite, in whom there is no guile, and having made that hearty confession of faith: "Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel," because Jesus had said, "Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree I saw thee." The wedding of Cana of Galilee had taken place, where the first miracle had been performed, Jesus thus sanctifying social life and gracing innocent festivity by his presence and blessing. The wedding guest went immediately down to Capernaum with his mother, his brethren and disciples. Continuing there not many days, he went up to Jerusalem and appeared there in quite a different role—that of severe authority and heroism, as, with a scourge of small cords, he routed the profaners of the temple. Nicodemus had gone up by night and learned that marvelous story of the new birth which, sounding down the centuries, continues to this day the touchstone of Christian character. The woman at the Samarian well had been brought out of her narrow view of worship and been made to believe that a Monut Gerizim could be located anywhere the pious soul might desire. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." The first year of Christ's ministry was ended, and he was now preaching in Galilee, nothing as yet having happened to suggest the fulfillment of that tragic prophecy spoken to his mother, which in time was so truly and dreadfully verified.

SIMON PETER AND ANDREW CALLED.

Verse 17. "From that time." Christ had taught privately in every place since his baptism. His first public ministry was to his own people at Nazareth, and when they thrust him out of the city, and sought to cast him down from the brow of the hill, he left them and came to Capernaum in Galilee. "Repent." The same gospel which John preached. The word means, change your mind: no longer regard me as your enemy; be reconciled to me. Change of mind will necessarily be followed by a change of life. "The kingdom of Heaven is at hand." True religion is now offered to you. The reign of righteousness has begun: whosoever will may be benefited by its peaceful sway.

18. "Jesus walking by the sea of Galilee." This sheet of water is called by various names in the Scriptures—Chinnereth, Chinneroth, Cinneroth, Lake of Gennesaret, and Sea of Tiberias. It was a favorite resort of Jesus. It was on its bosom he was asleep on a pillow in the hinder part of the ship, and, being awakened, he rebuked the storm, and there was a calm. The swine into which the legion entered ran down into the Lake of Tiberias; on its waters the Savior came walking, and Peter, meeting him, began to sink; out of it the fish was caught, in whose mouth was the coin to pay the tribute money; and it was by this sea that the memorable sermon of the Savior was delivered. "Saw Simon Peter and Andrew; * * * they were fishers." Christ called his apostles from among the common people. He had always the greatest regard for the poor, and the poor seemed better prepared to appreciate his ministry. The lake abounded in fish and furnished no inconsiderable part of the living of the people. Hence the occupation of "fisher" was at once necessary and lucrative.

19. "Follow me." Embrace my doctrine and accompany me as my disciples. "I will make you fishers of men." I will ordain you as ministers of the gospel. The gospel ministry is frequently compared to fishing, to a net, etc. Paul's phrase, "caught you with guile," seems to be on the same line.

20. "Straightway left their nets, and followed him." As soon as their limited affairs could be adjusted. They were literally forsaking all, because fishing was their occupation, and their nets was their stock in trade.

THE SONS OF ZEBEDEE CALLED.

Verse 21. "Going on from thence" means, probably, only to another part of the lake. The call of James and John differs but little from that of Andrew and Peter. A ship is mentioned, a fishing boat or smack. It may be that this father and two sons owned an outfit among them.

22. "They left their father." The call of the Master is paramount to all. "Whosoever loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." Some parents consider a call to the ministry a barrier to success in a worldly point of view. What short-sightedness to keep back a son from becoming a co-worker with Christ in preparing the world for his second coming!

THE MINISTRY OF JESUS AND ITS RESULTS.

Verse 23. "Jesus went about all Galilee." Wherever men were found there was the location of Jesus' ministry. "Seeing the multitudes" always called forth his mightiest works and most gracious words. In this respect, as well as in all others, he exhorts his disciples to "follow me." His ministry consisted of "teaching," "preaching," and "healing all manner of disease." Preaching comprehended teaching, but not necessarily did teaching embrace preaching. Teaching had reference to instruction in all questions and customs pertaining to the ritual of the Jews and to the law, while preaching more directly meant the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom and the exhortation to men to embrace it.

24. "His fame." The stir created by his miracles, and his speaking as never man spake, spread throughout the whole land. There is no subject so interesting to men as the gospel. Any minister who follows Christ and acquires the great grace to preach the gospel in its simplicity, in its faithfulness and in its power, will stir the land. It should excite no wonder that now and then a Luther, a Wesley, and even an occasional modern evangelist, should arise to electrify the people and to shake the nations. The wonder should rather be that every man truly called of God, and accompanied by the Holy Ghost and by power, does not become a Boanerges. "Divers diseases and torments," "possessed with devils," "lunatic," "those that had the palsy:" "he healed them all." How literally did all this fulfill the prophecy made in Isaiah, in regard to the works of the coming Savior! "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing."

25. "There followed him great multitudes of people." A very strong expression. Multitude means a large crowd. To pluralize the word increases its meaning manifold. Then, to expand the idea still more by the prefix, "great," brings to the mind conceptions beyond which its capacity can not well go. Why is not the preaching of the gospel so attractive to men nowadays? Because it has become more familiar? This may answer in part, but not wholly, by any means. Neither is it because men have grown more wicked, nor because the relief it brings and the reward it offers are less appreciated. May it not be because the successors of the Great Preacher are wanting in the authority, the unction and the power with which it ought to be proclaimed?

"And now, Lord, behold their threatenings; and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy Word, by stretching forth thy hands to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child, Jesus."

Our Association.

ITS EXHIBIT—ITS NEED.

Since the Ministerial Educational Association of the Mississippi Conference began its work in 1872, it has collected and expended in educating young men for the ministry $2,461 04. Up to date eighteen have been aided by it. Of this number, only two have proved themselves unworthy of the benefit extended them; whilst, on the other hand, a number of the association's beneficiaries, in the Pacific, Texas and Mississippi Conferences, are filling important charges in their respective Conferences, and are doing most excellent work for the Master's cause. The association has at present under its care four young men of excellent character and fine promise, who are pursuing their studies at Centenary College.

I present these facts to the readers of the ADVOCATE to correct any false impressions of the work done by the association. Many think that most of the young men aided by us have failed to make efficient preachers of the gospel. From the facts given above it will be seen that the association has made but two failures with its beneficiaries, to offset which it points with gratification to the noble band of workers already favorably known to our Conferences and Methodists generally, and whose achievements in the past few years index careers of glorious usefulness to the church of their choice.

While the exhibit of work done is not all that could be desired, still the results, as a whole, are exceedingly gratifying, and encourage us to press our claims upon the Methodists of our Conference. The present Board of Managers propose to adhere rigidly to constitutional requirements, and guard themselves and their supporters from injudicious expenditures.

We have but a few dollars now in the treasury, and we urge the brethren and friends of education throughout the bounds to help us at once. Centenary College will open in a few weeks, and we will need nearly four hundred dollars to meet the demands upon us during the next session.

Let it be remembered that these funds are used to pay only the board and washing of beneficiaries, and, also, that we require them to give promissory notes for every one hundred dollars advanced them, which notes are to be canceled by continuing in the itinerancy one year for every one hundred dollars advanced them. If they should fail to enter the traveling connection or continue therein long enough to cancel said notes, they are wholly, or partially, in full force against them, and collectable.

Blank notes, and any further information, cheerfully furnished upon application to J. V. Penn, secretary of the Ministerial Educational Association of the Mississippi Conference, Jackson, La. J. V. PENN.

Something Definite.

MR. EDITOR: Of what can we deny ourselves during the week of prayer and self-denial? Not of tobacco; we do not use it. Not of a beefsteak: that would be nothing uncommon. Not of coffee; we use but little of that. Not of any table luxury; ordinarily we have none. Not of anything in the way of dress; our dress is plain. Not of a summer resort; we have none in contemplation. What then?

Wife and I will put ten cents each into a mite box every morning, and our children will put in five cents each. As we have but little money, this will be self-denial, and it will be something definite. Such contributions from each of our members would liquidate the missionary debt seven times over. May God move others to do likewise, and when moved, may they do.

ENTERPRISE, MISS., July 12, 1887.

Dr. Lambuth's Call.

(This is a sample of the letters we are receiving on this subject. —ED.)

MR. EDITOR: The soul-stirring letters of our missionaries in Japan, and the no less soul-stirring editorials on the same subject, published in the last issue of the ADVOCATE, were read this morning at our breakfast table. Our five boys, with eager faces, listened to the appeal which comes so thrillingly from over the seas. May some of them yet be God's messengers to Japan! After the reading, we took up a collection on the spot. Much of it was very precious savings, some little hoards "to buy a pig," and other anticipated speculations; but when the saucer was passed around it would not hold the offerings, and we needed a larger dish. We wish it were more, but please let the fifteen dollars go to the support of Dr. Lambuth's missionary. A SUBSCRIBER.

From the Work.

EAST BATON ROUGE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I am truly thankful to say that we are moving up on all the lines of church work. We have four Sunday-schools that are truly encouraging. We have collected twenty-five dollars for Sunday-school literature. Have prayer and class meeting. Quite a number of family altars erected this year. We have just closed our first protracted meeting, which resulted in thirty accessions, and fifty claimed conversion. In answer to your notice in the ADVOCATE, I will report fifty conversions and forty-five accessions.

We will soon have a new church at one of the appointments (namely, Dewford) that will cost about six hundred dollars.

Davis Chapel members have bought a new organ, besides considerable repairs on the church. I see nothing to keep this work from being one of the leading works in the Woodville district.

I have made something over two hundred visits this year; and I think that I am prepared to say that there is not a kinder and more appreciative people under the sun.

The brethren and friends of Davis Chapel gave the preacher and family a forty-dollar "pounding," for which may the good Lord abundantly bless them!

Finances well up considering the crop last year. I am having no trouble with the Conference collections. Have added twenty new subscribers to the ADVOCATE, and hope that I will be able to add many more.

Our second quarterly meeting embraced the fourth Sunday in May; and it was truly a blessing to the work. The brethren say that "Bro. Jones is growing in grace."

I will close by saying that I am truly thankful to God for his help, and pray that every blessing bestowed upon myself and the good people of this circuit may only tend to humble me in his sight! GEO. D. ANDERS.

AMITE CITY, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed a meeting of twelve days at Amite City, La. After nearly four years of labor and prayer, I have been made glad by having a gracious revival of religion, with the result of twenty-two or more conversions and nineteen accessions to the church. It was a glorious season of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord." The congregations were unusually large, and such a work of grace has not been experienced for many years, if ever, at this place. Rejoice with us, and give praise to God for such a wonderful manifestation of his grace.

We are indebted to Rev. N. B. Young, Rev. J. G. Sibley, and Rev. W. Elwang, of the Presbyterian Church, for efficient labors.

I leave to-day for the Seashore Camp Meeting.

Fraternally,

J. M. LYCH.

SALTILLO, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: My revival season has just commenced, which will last for about ten weeks. I have only held one protracted meeting, which has just closed. It resulted in nine conversions and four accessions to the church, with more to follow. Start this evening to begin my second meeting. My circuit has nine regular appointments. Revival spirit all over my work. Pray for us. Fraternally,

W. T. SHELL.

JULY 16, 1887.

BEAUREGARD, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: God has visited Beauregard with a mighty blessing, and his hand is not yet stayed. Blessed be his holy name! The meeting began June 23, and closed July 17. From the first service we knew that God was with us. "All the people had a mind to work." Bro. Weems, our consecrated presiding elder, who walks close with God, was with us at different times, and rendered very great assistance. Young voices consecrated to God led the singing with untiring zeal and marvelous effect. Results:

1. Conversions, fifty-six; applications for membership, twenty-three; receptions, eight; baptisms—adults, seven; infants, nine.

2. Called to preach, four; ready to go, two; and of these, two are called to the foreign work.

3. Called to the foreign work, three young women, of whom two gladly obey, are ready to begin the necessary preparations.

4. More praying men and praying women, and more family altars in proportion to numbers than in any other church in my knowledge.

5. All dues paid in full to date.

6. A list of subscribers for Missionary Advocate, and the list for CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE prospectively increased.

7. Increased interest in missionary work.

8. Every member who attended the services revived, and a number led to a full consecration to God. We sat together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and took part, while yet on earth, in that "sanctified uproar," which Valentine Cook says John saw while in the spirit on the Isle of Patmos. On one occasion every soul in the congregation, except one, was praising God. T. L. MELLEN.

JULY 18, 1887.

ADAMS CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: This has been a year of much blessing to the farmers. The oat crop seemed for a time to be a failure, but I can not say that it was altogether so, for there was a very good yield after all the unfavorable weather. Corn and cotton look well, and the grass, too, in some places. And I think if Providence continues to smile on us, we will be blessed with an abundant harvest.

We have on this circuit three organized societies, consisting of about four hundred members.

I believe that there are as many truly consecrated men and women on this work as I ever saw on any with which I have had any acquaintance. The members work. I can not tell you how many prayer and class meetings we have on this work, but somewhere up in the "teens." I have had reported to me during the year eight persons who have taken up their cross of praying in public. Six family altars, and several conversions. We have received, by letter and profession, twenty-five into the church during the year.

Our foreign missionary money is paid up in full, and other collections to the amount of over half our assessments, and the remainder in subscription. Five Sunday-schools all doing well. One Woman's Missionary Society in good working order.

We are expecting a gracious revival of religion on this work. We are now having a thorough manifestation of the power of godliness all over the work.

I have sent during the year twenty-three new subscribers to the ADVOCATE; and it is recognized as a Christian messenger in all the homes which have opened their doors to it.

Pray for us that we may be shown our duty and have grace to perform it.

M. L. BURTON.

AMITE CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: At your request, I will state that the number of accessions to the church on Amite circuit, Woodville district, Mississippi Conference, for this year, to date, is twenty-four. They are due largely to meetings conducted by the late Dr. Hoyte, of the Presbyterian Church.

Collection for Bishops and for missions all forwarded. Gloster and Woodland Churches have resolved to observe the "week of prayer and self-denial" for missions.

We anticipate a grand time August 26, and thereafter, at Sam Jones Camp Ground.

Election on prohibition to be held August 13, 1887.

Yours,

J. WILSON BROWN.

ARCADIA CIRCUIT, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed a very interesting meeting of three days' continuance at Paine's Chapel, Arcadia circuit, Louisiana Conference. It had been appointed for our regular protracted service at that place, but, owing to the excessive rains for two weeks previous, the community had not been able to do any work on their farms, and the brethren decided that they could not leave their crops in the grass for the protracted meeting; so it was determined on Saturday night that the meeting should close Sunday night. But the Holy Ghost came upon the people with such power, and sinners were convicted and mourners converted, it was decided to continue the meeting Monday. Result: ten conversions, and four accessions to the church. Bro. G. A. Mandeville did us valuable service. Let God be praised!

JNO. A. MILLER.

ROWERTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: This work is in a good condition. My predecessors did good work, and I am reaping the fruits of the same.

This people seem to remember that they have promised to support the institutions of the church; and they respond more readily than any people to whom I have presented the claims of the church.

I have paid the Bishops' fund, and eighty dollars of the foreign mission fund, and all the rest in good subscription.

My congregations are large and attentive. I had seven accessions, and the outlook for a revival, I think, is good. Pray for us. D. F. GLICE.

EVERGREEN AND BIG CANE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: The good Lord is still blessing us on the Evergreen and Big Cane circuit since Bro. White's note to you.

We have had a glorious refreshing from the Lord on Bayou Jack—thirty conversions, and twenty-six added to the church. We have received to date this year 175.

We hope to roll up the subscription list to the ADVOCATE to 100 this year. We will respond to Dr. Lambuth, and hope to do so in full to all the Conference collections. Pray for us. Yours in Christ,

S. H. WHATLEY.

CATO, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed our first protracted meeting on the Shiloh circuit, Brandon district, Mississippi Conference. It was held at Bethany Church. I was efficiently helped by Revs. L. Kendall and T. C. Clark.

We had a good meeting, large congregations, good order, good attention, good preaching, and good effect. Nine accessions to the church—all promising young people. The church resolved to build a new house at once. May the Lord bless them!

We have good crop prospects.

A. D. MILLER.

JULY 15, 1887.

HAYNESVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Corn crop very fine. Cotton very promising. Rain very plentiful. Religion, so-so. Health tolerably good. School exhibitions—never heard the like. Yours truly,

C. R. GODFREY.

"EDUCATING UP."—Dr. Andrew Wilson suggests that we might with advantage dismiss some of the less useful topics from the curriculum of the common schools, and supplant them by other topics of vital interest to every class of the community. Boys and girls, for instance, are frequently kept working at modern languages, drawing, classics, and other branches, when the teaching of physiology, health, and domestic economy would be of infinitely greater advantage to them in after-life. Some people would think this to be educating down, but Dr. Wilson asks: "Is it certain that by limiting the 'extras'—or what are undoubtedly often useless topics in education in so far as the social life of many of the pupils is concerned—we should be educating down at all? In all likelihood we should rather be practicing the reverse procedure. By imparting a knowledge of the laws of health and economy, we should be enabling the teacher to discharge his duties in a fuller and truer sense than before. * * * Individual culture of such subjects lies at the root of all national advance in health and prosperity. As several writers have shown, the remedy for much of the misery and poverty now extant lies in the better use of the hours spent at school."—Popular Science.

Woman's Work.

WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of the Louisiana Conference, held its fourth Annual Convention, July 1–4, in Ruston, La., with Mrs. E. J. Fullilove in the chair, aided by Mrs. C. J. Foster, corresponding secretary; Miss Lizzie Paxson, recording secretary. Only one district secretary—Miss Eliza Logan—present. There was a larger delegation present than ever before, and the reports were creditable and encouraging. Much interest was manifested, and the session was a season of great pleasure and profit to delegates, visitors and residents. The pastor, Rev. J. A. Parker, rendered efficient aid, as did Rev. Christian Keener. Dr. Watts, vice-president of Mansfield College, preached a soul-inspiring missionary sermon, on Sunday, at eleven A. M., and was ever ready throughout the entire session with kind words of help and encouragement. Bro. Keener preached an excellent sermon at eight P. M.

The kindness and hospitality of the good people of Ruston knew no bounds. Surely their gracious liberality will redound to their overflowing, temporally and spiritually. Our hearts will ever echo a fervent "God bless them."

This interesting convention awakened the zeal of the workers. Good seed fell in fallow ground, which gives promise of a rich yield after the seasons of a twelve-month have watered and ripened the harvest.

Receipts for the fiscal year from the treasurer's report, $767 35.

The reports of committees are as follows:

PUBLICATION.

Resolved, That we do most earnestly advise every member of the various auxiliaries to urge the claims of the Woman's Missionary Advocate, and in every way possible to bring it before the people, knowing no work is pleasant or profitable without a full understanding of the same.

Resolved, That we fully endorse the leaflet system as a means of untold good.

Resolved, That we advance the claims of our Conference organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Resolved, That we, as a body of Christian workers, encourage the circulation of pure, wholesome, elevating literature, and regard it a holy obligation to place the best books before our young, suitable to their age, sex and mental ability.

MRS. R. J. HARP, Chair'n.

FINANCE.

Whereas, We find it necessary to provide funds for carrying on the work of the district secretaries, and other officers of the Board, in some way other than by drawing upon the revenue of the society derived through monthly dues; therefore, be it

Resolved, That each auxiliary create a "contingent fund" by laying a small tribute on each member, or by public entertainments, which will serve the double purpose of stimulating interest in the cause of missions and also increasing the general fund.

Resolved, That the officers shall keep a strict account of the expenses necessary to the success of their respective duties, and have the privilege of calling on the treasurer for the amount not supplied by the contingent fund.

MRS. T. B. WHITE, Chair'n.

WAYS AND MEANS.

We recognize the necessity for a more thorough and efficient system to secure the means to carry out our undertakings. The usual fees of ten cents per month, or $1 per year, has been proven to be insufficient to extend our work and barely enables us to maintain our position. Pity for the perishing millions of the earth, respect for our benighted sisters and devotion to our holy religion demand a better system, a more liberal method.

Some months ago the Ruston Auxiliary requested one of its members to write an essay, which embodied the principle drawn from the conduct of the Salvation Army, and afterwards adopted by the Board of Missions on the recommendation of Bishop Galloway, viz: the principle of self-denial—self-sacrifice—carried into the kitchen, the parlor, the bed-room, the flower garden. A little sacrifice along these lines would bring a generous yield to our treasury. In order to accomplish this end and increase the usefulness of the Woman's Board it is

Resolved, That the treasurers of the auxiliary societies be requested to make monthly collections either in person or by proxy.

Resolved, That, as workers for missions, we will in some way lessen our expenses, and from our savings contribute annually more than our monthly dues.

Resolved, That we urge the adoption of the mite-box system.

MRS. J. A. PARKER, Chair'n.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

We beg leave to report the following nominations: President, Mrs. E. J. Fullilove, Keachie, La.; corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. J. Foster, Shreveport, La.; recording secretary, Miss Lizzie Paxson, Keachie, La.; treasurer, Mrs. S. B. McCutchen, Shreveport, La.; auditress, Mrs. W. H. Wise, Shreveport, La. District secretaries—New Orleans district, Mrs. M. J. Hatch, Baton Rouge; Shreveport district, Miss Eliza Logan, Mansfield; Alexandria district, Mrs. E. C. Tait, Alexandria; Delhi district, Mrs. J. D. Harper, Delhi; Homer district, Miss Jennie Lane, Vernon, La.; Opelousas district, Mrs. J. N. Pharr, Morgan City.

Respectfully submitted.

MRS. E. K. KEENER, Chair'n.

Several invitations were extended the convention for its next annual meeting, which elicited much discussion and was finally referred to the Executive Board for decision, which decision will be announced in due time.

Resolutions were offered, extending heartfelt thanks to the citizens of Ruston, the pastor, the choir, the ministers present, and to railroad officials for reduced rates and other courtesies.

A committee of the whole adopted the following:

Resolved, That, as a body of Christian workers, we return thanks to Almighty God that he has graciously inclined the hearts of those in high places in heathen lands toward our missionaries.

Resolved, That our Conference Woman's Foreign Missionary Society endorses the movement of our sister society of Atlanta, Ga., to join in a general tender of thanks to the Emperor of China for his recent proclamation enjoining protection throughout his domains of "life and property" to our foreign missionaries.

After devout prayer and thanks to God for his grace and blessings, the whole assembly sang with great feeling the Doxology, and adjourned sine die.

MRS. E. J. FULLILOVE, President.

MISS LIZZIE PAXSON, Rec. Sec.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The eighth annual session of the Woman's Missionary Society convened at Enterprise, June 29, 1887, at ten A. M. Devotional exercises were followed by an address of welcome from Mrs. McGee, of Enterprise, which was happy in its conception and graceful in its delivery. Miss Willie Galloway, of Brookhaven, responded in behalf of the society. Mrs. Hayes, our beloved leader, then made an address, in which she spoke gratifyingly of the growth of the society, justly attributing much of its success to the untiring efforts of Mrs. S. G. Weems and Miss A. E. Linfield.

The following officers were present: Mrs. J. D. Chatfield, president; Mrs. Jayne, vice-president; Miss Linfield, corresponding secretary; Miss Fearn, recording secretary. Delegates—Mrs. S. G. Weems, district secretary of Brookhaven; Miss Andrews, Jackson; Mrs. Norsworthy, Meridian; Mrs. Steele, Crystal Springs; Mrs. Jones, Carlisle; Miss Gibbs, Raymond; Miss Hiverly, Bethesda; Miss Campbell, Enterprise; Mrs. Coffee, Jefferson Street, Natchez; Mrs. Clayton, Pleasant Hill; Miss Watts, E. M. F. College; Miss Cook, Mount Pleasant; Mrs. E. B. Wimberly, Wesson; Mrs. Jayne, Brandon.

The president appointed the following committees: On finance, Mrs. Weems, Mrs. Norsworthy, Misses Andrews, Gibbs and Campbell. On extension of work, Mrs. Jayne, Mrs. Coffee, Mrs. Clayton, Mrs. Jones, Miss Cook. On resolutions, Mrs. E. B. Wimberly, Mrs. Steele, Misses Galloway, Hiverly.

The report of the corresponding secretary was carefully prepared and comprehensive, reporting twenty new auxiliaries, and twelve dead, including two juveniles. New auxiliaries: Adams' Church, Brookhaven, Caseyville, Centennial, E. M. F. College, Flora, Mt. Pleasant, Martin, Oak Ridge, Old Crystal Springs, Pleasant Hill, Rocky Springs, Rehoboth, Sarepta, Terry, Utica, Union Church, Brandywine, Pleasant Hill, Tryus, Heidelberg. Dead auxiliaries: Wesley Chapel, Phœnix, Price's Chapel, Redbone, Clinton (La.), Liberty, Ebenezer, Fayette, Hazlehurst, Woodville, Zealous Workers, Clinton, Rose-leaves. Prayer for their awakening!

Reports from thirty-five auxiliaries show, approximately, 933 members—an increase of more than a hundred during the year. Reported direct, $985. (Accuracy is impossible from the fact that many reports omit these items.)

The committees reported as follows:

FINANCE.

Resolved, That a tax of fifteen cents per annum be, and is hereby assessed each member of the Woman's Missionary Society within the bounds of this Conference, to be known as a Conference fund, and it shall be the duty of the treasurer of each auxiliary to collect and forward same to Conference treasurer by the first day of March, each year, and report same as Conference fund separately from all other collections. It shall be the duty of the Conference treasurer to hold such fund in trust, keeping a separate account of same, subject to draft of Conference corresponding secretary, countersigned by the president.

EXTENSION OF WORK.

Resolved, That we would urge the auxiliaries to hold their meetings, though only two or three be present; that any member of an auxiliary who may be visiting where there is no auxiliary shall feel it her duty to do all in her power to organize a society; that the president of each auxiliary shall appoint a committee of three zealous members to solicit additional members, etc.

COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That we accept the proposition of our president to raise a memorial fund, to be called the "Dora Rankin Fund;" this fund to be appropriated for a training-school for native women in China.

Resolved, That we observe the week before Christmas as a season of prayer and self-denial.

Resolved, That sympathy be extended the family of Sister R. J. Engelis, who has been removed from our midst.

Resolved, That thanks are due the ministers who so kindly lent us their aid, and to the good citizens of Enterprise.

Resolved, That the secretary send a brief statement of the business of the convention to the ADVOCATE, and request publication.

Resolved, That thanks be tendered Cooper Institute for the normal course given Miss Hughes, and regrets expressed that she did not visit us during our session.

The old officers were re-elected. These are the district secretaries for the year:

Miss Mary Andrews, Jackson district; Mrs. Norsworthy, Meridian district; Mrs. Hunnicutt, Vicksburg district (re-elected); Mrs. Weems, Brookhaven district (re-elected); Mrs. Clark, Brandon district; Mrs. B. J. Jones, Woodville district; Mrs. J. P. Drake, Seashore district.

Wesson was selected as the next place of meeting.

Meeting adjourned sine die, on Thursday evening, after three delightful days spent with the most hospitable people.

H. FEARN, Rec. Sec. W. M. S.

RODNEY MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Rodney gave an entertainment on June 28, which proved a grand success. After paying all expenses we have a balance of $25 left. Admission was only twenty-five cents, and the weather very unfavorable. So you see, my dear readers, we done exceedingly well. Our town is quite small, but the people of Rodney were liberal. Indeed, they patronized our ice cream as well as our entertainment. This was our second public entertainment, and I feel proud of our little society, for both were successes. Happy indeed am I to state that our little band is among the most zealous. We have some earnest workers in our midst. Would that we could accomplish more than we do! Let us hope that ere another year has passed away there may be many more enrolled on the list who have become workers in the vineyard of the Lord.

MRS. KATE HATHAWAY.

ARTIFICIAL EYES

Are Now so Perfectly Made That No One Can Distinguish Them from the Natural Eye.

The Artificial Eye is not only a beautifier, but it serves other excellent purposes.

It enables the eyelids to move as freely as ever.

It restores the functions of the tear passages.

It prevents the eyelashes from turning within, causing inflammation.

It prevents distortion of features, as happens always in case of a young person who has the misfortune to lose an eye—and sometimes in the case of older persons.

Mr. W. HOUNI., our optician, has made a specialty of selecting and inserting them.

THURSDAY, JULY 28, 1887.

The Board of Missions appointed the week beginning August 8, as a week of prayer and self-denial in the interest of our missions.

"Dr. Lambuth's Call."—Some of the brethren seem not to understand the effort we are making to answer Dr. Lambuth's call. The Doctor said, in his letter published in this paper, that a thousand of our subscribers, giving one dollar each, would be sufficient to send him a helper and maintain him a year in Japan. Our effort is to raise that thousand dollars among the readers of the Advocate. We know that they can give, and we believe they will, and be the better off for it. The Mission Board have men and women ready to go, but they have not the money to send them or maintain them. We do not propose to select the missionary. That is the business of the Board. We propose to raise this money, and turn it over to the Board to be used for this special purpose. We propose that the givers shall send it through the Advocate office, because we want Bro. Lambuth to know how the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana have responded to his call, made specially to them. Now, let all who have not responded do so at once.

Our Schools.—We invite the readers to look over our advertisements of schools. We don't think any paper carries a better list than ours. We advertise none that we do not recommend as worthy of the patronage of our readers. In the choice of a school for the education of our children several things come into consideration. The place and its surroundings, the distance it is from us, the past success of the school, its present faculty and course of instruction and mode of government, and prices to be paid—all these will naturally come into our minds when we are selecting a school for our children. It would be invidious in us to draw a comparison between the schools who advertise in our paper, and it would be more than impertinent to advise our readers which school to patronize. So we leave them to make their own selections, which we know they will do, even if we gave them ever so much advice.

A most important matter to the welfare of this city, and for the good of the whole State, is the correction and revision of the books of registration of the city. We are glad to see that a movement to effect this object has been started. Notes on the subject have passed between the "Committee of One Hundred" and the supervisor of registration of this parish, in one of which the supervisor says to the committee: "With your earnest and unpartisan assistance I propose to correct the registration books, without fear or favor, so that the people of New Orleans may know that whoever is elected at the next election has been chosen by the majority of the legal voters of this city." So far, good.

The editor regrets that his malady still holds such a grip upon him that it will prevent his attendance upon several District Conferences that are to be held about this time. He is trying to make arrangements to visit some healing waters in hope of being benefited thereby.

A Great Church on Trial.

The more we think of the fact that our church authorities have set apart a week to be devoted to prayer and self-denial, for the purpose of raising money to pay an existing debt and to sustain the missions already enterprised, the more we are impressed with the seriousness of this whole matter. We fear that many of our people do not appreciate the gravity of the situation. By this act of our authorities, "we are made a spectacle unto men." It has gone abroad all over this Christian nation, that the Southern Methodist Church, during the week, beginning August 8 and ending August 14, will give an exhibition of her love and loyalty to Christ. The eyes of every denomination of Christians in the land are turned full upon us, and the eyes of unbelievers are watching us with an unwonted keenness. The Texas Advocate asks this searching question: "Can we abide the test of standing one whole week in the focus of this blaze?" We have actually called the church and the world to look at the exhibition of love and loyalty which we have for our Lord, and to witness the self-denials and sacrifices we can make for the spread of his holy cause in the earth! And they are looking, and will bear witness, and on their testimony the most tremendous verdict that was ever given will be entered up, either for or against us! We are really on trial before the enlightened judgment of our country! A million of communicants, with at least three millions of adherents, standing before that bar for one solid week, is a sight that was never seen since time began! We have been making our professions for forty years, and now the testing time has come, and in the plain view of millions of sympathizing Christians of other communions, and millions of criticising unbelievers of the world, we are to demonstrate the sincerity or insincerity of those professions. This ordeal through which we are to pass is but another valley of Shechem, with its Ebal of curses on one hand, and its Gerizim of blessings on the other! Do we recognize the awfulness of the test? Do we appreciate the fact that, as a church, we have come to the pivotal point in our destiny? Our very right to exist any longer is to be decided, and to be decided before the searching gaze of millions! Just think of the position we are to occupy the second week of August; a position so singular and so full of grand possibilities, and yet environed with circumstances which may bring irretrievable disasters! Was there ever anything like it in the history of the church?

The position is peculiar, in that we are called upon in this public manner and before these millions of witnesses to demonstrate the sincerity of our faith in one of the fundamental principles, one of the cardinal virtues of that Christianity which we profess and are endeavoring to propagate. And here is where the test touches; here is where the eyes of the witnesses are centered. We have been teaching the world, that when a man is able to pay an honest debt, and fails to do so, that failure is not only a dishonorable action, but it is a dishonest one. The teaching has come home to us, and we are called upon to verify our faith in its truth. There is not a man in the church, who knows anything of the circumstances, who will say that our debt was contracted in any other than an honorable way. That is the settled conviction of the intelligent men and women of the church. Nor is there an intelligent man, in or out of the church, who will say that we are unable to pay the debt. People everywhere know that we are abundantly able to do it, and to do largely more. We are, then, shut up to the stern logic of our own teaching. We must liquidate our obligations, or we must quit teaching such doctrine! If we don't practice ourselves what we teach others, then our preaching is vain and our mission at an end. Called upon in such a public manner to pay an honest debt, and this whole matter, in all its phases, having been prominently before our church for two months, if we fail, then "Ichabod" will be written on the walls of our Zion. A dishonest man may be saved, but a dishonest church is doomed forever. Reader, it is going to be a terrific time that second week in August. Oh, that we had some means by which to show our church the perils amidst which she is walking! Oh, that she could see the dreadful precipice that is so near! May God have mercy on us!

Growth Not Necessarily a Blessing.

The great heresy of this age is that material prosperity is the great end of individual, corporate, social and national existence. To exceed and to excel in size and power is to be the greatest in all that is most to be desired. Quantity is everything; quality is only valuable as it touches the sensible, and not the spiritual world. This ruling has become so common and so dogmatic that one dares not really challenge any measure which brings the logic of avoirdupois to bear in its favor. Abraham Lincoln roughly expressed it in his aphorism, "Ballots and bullets," and his greatest worshipers never seem to think that it is quite as rhythmical and as logical to read it, "Bullets and ballots." The count of so many votes, granting them to be genuine, is not the only thing to be weighed. When a knave or a fool or a debauchee votes, his vote counts one just as mine; but my vote is more than a ballot—it contains a moral quality.

The Prophet Isaiah wrote: "Thou hast multiplied the nation, but hast not increased the joy." Of us, this seems to be true. At any rate, we may well pause and inquire who is made happier by knowing that there are sixty millions of people where twenty years ago there were but forty millions? The man of statistics comes out with wonderful array of figures. He has down in his book the exact weight in tons, and lower denominations, the iron that is manufactured into needles' eyes every year, as well as the bales of goods annually worked into button-holes. He has an accurate list of the names and residences of people of system, who kept an exact measurement, in miles, of the Bologun sausages they have eaten, and their memory has a page containing a section-map showing the number of acres of batter-cakes and waffles devoured during their lives. Such men set themselves up as patterns of excellence, and have a supreme contempt for the man who can not tell how many times his heart beats in a day. They are the recording angels of the book of life. Their wings are now undergoing repairs from the loss of so many quills extracted to manufacture pens to write the statistics.

After the account has been rendered, what is to be done? Count up again and note the increase! Then repeat, and so on endlessly. After our country has grown twenty millions, what? Grow another twenty millions. How are they to be distributed? Look over the statistics; note how many were idiots; how many lunatics; how many bawds and harlots; how many murderers and thieves, and pro rata the twenty millions, giving nineteen out of twenty to the devil, and the other (being of little service elsewhere) to the angels to carry to Abraham's bosom. That is pretty much the style of statistics relative to national growth.

A curse followed the numbering of Israel by David. Many theorize as to the spiritual law violated by the great king. I do not here propose to theorize, except to call attention to the idolatrous worship of physical power. Pride grew with physical strength. Divine commands were neglected. The little armies had swelled to hosts. Divine favor could be accepted if convenient—rejected, if not. A sense of independence grew up, as in the breast of the rich man, when he said: "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many days." His soul was put on a par with a donkey, and set to eating a hay-stack. No wonder God said, "Thou fool!" Is not he a fool who thinks his spiritual being can live in the barn along with rats, mice and vermin, and upon the very same diet? No man that would treat his soul that way deserves one. This night it is required. The curse that fell was in consequence of the unholy wedlock forced upon the spiritual nature.

Bishop McTyeire, at Emory and Henry, discoursed strongly upon the profanity of Esau. This strutting and vaunting material growth is become an offense. That one of the greatest cities in the United States should take its soubriquet from the hog, and another from the whisky it sends out into the world, is not complimentary to the age of the country. That what are called now "industries" may be euphemisms for the vilest abominations ever known to men is only evidence of the growth of that heresy which ignores the moral, except as a measure of bulk. But what shall we say when we find that in making the grand aggregate of figures, showing our nation's prosperity, we find the tables running in this zig-zag order—"Churches valued at hundreds of millions; distilleries, thousands of millions; charity hospitals, tens of millions; jails and penitentiaries, hundreds of millions; homes for the indigent, a few hundred; houses of prostitution, tens of thousands; schools for the education of the common people into Christian patriots, a few hundreds; schools that teach that God has no business bossing education, several millions." Let the reader continue this list. Has anyone stopped to consider this fact that there are more women to-day gaining a living through lives of shame than there are teaching and engaged in missionary work? This is, too, in Christian United States! Each prostitute counts one, just as each teacher counts one.

A further principle is that a dependence upon material prosperity is productive of mental and spiritual insanity. Every age that has been noted for high physical development to the neglect of the moral nature has abounded in insanes, imbeciles and the diabolically possessed. Men are everywhere noticing the alarming increase of these classes. A late New Orleans paper calls attention to the disgrace attaching to the Louisiana Legislature in not providing larger room for the insane who are so rapidly increasing. The fact of the increase is undeniable. But is not the better plan the proposal to discover and remove the causes of insanity? Among these, the prohibitionist would reckon whisky, tobacco and other vices. Everyone of these vices is grounded in an effort to find spiritual enjoyment in the gratification of a sensual appetite. Just one grade above is the eagerness for wealth and power. These end virtually in the same, making "provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof." The soul is insulted in being led out to the barn like the ox or the ass. It repels the indignity. God answers by taking away the spirit of the sound mind, and leaving only its carcass and caricature. So, as nations are but enormous aggregations of individuals, at last the majority becomes infatuated. The jails, penitentiaries, asylums and hospitals grow too small. There is room, perhaps, for the sane, but the crazy world must stay in the streets.

Our church is itself infected. We are forgetting that in such grossly material and sensual ages mind and spirit have asserted their heavenly prerogatives and have come forward between the great overgrown material and the starved spiritual, and left us the names of saints and martyrs instead of the names of gormands and butchers. Our poor churches generally furnish our preachers; and our poor preachers generally furnish the world with the only church worth having. Our poor nations have bred the world's wisest legislators; and they who have legislated for the poor are the only men whose laws have set the world forward out of slavery and bestiality. T. A. S. A.

Are We a Missionary Church?

BY REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

If we consider only the theory of the church—her written declarations, and her doctrine as preached from the pulpit—we must answer that we are pre-eminently a missionary church. We make no greater boast than that we preach a gospel able to save every man, and we claim no higher honor than that we belong to a church which believes that whosoever will may take of the water of life freely.

Methodism, we claim, means not only Christianity in earnest, but Christianity for every "nation, kindred and tongue and people." This was Mr. Wesley's boast, and we delight to follow in his teachings. So we have no hesitancy in saying that, theoretically, we are unmistakably a missionary church. But we are told that actions speak louder than words; and upon that theory our standing is not so evident. True, there are some who are genuinely missionary in their spirits, and they show their faith by their works; but, compared to the majority of our membership, these are few indeed. How lamentably few there are who are willing to make the least sacrifice that they may thereby contribute to the missionary cause! How few those who regard this as the especial work of the church! If all goes well at home; if the home church is supported, that is sufficient. Charity begins at home with them, and also ends there. Many who should give by hundreds give by tens; those who should give by tens give by halves, and those who should give by dollars give, and that often grudgingly, by dimes. I assert that a church which is so indifferent to its contributions to this cause is not missionary in the true sense and spirit of the term.

Their zeal for missions is somewhat akin to that of a prominent, well-to-do member of a certain charge which this writer served, who, after hearing a sermon on the subject of foreign missions, came up to me, and said: "I have always opposed foreign missions, but your sermon converted me;" and then handed me the pitiful sum of thirty-five cents. This from a man who could easily have paid ten times as much. I thought his conviction was very shallow, and his conversion not very thorough. So it is with many: whatever can not be used in some other way goes to foreign missions. From the arguments and excuses used by some, one would conclude that they thought Christianity only intended for and suited to them and their families. "Me and my wife, my son John and his wife; us four, no more," is their theory. I contend that any such way of supporting the missionary cause is not scriptural nor of the true spirit. He who [illegible] contribute to the enlightenment of the heathen is as much lacking in the missionary spirit, as taught by St. Paul and the Master, as were the Levite and priest, who passed by the man who fell among thieves, lacking in humanity.

But some one says, "Have we not several missionary fields under our care, and do we not pay money to support these missionaries?" It is true that we pay about $160,000 annually to foreign missions (occasionally this amount is exceeded a little); but what is this to a membership of nearly, or quite, a million? Sixteen cents per member! What a comment on our missionary zeal! Our Missionary Board only assesses about twenty-five cents per member; and we respond with this pitiful amount, and then boast of our liberality. This is not the kind of liberality we read of in II Corinthians viii. Nor is it the kind recommended to us by the apostle. Is there one in all our membership who could not in some way lay aside twenty-five cents every year for the cause of missions?

The trouble on this line is as in all other church finances—the many leave all the burden to be borne by the few. It is doubtful that all the money collected for the various causes in the church, leaving out the support of the ministry, will amount to one dollar per capita. Honesty with ourselves demands that we stop and consider these things. The $500,000 called for, for the cause of missions, is a small sum, and could be easily raised if every member would do his duty. In fact, we must come up to such figures, or cease our boasting. Consistency forbids. It is true that our Missionary Board has accomplished great things for the amount of money paid; but let no Southern Methodist boast of our missionary spirit so long as that debt hangs over us like a horrid nightmare. Let him read that lamentation of the Missionary Treasurer, in the June number of the Missionary Reporter, and then see what he thinks of our missionary zeal.

Crystal Springs, Mississippi.

Gleanings.

Wilkie Collins: "My own ideas cordially recognize any system of education, the direct tendency of which is to make us better Christians."

If, as Dr. Young tells us, "a Christian is the highest style of man," then the great novelist is to be commended for his cordial recognition of that system which develops that style of men.

Archdeacon Farrar: "If all the books in the world were in a blaze, the first twelve which I would snatch out of the flames would be the Bible, Imitation of Christ, Homer, Æschylus, Thucydides, Tacitus, Virgil, Marcus Aurelius, Dante, Shakespeare, Milton, Wordsworth."

What a judgment that is upon the literary folks of this book-making age!

Rev. E. Park, D. D.: "There is reason to fear that the churches of the present day will take more interest in the smilax and the calla lilies and the red roses which adorn the pulpit, than any discourse that comes from it on the extensive prevalence and intrinsic baseness of iniquity."

Some of the pulpits at Easter-time begin to look very much like the tombs in the Catholic cemeteries on All Saints' Day.

Bishop Key: "The widening out of my horizon the last year has brought many things into view not seen before, and many others 'seen through a glass darkly' are plain now and large. Among the latter is the church newspaper, its power and possibility. If these were rightly appreciated, both by press and people, how much grander the results!"

There is no comment to be made upon that sentence. It is said that in a dewdrop is stowed up energy enough to make a thunder-storm; but who can compute the "power and possibilities" of a newspaper consecrated to God and wielded by the Holy Ghost? [illegible] bilities are limited only by [illegible] tion.

Seashore Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: In your last issue, in the article headed as above and signed "S.," there are some things for which "S." is not responsible. All that portion of it beginning with, "The trustees have, etc.," and running down to the words, "Prayer meetings have been held with fine results," was written by you or some one else. The undersigned is not guilty of self-praise as the printed article would seem to indicate.

The Camp Meeting was moving on gloriously up to Thursday morning, with every promise of scores more of conversions. More than ninety preachers had come up to that date. The Chautauqua idea is receiving attention, and an interesting program will be arranged for 1888. S.

JULY 21, 1887.

Several persons have passed through the office, having left the camp ground after Bro "S.," and from them we learned that the meeting is generally regarded as a success, in spite of the predictions made that it would be a failure. Many conversions are reported, and Christians generally have been edified in the Lord. From what we could learn as to the preaching, it seems to have been above the average. The Chautauqua idea is gaining ground, as will appear from the following from the Times-Democrat, of Monday morning:

THE SEASHORE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC ASSEMBLY.

The Board of Trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground at its last meeting received and adopted the following report:

SEASHORE CAMP GROUNDS, July 21, 1887.

Wm. H. Foster, Esq., President, and the Board of Trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground—

BRETHREN: Permit me to present the following report unanimously adopted by the committee selected to plan an auxiliary Sunday-school, literary and scientific department of the work of the Seashore Camp Grounds.

For God's glory and in the interest of the souls of men we propose to further utilize the due facilities offered by the Seashore Camp Grounds by organizing an association to be called "The Seashore Sunday-school, Literary and Scientific Assembly."

This assembly is to meet on the Seashore Camp Grounds at a time designated by the Executive Committee of said assembly.

Three of the trustees of the Seashore Camp Grounds, including their president, the three presiding elders of the controlling districts, and one layman and minister from each of the Annual Conferences in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama, selected by the trustees of the Seashore Camp Grounds, shall form a Board of Directors of the assembly.

The object of this assembly is to dispense Christian knowledge, give literary and scientific instruction bearing on religious subjects, and especially to train Christian workers for the various departments of church work.

We desire to enlist intelligent, pious laymen and ministers, whenever available, to aid us in this worthy enterprise.

The Board of Directors shall elect their chairman, secretary and treasurer. They also shall elect six of their number for an Executive Committee. One of these must be one of the presiding elders of one of the controlling districts; the president of the Board of Trustees shall also be ex-officio a member of this committee.

The Executive Committee shall plan the work for each succeeding year. Their programme shall always be submitted to the Board of Trustees for their approval. T. S. WEST, Chairman,

D. L. MITCHELL, Secretary.

Attached to this report was a programme for this assembly's work at this place next year, which embraced two days for the Sunday-school cause, commencing on Thursday, after the close of the regular week of the camp meeting; Saturday and Sunday, missionary work; Monday, class meetings and normal training of leaders; Tuesday, temperance work; Wednesday, Woman's Christian Temperance Union Day; Thursday, Young Men's Christian Association Day. Friday will be devoted to lectures on literary and scientific subjects.

Each evening's lecture during the week of the assembly will bear specially upon the subject to which the day is devoted, and will be illustrated by choice sciopticon pictures, with lime lights, several lanterns having been placed at the disposal of the assembly.

The Board of Trustees will in a few days appoint the Board of Directors of the assembly, which will at once organize and elect its officers and Executive Committee. Each member of the latter committee will become chairman of a sub-committee having in charge some one of the special branches of the work.

If you want to have the best time going, through your probation, work in the light of your blessings instead of sitting down in their shadow.

Many People Refuse to Take Cod Liver Oil on account of its unpleasant taste. This difficulty has been overcome in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It being as palatable as milk, and the most valuable remedy known for the treatment of Consumption, Scrofula and Bronchitis, General Debility, Wasting Diseases of Children, Chronic Coughs and Colds, has caused physicians in all parts of the world to use it. Physicians report our little patients take it with pleasure. Try Scott's Emulsion and be convinced.

"Life and Labors of William H. Watkins, D. D.," will be sent to any address as a premium for two new subscribers accompanied by the cash, or for four renewals with cash.

Personals.

Bro. J. V. Penn, in charge at Jackson, La., in a private note, says that his people have contributed 74 cents per capita this year for foreign missions. That is pretty good, considering the fact that the year is just half gone!

Vanderbilt University has $150,000 worth of property invested for the education of young ministers. They get the tuition and rooms, free, and the board is remarkably cheap, and our church needs educated ministers. The inference from this is so plain, it need not be stated.

Zion's Herald, in a note on the union of the two Methodisms, says: "We can not read the indications of Providence as pointing to such a result for the present." That is a clear vision.

Have you seen the Missionary Reporter for July 2. It gives a succinct account of all our missions, and you ought to know something about them. Send fifty cents to the Publishing House and begin to learn something of the mission work of your church.

The venerable John G. Jones, of Mississippi, is to be congratulated that the first volume of his history of "Methodism in Mississippi" has been issued from our House in Nashville. This volume contains the history of Methodism in the Southwest from 1799 to 1817. Send to the Publishing House for it and learn something of the beginnings of your church.

Rev. J. A. Bowen has gone to Iuka with his motherless babe to spend a few weeks. Our bereaved brother has the sympathy and prayers of the whole church.

J. R. Wallace, of Utica, Miss., has presented the Union Church at that place with a beautiful bell. To express their gratitude, the people held a mass meeting and passed a set of resolutions of thanks.

Dr. R. N. Young, president of the Wesleyan Conference, in his address to the candidates for ordination at the Irish Conference, made the remark that "no gospel minister is never off duty." Would that we could all always remember that.

When you are enjoying anything, do you ask yourself the question, "Is it right in me to find enjoyment in this thing?" There is a standard of right, and it is better for us to bring our actions to it ourselves rather than let others do it for us.

Temperance.

The Atlanta Constitution has lately given to the world the results of eighteen months' prohibition in Atlanta, and the showing exceeds the most sanguine prophecies of the prohibitionists. The law is as well executed as any other law. The value of property in the city has increased $2,000,000, and taxes have not increased. Large appropriations have been made to public improvements. The number of banks has increased. Fifteen new house-furnishing stores have been started, and are doing well. The manufacturing interests have taken on new life. Real estate companies have seen their stock doubled in value. More laborers are buying lots than ever before. Rents are more promptly paid. Retail grocery men sell more goods and collect bills better. Public schools are better attended. A marked increase in the attendance upon the Sunday-schools. From 1,500 to 2,000 people have joined the various churches. The criminal docket, which formerly occupied two weeks, was closed out in two days. These are wonderful results. The Constitution says: "The bar-room has gone from Atlanta forever, and the people with remarkable unanimity say, Amen!"

What is the effect of this? By the census of 1880, there were 3,115 establishments engaged in the manufacture of liquors, upon a capital of $118,000,000, employing 33,689 laborers at a cost in wages of $15,000,000, producing liquors valued at $114,000,000. Add the 5,000 owners and those engaged in illicit distilling, and we will have 50,000 men employed, 40,000 of whom are foreigners. Of 80,000 registered bar-keepers, 72,000 are foreigners. Traverse the streets of Chicago and other American cities, and how rarely you will find an American name upon a saloon-keeper's sign! Few, very few, Americans, claiming to be respectable engage in the business.

The claim that the use of beer will diminish drunkenness and largely take the place of spirits is not borne out by parliamentary report in Belgium. This report says intemperance is spreading fearfully in the kingdom. Next to Bavaria, Belgium has the reputation of being the country where most beer is consumed, the amount per year being 240 liters, or over fifty-two gallons per head. It also comes next to Russia and Denmark in the consumption of spirits; the amount consumed of the latter being thirteen liters per head a year.

Help for Dr. Lambuth.

About two weeks ago Dr. Lambuth, in the ADVOCATE, made a special call for help upon the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana. Wishing to further the matter as speedily as possible, the editor sent out 310 postals to the preachers in charge in the patronizing Conferences, and to a few prominent laymen. He sent these postals to all the preachers whose postoffice address he could obtain from the mail list of the ADVOCATE. This is the card he sent out:

DEAR BRETHER: Read the editorial and Dr. Lambuth's letter in the ADVOCATE, of July 14. Wont you co-operate with us in carrying out our plan by bringing the matter directly before your people? God has a great blessing for us when we promptly meet the responsibility he lays upon us. "Men of Israel, help!"

Yours in the gospel,

C. W. CARTER.

Notice.

The secretaries of all the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will please send to me at Nashville, Tenn., the number of widows and orphans of deceased preachers who died in the traveling connection. Send the number and not the names. The interest on the Calvin Fund is now ready for distribution; but an equitable distribution can not be made without a knowledge of the number of claimants legally entitled to share in the proceeds of the bequest. All widows and orphans of deceased preachers who died in the traveling connection are legal heirs, and no others.

IMMENSE BARGAINS.—The great piano dealer, Philip Werlein, 135 Canal St., is now offering some of the greatest bargains in pianos and organs. This popular merchant means business, and he has put prices of pianos and organs down so low as to put them within the reach of all. You will be astonished to see what money can be saved by dealing at this popular house. Indeed, it is a source of pleasure to have dealings with such a house as that of Philip Werlein. Now, that the prices have been reduced, and terms offered are so convenient, every one will avail himself of the opportunity. Write to Mr. Werlein for catalogues and prices.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country, but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden suppers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing it, sickening fret, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most tellaine infant, by the timely use of B. A Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.

Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.

Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. H. SANDY, M. D.

MOTHER'S GIRL.

Sleeves to the dimpled elbow,
Fun in the sweet blue eyes,
To and fro upon errands
The little maiden flies.
Now she is washing dishes,
Now she is feeding the chicks,
Now she is playing with pussy,
Or teaching Rover tricks.

Wrapped in a big white apron,
Pinned in a checkered shawl,
Hanging clothes in the garden,
Oh, were she only tall!
Hushing the fretful baby,
Coaxing his hair to curl:
Stepping around so briskly,
Because she is mother's girl.

Hunting for eggs in the hay-mow,
Petting old Brindle's calf;
Riding Don to the pasture,
With many a ringing laugh.
Coming whene'er you call her,
Running wherever sent,
Mother's girl is a blessing,
And mother is well content.

Letter from Aunt Loretta.

My Dear Nieces and Nephews:

It has been "quite a spell," as grandma would say, since I wrote you a letter; but here I am once more. I have not been too busy all this time to read your letters. But let me tell you a secret: If you will try to write about something that no one else writes about, you need not tell the editor to forget there is a big "waste-basket" under the table. It will be the last thing he will think about if you will only try to get some bright ideas down on your paper. Suppose you drop all those questions that have been asked and answered so many times, and take up a new subject. The editor wants you to put on your thinking-caps and hunt out those words that contain all the vowels in alphabetical order, and compose sensible sentences containing all the letters of the alphabet. Who is going to win the laurel in this creditable race? "Oh, I can't," says some little Tom, Dick or Harry. "Oh, that's too hard," says Mollie, Nan and Maud. Now, then, if you "can't," and think all that work is "too hard," you had better go and let the editor put you in the waste-basket instead of your letters.

Let Aunt Loretta help you a little. Take your slate and write all the letters. Then begin to compose, using the letters. Try and see how many letters you can use in one word. Then think of some subject you would like to say something about and write a sentence. Then go over it and see how many letters you have used. Try again if you have failed. You will soon be rewarded for your pains. If you want to learn to write letters that will interest others, be original. Write your own thoughts; not try to write just like some other girl or boy writes.

Did any of you remember that "Cousin Cate" asked you to write what you knew about "Thanksgiving Day?" That would be an interesting subject. The editor has promised (I think) to make up a Thanksgiving number of the ADVOCATE, and all items would be of interest. It would be a credit to you to be wise on that subject. How many are making quilts for Thanksgiving Day? Those who can not carry out "Cousin Cate's" plan could at least join and make a quilt for the pastor's wife and give it to her as a Thanksgiving present. I am sure all of them would give many thanks for a good warm quilt. Ho! all ye little girls, go to work for this.

Did any of you ever think of the royal children of England. They do not have such easy times as some of you boys and girls do. The Prince of Wales' children rise at five o'clock, have a plain breakfast; then comes lessons and calisthenics;" then early dinner, more lessons and music and languages round up the day. When the Prince of Wales was told that his boy was neglecting his studies at the naval school, the Prince sent word that he was to be disgraced like any other student. And the royal girls are far more industrious than some of you are. Now, who is going to imitate these young scions of royalty, and then "be up and doing" with a heart for "real hard work." No girl or boy ever got up to the temple of fame without work—hard work. Who is going to climb the rugged path? Hold up your hands. That's right. You will win.

Comfort, Convenience and Safety. All visitors to Boston will do well to remember the famous United States Hotel, which covers these important items more completely than any house in the country. Cut this out and go that way.

At the Window.

Somehow everything went wrong with little Sue Clapp that morning. Perhaps she got out of bed the wrong way. I don't know.

"Dear me," said mamma, after breakfast, "if Sue isn't crying again, for nothing at all, too. I never saw her so cross."

And at last, out of all patience, she put Sue in a rocking-chair by the window, with a big sweet apple and a picture book.

"Now, don't get down till I tell you you may," said she; "and don't cry any more, dear?"

Sue pouted a good deal, but she ate her apple and looked the picture book through. Then she began to look out of the window.

There was a little boy coming across the road—a very short, chunky boy, who walked with a limp. She watched him. He came right up to the kitchen door and knocked:

"O mamma," cried Sue, "it—it's a boy, mamma!"

Mamma smiled, and went to the door.

"Good-morning," Sue heard the little boy say, very politely; "could I borrow a barrel to put some potatoes in?"

Then Sue knew who it was. It was a little Parker boy, and his father had taken the Irish place, and they borrowed everything. Mamma knew, too.

"Yes, I think you can have one," she said; and showed him where there were.

But, dear me! the barrel was a great deal bigger than the boy. He got out in front of the window, and Sue laughed and laughed to see him try to shoulder it.

But she couldn't help pitying him a little all the while, because it was so cold, and the wind blew so hard, and he didn't have any mittens on, and the barrel was so big.

Mamma pitied him, too, as she stood in the door and watched him.

"I am afraid the barrel is rather too large for you, isn't it?" she asked, kindly.

"Oh no, ma'am," he answered, cheerily. "I mean yes, ma'am, it's pretty large, but I think I can manage it, ma'am."

Wasn't that a funny thing for a boy to say—such a little boy? Sue thought it was.

"He's lame, too, and his jacket's got lots of holes in it," she said to herself, thoughtfully. I should think he'd be cross."

But he wasn't—not even when he had perched the barrel on his mites of shoulders for the third or fourth time, and a big gust of wind came along and swung him, barrel and all, round and round until it tipped him over.

He looked up at the window, and smiled and nodded, and tried again. And this time he carried the barrel off in triumph.

"Mamma?" asked Sue.

"Well, dear?"

"Can I have my patch-work? I guess I can sew it now. That's what I cried 'bout, you know, 'cause the thread was so knotty."

Mamma smiled wisely, and gave her the patch-work.

Pretty soon Sue spoke again:

"Next time he comes, can't I give him an apple?—two of 'em, mamma, 'cause he had such a real hard time with that barrel, you know."

"Three of them," said mamma, laughing. "He deserves them."—Youth's Companion.

The Five Sisters.

There were five fair sisters, and each had an aim—
Flora would fain be a fashionable dame;
Scholarly Susan's selection was books;
Coquettish Cora cared more for good looks;
Anna, ambitious, a-spired after wealth;
Sensible Sarah sought first for good health.

So she took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and grew healthy and blooming. Cora's beauty quickly faded; Susan's eyesight failed from over-study; Flora became nervous and fretful in striving after fashion, and a sickly family kept Anna's husband poor. But sensible Sarah grew daily more healthy, charming and intelligent, and she married rich.

If tempted not to pray, pray the more. If tempted to postpone prayer, pray at that very time. Most probably God has a blessing for you. Satan suspects he has, or he would not be so anxious to persuade you to put off prayer.

An Excellent Medicine.

"My wife and myself were in bad health for some fifteen years. I chanced to be looking over one of Simmons Liver Regulator Almanacs and saw A. H. Stevens' and Bishop Pierce's names to testimonials. I then obtained some of the Regulator, and can heartily recommend the Liver Regulator to my friends as an excellent medicine."

Trials in Home Life.

The other day I read an article on "Husband Lovers," which taught a good lesson to one-third of the married women; but how about the other two-thirds? Many a tried, heart-sick woman will read this piece, and with moist eyes look back to the time when her husband was a lover, and follow the years up carefully, trying to find where she is at fault that he is no longer one. Yes, to be sure, "the curls that he used to push back in order to kiss the white forehead" are brushed away, the bit of lace and bright ribbon has been put aside for a plain collar and pin which are not nearly so becoming. The pretty light dinner dress has given place to a plain dark one. The hands that arranged the graceful curls have several heads of curls to brush now. In order to have three or four children clean, and dressed for dinner and papa, mamma must put up with the easily arranged collar. Where there are babies to feed, food to prepare, etc., a bright dainty dinner dress would be incongruous. To be sure, she never stands now at the window with a bright face watching for him, and rarely plays his favorite airs, or sings the old love songs, because her songs must be lullabys; her fingers are tired and stiff with "making his home bright and attractive," and keeping his children presentable. Alas! she does not forget that 'tis "hard for the neatly dressed gentleman to caress an untidy woman," and the knowledge only makes her more unhappy, but he forgets that this woman from earliest morning has not had one moment to think of herself. His sweetheart was a beautiful, loving, light-hearted girl, with never a care to cloud the sunshine of her life; his wife is a prematurely old woman; tired brain, body, and soul, with few bright spots piercing the shadow. My friend, your women are the minority; unfortunately, mine are the majority. You speak of bringing back wandering hearts. Is it not strange that after a woman has sacrificed herself for her husband and children, after she had faded in his service, that he should want to wander? I do not believe there are many women who, through mere idleness, neglect their looks. Most women like to look pretty and attractive, and it is hard for them to see their beauty fading and their husband's admiration declining, and turn to duties unpleasant. You speak of the trials that the husband must endure; do they not vanish before the wife's ordeals? When the poor tired body has a rest, and the heart a little encouragement, she will gladly cultivate her mind.—Exchange.

WORK AS A MEDICINE.—You have nothing to do—how easily you yield to indisposition.

You have an engagement, you have an article to write, a dress to make, a field to till, a harvest to gather, a horse to groom, a store to open, an occupation of some sort or other whose call is peremptory and must be obeyed—what a stiffener of nerve and muscles an engagement is! How intuitely less prone one is to yield to an indisposition, a pain or a suggestion of idleness and ease!

Work is the best medicine.

Exercise is its right-hand man. Occupation is what mankind needs, and just as soon as we retire from life we may begin to prepare for death, for life is a quick imitator, and will retire from us, acting on the hint given, that we are weary of the burden and wish to shake it.

When the tongue puts itself at ease, it puts everything else under constraint.—Joseph Roux.

Hardhold's Great Work.

The statue of Liberty enlightening the world, which stands on Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York, is one of the most sublime artistic conceptions of modern times. The torch of the goddess lights the nations of the earth to peace, prosperity and progress, through Liberty. But "liberty" is an empty word to the thousands of poor women enslaved by physical ailments a hundredfold more tyrannical than any Nero. To such sufferers Dr. Pierce's, Favorite Prescription holds forth the promise of a speedy cure. It is a specific in all those derangements, irregularities and weaknesses which make life a burden to so many women. The only medicine sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. See guarantee printed on wrapper enclosing bottle.

MISCELLANEOUS.

You Carry

A whole medicine chest in your pocket [illegible] operate directly on the stomach and bowels, they indirectly affect every other organ of the body. When the stomach is out of order, the head is affected, digestion fails, the blood becomes impoverished, and you fall an easy victim to any prevalent disease. Miss M. E. Boyle, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., puts the whole truth in a nutshell, when she says: "I use no other medicine than Ayer's Pills. They are all that any one needs, and just splendid to save money in doctors' bills."

Here is an instance of

who lost his medicine chest, but, having at hand a bottle of Ayer's Pills, found himself fully equipped.—J. Arrison, M. D., of San José, Cal., writes:

"Some three years ago, by the merest accident, I was forced, so to speak, to prescribe Ayer's Cathartic Pills for several sick men among a party of engineers in the Sierra Nevada mountains, my medicine chest having been lost crossing a mountain torrent. I was surprised and delighted at the action of the Pills, so much so, indeed, that I was led to a further trial of them, as well as of your Cherry Pectoral and Sarsaparilla. I have nothing but praise to offer in their favor."

John W. Brown, M. D., of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I prescribe Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

T. E. Hastings, M. D., of Baltimore, Md., writes: "That Ayer's Pills do control and cure the complaints for which they are designed, is as conclusively proven to me as anything possibly can be. They are the best cathartic [illegible] out within the reach of the profession."

HANEY—I have been requested to write an obituary of my brother-in-law, HON. JOHN P. HANEY. It is but a poor tribute that I can offer in words to the memory of one so well known to multitudes for his moral excellence, consistent piety and gentlemanly deportment. If I should say I loved him I only put into words the deep feeling of a host of friends and relatives. Let love, then, be the tribute we bring to his grave. There can be no better; certainly none to the spirit of the men he lived among would be more acceptable. He was born in Washington parish, La., January 3, 1832, and died at his home, in East Feliciana parish, May 21, 1887. His father, Rev. John P. Haney, was one of the early itinerants of the Mississippi Conference, and his mother, of precious memory, was a daughter of Judge Thomas C. Warner, of Washington parish. He was early converted and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which he served faithfully in various capacities. He was twice married: first, to Miss Lou Lee, February 13, 1862, who died December 11, 1870, leaving three children; afterwards, to Miss Virginia Lee, in December 22, 1880, who survives. For many years he served as magistrate. In 1879 he was chosen to represent the parish in the Legislature of the State, and served a number of years. In his early manhood he graduated in the law college in New Orleans; but, finding his health insufficient, he adopted farming as his life occupation, in this he succeeded in so far as to make a comfortable support, to meet a liberal share of church expenses and to "aid a distressed worthy brother"

The best legacy he has left to the bereaved is the "precious ointment" of a good name, which has thrown out its sweet fragrance in the household, in private life, among his fellows, in the church which he loved, in the magistrate's office and among the law-makers of the State. So closes a busy life, well and usefully spent. THOMAS PRICE.

COOK—ELIZA COOK was born in Morgan county, Ga., November, 1811; professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in October, 1826; died at Lisbon, La., June 30, 1887. Her husband died about ten years ago. Mother Cook was one of the original eighteen that organized the society of Lisbon in 1849. This mother in Israel was tender, kind, timid and diffident, but true to her heavenly Master's service through a long life of varied trial and experience. The Christian hospitality of her house was for many years dispensed to the ministry and laity of the church. Just as she was dying the pastor approached her bedside. She lifted her hand and placed it in his. He asked: "Is all clear and right now?" Her intelligent and immediate response was the same as that of Bishop Asbury: "All is well—all is well." As we committed the body to the ground beside the sleeping dust of her husband, pronouncing, "Earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust," we could but realize the language of the divine One who has the "keys of death and hell," in all its force and potency: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

T. B. WHITE, PASTOR.

BRICE—Died, June 26, 1887, near Tallulah, Madison parish, La., ETHEL, daughter of Stephen L. and Mattie P. Brice, aged three years and four months. On that quiet Sabbath evening the pearly gates were left ajar to admit the happy spirit of as sweet a sunbeam as ever brightened a home, and made glad the hearts of parents.

Bereaved ones, your darling little Ethel from the glory land beckons you to a higher and holier life, to a purer and brighter home. M.

MULLENS—Died, in Fort Smith, Ark., June 10, 1887, little TOMMIE, infant daughter of D. D. and M. J. Mullens. She was born in Copiah county, Miss., July, 1886. After fifteen days' illness he was called to join the angels. Thus another lovely bud hath been plucked from the bowers of earth to blossom with eternal fragrance in the paradise of God.

MATTIE E. ROBERTSON.

GOODROE—SIMEON GOODROE died at his residence in Sabine parish, La., on May 10, 1887, in his sixty-second year. He was born in Wolfon county, Ga., and removed to Upton county, Ga., with his parents at the age of nine years, where he was raised and married. Miss Sarah Wells. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church in 1819; removed to this parish [illegible] a good character and has been an acceptable member of the church. Bro. Goodroe was a good man. He loved the church, was devoted to the preachers. He built a prophet's chamber which he always kept especially for the preachers. In him we sustain the loss of one more good friend on earth. With an eye of faith fixed on the cross, he encountered the last enemy and was enabled to shout, Victory! He leaves an aged wife and four children to join three children in the better world.

J. M. FRANKLIN.

NODOP—Whereas, God, in his mysterious providence, has removed from our Sabbath-school and our society one who has endeared herself greatly to officers, teachers and scholars; KATIE E. NODDP no longer goes in and out among us here; therefore, be it

Resolved, That, in silent sorrow, we try to resign ourselves to a heavenly Father's will, and to emulate the virtues and faithfulness of our departed friend and associate.

Resolved, That the members of her class wear a badge of mourning for one month.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the afflicted family and relations.

MARY M. GRIFFIN, for Com.

THOMASON—JOHNNY LEVI, son of A. M. and D. E. Thomason, was born December 15, 1883, in Pontotoc county, Miss., and departed this life on June 21, 1887, from their home in Monroe, La. Little Johnny was taken sick on June 8, and from that day until the time of his death suffered much. His parents are sorrow-stricken at the loss of their little son, but they rejoice in the assurance that he is now free from all suffering and safe in the arms of Jesus, and they hope to meet Johnny again in the blessed future. W. D.

Keen as a Surgeon's Knife.

On the Chicago Limited Express, one of those splendid trains that leave New York over two of the great trunk lines of this country and make the dash to the metropolis of the West with such remarkable speed, an elderly gentleman was, a few days ago, seized with a violent attack of asthma. He had been a sufferer for many years and his efforts to breathe were dreadful to witness. A physician was found on the train, but relief seemed impossible. Everything was done for the comfort of the passenger, but he speedily grew worse. His face assumed a livid hue, and it appeared that he had only a few minutes to live. Suddenly a lady in the car seized the porter by the arm, sent him flying to the range in the dining car for boiling water, while from a satchel she drew out one of Drs. Starkey and Palen's Compound Oxygen Inhalers. By the time the porter had returned with a salad-bowl filled with boiling water, the lady had the corks out of the bottle, the glass tubes lifted, and in less time than it requires to tell it, the inhaler was immersed in the heating liquid. A moment more and the ozone began to evolve and the inhaling tube was placed in the sufferer's mouth. He was so exhausted that he could only breathe the gas in a spasmodic manner, but at the end of a minute his inhalations became more lengthy and regular, and at the end of five minutes the wheezing ceased and he was able to rest easily. Of course the sufferer was greatly weakened, but he had no recurrence of the attack. The entire train rang with praises of Compound Oxygen during the balance of the journey.

Apropos of this case, J. B. Kenyon, a merchant of Bedford, Ohio, writes to Drs. Starkey & Palen, September 11, 1885:

"Your Compound Oxygen has worked wonders with me; has made a new man of me. I have not had an attack of asthma since using it, though I was in very bad shape when I began. I would not do without the 'Compound Oxygen' for ten times its price. On retiring at night I go to sleep at once, and never rested better in my life than I do now. Shall recommend it to all my friends."

A complete and interesting treatise on the cures effected by Compound Oxygen will be sent, postage prepaid, to any one curious to know its valuable properties. Address Drs. Starkey and Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The soul that can not entirely trust God, whether man be pleased or displeased, can never long be true to him; for, while you are eyeing man, you are losing sight of God and stabbing religion at the very heart.—Manton.

Orthodox Lives.

Dear reader, here is a clipping which we hope you will read over with the greatest carefulness:

"No man really believes any more than he practices. Faith is the most abused noun in the language and believe the most abused verb. Men say they believe in Christ who do not show the first quality of his temper. Women say they believe in love, who are exacting, selfish, vain, worldly, altogether unlovely. People are very orthodox in notions who are the greatest of heretics in their lives. The Jews never become atheists or infidels; but if you want to know what they really believed, read the twenty-third chapter of Matthew. In religion, only that is believed which is lived. There is no Christian faith unless it makes a man a Christian, and that not in the head, but in the heart. If you call yourself a believer and want to know whether you are justified in so doing, ask yourself this question: 'What kind of a man am I?' And remember, 'If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.' And this leads us to say that the Christian Church should be vastly more watchful of life than of opinions. Let a minister swerve a little from the creed of his church, or from the popular interpretation of it, and he is promptly disciplined. That is well. But he may be of more than questionable integrity in business transactions; he may be careless of the exact truth; he may be unkind in his family to the point of cruelty; and who thinks of tabling charges against him? The result is that the world considers the church more anxious about orthodoxy of views than orthodoxy of life, and men of plain common sense are thereby alienated. Let the church keep itself free from heresy in life."—Presbyterian Observer.

Now turn back, and read it with more carefulness; and you will see more in it than you did at first.

PESSIMISTIC INEFFICIENCY.—It is very interesting to observe that the people who do give themselves to charity or to work of public spirit—that is, who give time, thought, ingenuity, service, resource, companionship, as well as money—are always the people who are satisfied with the results achieved, and who look forward cheerfully and hopefully to the future, either of the next year or the next generation. On the other hand, the most gloomy people, and those most distrustful of the future—the people who, as a rule, think the world is going to the dogs—are the people who do nothing, in their own person, to hinder such a catastrophe. Such a man is willing to go to his club, and read the exposure made of a fraud in the School Committee or a malversation in the Board of Correction; and he will stand with his back to the fire, and lecture for a half-hour on the downfall of the republic. But he will take no pains at the next election to secure a better School Committee or a purer Board of Correction.—Rev. E. E. Hale, D. D.

The three R's brought Regret, Reproach and Remorse to a great political party in 1884. The three P's, when signifying Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, bring Peace to the mind, Preservation and Perfection of health to the body.

Grit is the grain of character. It may generally be described as heroism materialized, spirit and will thrust into heart, brain, and backbone, so as to form part of the physical substance of the man.—Whipple.

The "Life of the flesh is the blood thereof." Pure blood means healthy functional activity, and this bears with it, the certainty of quick restoration from sickness or accident. Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier gives pure rich blood, and vivifies and strengthens the whole body.

Never does a man betray his own character more vividly than in the manner of portraying another.—Richter.

THE blood must be pure, if the body would be in perfect condition. Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier, makes pure blood, and imparts the rich bloom of health and vigor to the whole body.

Afflictions are but the shadows of God's wings.—George Macdonald.

The common sidestake in dealing with Malaria is to treat symptoms. The poison may be in the system in large amount without chills and fever. The evidence of its presence may be disordered liver, or stomach, or both; with headache, backache, &c. To get rid of all the trouble at once, take a few doses of Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria. It cures all the symptoms by destroying the cause. Sold by druggists.

PASTORAL CONTENTMENT.—Nothing is more suppressive of whatever spiritual power may be in a pastor than an unsettled feeling with regard to his own appointed field of labor and surroundings. It is quite as important for him to be restful in his place as to be restful under his own personality. Certainly a pastor may aspire after a widening sphere and a growing influence. And certainly no pastor has even a right to be indifferent to the question of necessary support for his household. But for free and best use of his spiritual power, every pastor must carry about with him the feeling that for the time at least his Master has placed him where he is, and will take care of him and his where he is, till he distinctly calls him elsewhere. The tokens of a call from God to enter a field ought to be clear before it is entered, and the tokens of a call from God to leave a field ought to be equally clear before it is left. And during the period between settlement in a field upon distinct tokens and leaving of such field upon equally distinct tokens, the mind must be at rest in God for free and full exercise of spiritual power. A troubled mind is never at its best. The joy of his Lord must be the pastor's strength. It may become necessary to leave a pastorate, but it is never necessary till the Master calls. He will take care of his servants in their fields. It is a pastor's privilege to trust him without reserve. We must be content, each one, with his own personality and with his God-appointed place.—David Cole, D. D.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

Concerning the Turkish-Egyptian Convention, Sir James Ferguson said that no negotiations were proceeding, and it was unlikely that the suspended negotiations would be resumed.

The House of Commons went formally in a body to the House of Lords, on the nineteenth, where the royal assent was given to the Irish Crimes Act Amendment Bill; and it was made the law of the realm.

At the meeting of the National League, held in Dublin, July 13, Lord Mayor Sullivan, who presided, said that the whole league was prepared to stand its ground, defy the Coercion Act, and take the consequences. Mr. Grihey declared that means to nullify the Coercion Act were ample, and the Nationalists would treat the act with supreme contempt.

Emperor William has gone to Gastein.

Latest reports from the interior of Africa, by traders, show that Emin Bey was in good health in March, and was projecting an expedition to further explore the Kakibbi river, an immense stream which he discovered in September, rising in the Usongara Mountains, and flowing into the southern part of Lake Victoria Nyanza. He proposes that this, his third expedition, should occupy three months, though he may await the Stanley expedition at Usongara.

It is reported from Russian sources that the Bulgarian government has arrested M. Radoslavoff, Premier and Minister of the Interior in the Cabinet just suspended. The arrest is said to have been made on a charge of treason. The new minister, it is reported, will not at present venture to enter Sofia. The ministers are said to be afraid of the opposition of the new government. It is also reported that the troops intend to proclaim the independence of Bulgaria, and Prince Alexander of Battenburg as king.

La France states that members of the Party of the Right, after the Schnaebele incident, proposed to Gen. Boulanger that he head a monarchist coup d'etat. He responded: "If I ever take part in a coup d'etat, it will be against the monarchists and to maintain the republic."

A dispatch from St. Thomas, West Africa, says the West African Company has received a report that Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, has been shot dead by natives with whom his expedition was fighting in order to obtain supplies. The report is generally discredited throughout Europe.

It has been decided to proclaim under the Crimes Act all counties except Antrim.

Advices received at Constantinople indicate that the Bulgarians are about to proclaim their independence.

A protest against the Irish Crimes Act Amendment Bill (the coercion bill) has been issued over the signatures of the Earl of Granville and twenty-eight liberal peers, including the Earl of Rosebery, the Marquis of Ripon, the Earl of Kimberly and Earl Spencer. The protest denounces the Act as a source of lasting irritation and hatred and mistrust of the law, and declares that the measure deprives Irishmen of individual rights, and creates and stimulates the growth of secret societies.

The Pacific Mail steamer "City of Rio de Janeiro," bringing Hong Kong news of July 1, and Yokohama news of July 9, arrived at San Francisco, July 25, and reports that in the loss of the steamer "Sir John Lawrence," in the Bay of Bengal, 800 lives were lost, mainly pilgrims of the best families of Bengal.

DOMESTIC.

Hon. R. M. T. Hunter, of Virginia, died at his home, Fount Hill, on the nineteenth.

The Secretary of State has received, through the German Minister at Washington, from the Emperor of Germany a check for $1,000 and two handsome gold watches, embellished with the likeness and monogram of the Emperor, with a request that the money be equally divided among the families of the five members of the life-saving crew at Dam Neck Mill Station, Va., who lost their lives in attempting to rescue the crew of the German ship "Elizabeth," on January 8, last, and that the watches be presented to Frank Tedford and James E. Ethridge, the only survivors of the live-saving crew. The money and watches have been turned over to General Superintendent Kimball for distribution.

The bill taxing wine-rooms $10,000 passed the Georgia House of Representatives by the requisite majority. It is thought that the Senate will pass it also.

Major W. A. Freret, of New Orleans, has been appointed supervising architect of the Treasury Department.

Thomas Edward Powell, of Cleveland, was nominated by the Democratic Nominating Convention, which met at Cleveland, on the twenty-first, for governor of Ohio.

A party of laborers on the Erie railroad, near Hohokus, N. Y., was run down by a belated express train, and twelve men horribly mangled; death was instantaneous. It seems that the foreman failed to give notice of the approaching train, and, as they were at work in a sharp curve, the trainmen could not see them until they were in the midst of them.

The Mississippi River Commissions' allotment has been approved by the Secretary of War.

The Chamber of Commerce and other institutions of Minneapolis have invited President Cleveland to extend his Western trip to that city.

Now that a jury has been secured in the Chicago boodle cases the trial is progressing rapidly. The opening argument closed, and the testimony began July 22.

The Interstate Commission has rendered a decision in regard to the sale of tickets to commercial travelers and the general public, and it places commercial travelers on the same footing as other passengers, and the roads are forbidden to discriminate in the rate to be charged.

Books and Periodicals.

BOOKS.

METHODS OF CHURCH WORK. By Rev. Sylvanus Hall. Funk & Wagnalls, publishers, 18, 20 Astor Place, New York.

This is the most comprehensive and practical work treating on this subject that has appeared. It covers the whole ground, and covers it wisely and effectively.

SARATOGA CHIPS AND CARLSBAD WAFERS. By Nathan Sheppard. 12mo. paper. Price, fifty cents. Funk & Wagnalls, publishers.

This unique book is a quaint, crisp and humorous description of the pursuit of happiness and health at the two great mineral water resorts of America and Europe. It is pictured from real life. The sketch is graphic and realistic to the first degree.

ASCHAM AND ARNOLD. Chautauqua Library. Garnet Series. 16mo.; 252 pp. Price, seventy-five cents. Boston Chautauqua Press, 117 Franklin street.

In this volume of the Garnet Series is given a Memoir of Roger Ascham, by Dr. Samuel Johnson, with some choice extracts from his greatest work, "The Schoolmaster." Also a Memoir of Thomas Arnold, with special reference to his life and work as a teacher.

HARRY THORNTON: THE STORY OF A GEORGIA BOY. By Rev. G. G. Smith, of North Georgia Conference. Published at our Publishing House at Nashville, whence it may be procured; also from the author at Macon, Ga. Price, fifty cents.

We have read Bro. Smith's little book with great pleasure. It is not only a fascinating story for boys, but it is one of the best stories for the boys' mothers we have seen in a long time. We commend it heartily to our "little cousins" and their parents and to all our Sunday-schools.

EDUCATIONAL.

Mansfield Female College,
1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 14, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Wells, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. D. F. Hinkle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and their wives, under families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, stringed or vocal, and art lessons, extra. Use of piano, per month, 50 cents. Tuition in French, ten dollars per term. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. The expense for the year for board, tuition, and a single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term is made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own towels, sheets and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this Church receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 288 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

BETTER THAN GOLD.

BY FATHER RYAN.

Better than grandeur, better than gold,
Than rank and titles a thousand-fold,
Is a healthy body and mind at ease,
And simple pleasures that always please.
A heart that can feel for another's woe,
With sympathies large enough to enfold
All men as brothers, is better than gold.

Better than gold is a conscience clear,
Though toiling for bread in an humble sphere.
Doubly blest with content and health,
Untried by the lusts and cares of wealth,
Lowly living and lofty thought
Adorn and ennoble a poor man's cot;
For mind and morals in nature's plan
Are the genuine tests of a gentleman.

Better than gold is a thinking mind,
That in the realm of books can find
A treasure surpassing Australian ore,
And live with the great and good of yore:
The sage's lore and poet's lay,
The glories of empires passed away,
The world's great dream will thus unfold,
And yield a pleasure better than gold.

Selections.

Here is a case from the New York Evangelist which tells a story that will give every preacher a clew to a sermon on "Education in the Art of Giving:"

A prominent man of wealth in this city, when solicited by a friend of like financial standing to contribute toward the furtherance of a worthy Christian object, frankly replied: "I have the money, and can easily spare it, and I also know that I ought to be giving largely to objects such as this. But the fact is, that I have never been educated to giving, and find it a difficult, almost impossible thing, actually to take my money in hand, and dispose of it in such ways. In a word, I do not know how to give, and my inveterate habit is, as in this instance, to decline."

In regard to the restless anxiety so patent everywhere in our church work, and the eagerness to make a display of its results to the world, it may be well to ponder these words which lately fell from the lips of President Young, of the Wesleyan Conference:

The statistics of evangelistic enterprise are of little value in determining its actual results. A census of the new Christian Society taken under the shadow of the Cross would have stamped the ministry of Jesus as a failure. Yet among the men who followed him afar off there were the germs of a power which in less than a century was to turn "the world upside down." And so true is it that our function is to work and wait—not embarrassing ourselves with a restless anxiety as to the issues of our labor—that if it should seem to us that up to this hour our evangelistic enterprise has not succeeded in rescuing one soul from the sway of superstition, though we might justly challenge the wisdom of our methods and arraign the purity of our motives, though we might humble ourselves before God and ask him with bitter tears to discover to us the secret sources of our failure, it would be our duty—and I trust, too, that we should dare to accept it as such—to maintain resolutely the mission on which we have entered; to relax no energy and to spare no sacrifice, in the calm assurance that whatever the aspects of our labor may be, it is not and can not be "in vain in the Lord."

We know a brother, whom we have often heard preach, and we have never seen him look his congregation in the face. Of this curious habit a writer in the New York Christian Advocate has this to say:

On Sunday morning we attended church. The preacher made a fine appearance, was energetic, forcible, and instructive. But he turned his jet-black eyes upward, something like the cherubs in Raphael's celebrated picture of the Madonna, with this difference: instead of fixing them on the supposed Virgin, he turned them on the farther corner of the ceiling, and through the most of his discourse kept them there. The practice of withholding the eyes from the audience is by no means confined to manuscript preachers. The memoriter preacher is quite as likely to turn his eye inward and read his sermon from his brain; and there are extemporaneous speakers or preachers without notes who look off into vacancy and deliver introspective monologues, as if the speaker were the only person present.

Joseph Cook seems to be a strong believer in missions. In a recent speech at Mr. Moody's Bible meeting, in Northfield, Mass., among other good things he said this:
